JOHN OXENBRIDGE, A. M. an eccentric divine of the seventeenth century, was born 30 Jan. 1608, at Daventry, where his father, Daniel Oxenbridge, was then settled as a physician, but afterwards removed to London. In 1623 he entered commoner of Lincoln college Oxford, but removed to Magdalen hall, where he became tutor, but was deprived of his tutorship in 1634, for imposing on his pupils unauthorized articles and statutes. He had commenced his public ministry in 1632, and being now excluded from, or dissatisfied with, the church of England, he made two successive voyages to the island of Bermudas, where he continued to preach till 1641, when, encouraged by the change of public affairs, he returned to his native country, and obtained a fellowship at Eton college, which he retained till the restoration. On his deprivation he removed to Berwick on Tweed, whence he was ejected by the act of uniformity in 1662. In 1664 he occurs as pastor of Beverley in Yorkshire, but soon after undertook a kind of missionary voyage to Surinam, from whence he sailed in 1667 to the island of Barbadoes. In 1669 he settled in New England, and succeeded Mr. Davenport in the pastorship of the first church formed at Boston, at which place he died suddenly, Dec. 28, 1674, of an apoplectic seizure towards the close of a sermon which he was preaching at the Boston lecture. It was peculiarly the fate of the divines of that eventful period to be reviled by one class of writers, and eulogised by another. Wood, with more than his usual acrimony, says, "This person was composed of a strange hodg-podg of opinions not easily to be described, was of a roving and "rambling head, spent much, and I think died but in a mean condition. And tho' he was a great pretender to "saintship, and had vowed an eternal love to his wife beforementioned (Jane Butler), who died 22 Apr. 1655, yet "before he had remained a widower an year, he married a religious virgin named Frances, the only daughter of "Hezekiah Woodward, the schismatical vicar of Bray near Windsor, who dying also in the first year of her "marriage (in childbed I think) aged 25 years, he took soon after, as I have been told, a third wife, according to "the fleshly custom of the saints of that time." Dr. Mather, on the contrary, in his History of New England, speaking of his works, adds, "The piety which breathed in these composures was but what he maintained in his "daily walk." And the extracts given by the doctor from his diary are said by Palmer to "discover a very pious, "devout, and humble spirit."

He published "A double Watchword; or, the Duty of Watching, and Watching to Duty; both echoed from "Revelations 16. v. 5. and Jeremiah 50. v. 4, 5." Lond. 1661. 8vo. "A proposition for propagating the "Gospel by Christian Colonies in the Continent of Guiana; being gleanings of a larger discourse, the MS. of "which is yet preserved in New England." Lond. 4to. A sermon at the anniversary election of Governor, &c. in New England. A sermon on earnestly seeking God.

JOHN SMITH, the celebrated mezzotinto engraver, was son of John Smith, gent. who three times served the office of bailiff of this borough. He was born here in 1652, and at a proper age was apprenticed to Tillet the painter, of Moorfields, London. On the expiration of his apprenticeship he engaged Becket to teach him the secret of engraving in the mezzotinto style, and subsequently applied to Vander Vaart for further improvement. Thus initiated in the art, sir Godfrey Kneller received him into his house, and employed him in engraving his portraits. The celebrated series of the Kit Kat Club by sir Godfrey were, however, mezzotintoed by the younger Faber, after Smith had retired from the profession. As a mezzotinto engraver, Smith was universally allowed to stand unrivalled, and is characterized by Walpole as "a genius of singular merit in his way,"..."who united "softness with strength, and finishing with freedom." He confined himself principally, but not exclusively, to portraits: his best miscellaneous subjects are, the loves of the gods, from Titian, at Blenheim, in ten plates; Venus and Cupid on a couch, after Luca Jordana; and a holy family with angels, after Carlo Maratti. He sold his prints separately at one shilling each, but reserved about six of the finest impressions, which he disposed of for very high prices. A complete set of his proofs, in two large volumes, for which he asked £50, came into the possession of Mr. Spencer, the miniature painter in Great Marlborough-street, and has since been dispersed. His productions still maintain their reputation; and from their number, as well as excellence, occupy a conspicuous place in the portfolios of collectors. By the industrious exercise of his own talents, and the sale of prints from plates which he bought of other artists, aided by habits of frugality approaching to penuriousness, he was enabled to purchase the manor house, with certain lands in Upper Boddington, and to amass a fortune of £20,000, which he divided between his son and daughter. He died 17 Jan. 1742-3, at the very advanced age of 90 years, and was buried in St. Peter's church, Northampton, where a marble tablet is placed to his memory. There is a print of him, in a fur cap and morning gown, holding another portrait of him in a wig, engraved by himself in 1716 from a painting by sir Godfrey Kneller.

CHARLES LUCAS, A.M. son of William Lucas, gent. of Guilsborough, and afterwards of Daventry, was born here in 1769. He was educated at Harrow, from whence he entered a student of Oriel college Oxford, in 1786, but took his degrees of bachelor and master from Exeter college. He was ordained in 1792, and soon after took the curacy of Avebury in Wiltshire, but is now curate of Devizes in that county. In 1803 he married the daughter of the rev. H Williams, by whom he has a large family. He has published, A Descriptive account in blank verse of the old Serpentine Temple of the Druids at Avebury in North Wilts. Marlborough, 1795. 8vo. BOROUGH HILL,

The BENAVENTA of the Britons, and ISANNAVARIA of the Romans, is in the parish of Daventry, and about half a mile south east from the town. Its present appellation is evidently derived from the saxon Buph, an earth-work or inclosure, in allusion to the extensive military intrenchments—the largest perhaps in the kingdom; but there is presumptive evidence, approaching to certainty, of its having been a primitive settlement of our aboriginal ancestors, continuing down to the roman invasion under the name of BENAVENTA, which admits of a peculiarly appropriate etymology—Ben or Pen, a british term for the head or summit of a hill; and Went or Gwent, a city or chief town, latinised by the romans into Venta, as Venta Belgarum [Winchester], Venta Icenorum [Castor near Norwich], &c. Its lofty eminence, abounding in springs of remarkable purity, and fortified with a ditch and rampart, perfectly assimilates with the account given by Cæsar and other early historians of the towns in Britain, and corroborated by the existing remains on the Wiltshire downs discovered and described by sir R. C. Hoare in his interesting ancient history of that district. As civilization advanced, the Britons deserted their mountainous residences, or reserved them for retreat in danger, and descended into the sheltered vallies; and it is not an improbable supposition, that in the present instance Daventre was their second position, especially as the final syllable tre is british for town; and the prefix of the first and the termination of the second name, would designate the upper and the lower town.

The celtic tribe of the Iceni, stretching along the eastern coast from the banks of the Stour in Essex to the Humber in Yorkshire, was divided into two clans, the northern called Iceni Coritani, and the southern Iceni Cenomanni, divided, or nearly so, by the river Nen. Of the former tribe Beneventa was the frontier city, covering its territories to the west, bordering on the Dobuni of Oxfordshire, and the Wiccii Ceangi, or foresters of Warwickshire.

In the year of the Christian era 43, the emperor Claudius sent an hostile expedition into Britain under the command of Aulus Plautius, who, though spiritedly opposed, is said to have advanced as far as Lactodorum [Towcester], and formed an alliance with the Iceni before his recall in the year 47. Publius Ostorius Scapula, his successor, did not arrive in Britain till the year 50, and in the interim the romans had been greatly annoyed by the predatory incursions of the enemy. Ostorius promptly adopted the most decisive measures; he required all the natives whom he suspected, whether allies or foes, to yield up their arms; and under the pretext of checking future inroads, he began to construct a chain of forts across the country, from the Lincolnshire marshes, along the banks of the Nen, to the Warwickshire Avon, and thence to the Severn. The Iceni no sooner perceived that the policy of their new friends might eventually be turned to their own destruction, by thus running a line of demarcation between their clans, and cutting off the communication between the northern and southern nations, through this intersection of the Watling street and other great leading trackways, than they coalesced with the neighbouring tribes, and assembling their forces to break the Roman unfinished lines, encamped, according to Tacitus, within a lofty entrenchment inaccessible to cavalry. This post I have the authority of a most judicious modern antiquary[y] for placing at Borough hill [Benaventa]; Ostorius having probably reached this point, after completing the forts on the Nen—still remaining—at Stanground and Water Newton in Huntingdonshire, and at Cotterstock, at Wadenhoe, at Woodford, at Cotton near Ringstead, at Irchester, and at Clifford Hill in this county. The Roman general dismounted his cavalry, and attacking the confederated natives in their intrenched positions, by the superior skill of his troops completely routed and dispersed them. He subsequently conducted his victorious arms against Caractacus, the renowned leader of the Silures, whom having discomfited and sent prisoner to Rome, he resumed his military operations in the vicinity, and died in the year 52. His place of burial is not recorded, but has been assigned by Bridges to a tumulus in West Haddon field called Oster hill[x].

On the submission of the Iceni, the Romans adopted Benaventa for one of their stations; converting the northern point of the hill towards the Watling street into a Castra Æstiva or summer camp, and changing the name of the town to Isannavaria, and its site to the Burnt Walls in the valley between the southern extremity of this hill, and the hill on which till lately stood Daventry wood. The field called the Burnt Walls adjoins the north side of the Chester turnpike road, and contains about six acres, "where, as tradition goes, stood a large "House or a Castle of John of Gaunt[a];" but this supposition is negatived by direct evidence of the buildings, whatever they were, having disappeared a century before he flourished, and how much earlier it is impossible to tell: for in 38 Hen. 3 (1253) the cultivated ground or culture "ad Brende Walles," occurs in an agreement between Robert Fitz Walter and the prior and convent of Daventre[b];" and in 21 Edw. 1 (1292), John, son and heir of sir Philip de Daventre, quit-claimed all right of common pasture in the culture "juxt' le Brendewalles," according to the concord made with Robert Fitz Walter, formerly lord of Daventre[c]." At the west end is part of a foss terminating abruptly in the field beyond, and the whole area is marked by great inequalities. "Many "Loads of Stone of ruined Walls and Foundations have been digged up[x]" here, but it having been used before the inclosure as a kind of open quarry, further research would be fruitless. The station seems to have extended to the opposite side of the road, where Roman bricks and tiles—the certain indicia of Roman habitation—have been turned up. On grubbing the wood in 1816 a double ditch was disclosed, within which, just below the surface, were the foundation walls, varying from four to five feet in thickness, of a rectangular building, forty yards long, and intersected with three cross walls; but my informant states that no entrance appeared, and the entire ground plan was not followed out.

The road to this station from the north diverged, I apprehend, from the Watling street opposite Norton, and followed the line of Borough hill to "the Banks in Daintrey Park [which] resemble those of Ponds and Canals[d]," and which Morton "supposed to have been Ponds belonging to Burntwolls[d]." The southern approach, probably, quitted the Watling street at Wedon, and pursued the course of the present turnpike road. The route of the eighteenth Iter of Richard of Cirencester from this station, through Ælia Castra [Alcester near Bicester] I strongly suspect passed between what is evidently a long barrow, and a small grove of firs at the east end of Daventry wood hill, leaving Everdon to the left on its way to Preston Capes, out of which village I have had the satisfaction of tracing it in the direction of the Portway to Woodford.

The reason of the new or double designation of the town—for the old appellation was not altogether discarded—it is in vain now to inquire; the case, however, is not without a parallel, and the identity of the two places, Benaventa and Isannavaria, is unquestionable, though the locality has successively exercised the ingenuity of every commentator on the two only guides to the Roman geography of Britain—Antoninus and Richard of Cirencester.

The simplest and clearest view of the grounds of controversy will be obtained by placing in juxta position this station with its connecting stages as it occurs in the different iters, reversing the sixth iter of Antoninus, and the first of Richard, in order that they may all go in the same direction.

Antoninus Iter 2.	M	Antoninus Iter 6.	M	Antoninus Iter 8.	M	Richard Iter 1.	M	Richard Iter 18.	M

It should be borne in mind that the second iter of Antoninus passes from the Picts Wall to Deva [Chester], and thence along the line of the Watling street through Londinum [London] to the Kentish coast; the sixth, from London by the Watling street to Venonis [High Cross in Leicestershire], and thence by Ratæ [Leicester] to Lindo [Lincoln]; the eighth, from Eboracо [York] entering the Watling street at Venonis, and continuing to Londinum [London]. The first iter of Richard pursues nearly the same route as the second of Antoninus, but in an inverted order; and the eighteenth, which has no counterpart in Antoninus, runs from Eboracо [York] through the middle of the kingdom to Clausentum [Bittern near Southampton], entering the Watling street at Venonis and quitting it at Isannavaria.

Leland and Fulk, in obvious violation of the course of the country, placed Isannavaria or Benaventa at Northampton[e]. Talbot, the earliest professed commentator on Antoninus, by collecting the continental as well as English copies, furnishes no less than twelve different readings of this station, Bennavenna, Bennaventa, Banavennam, Pennavennam, Isaunavatia, Isannavatia, Isanna Vantia, Isanna Vatia, Isannavaria, Bannavento, Bennavento, and Pennavennom[f]. He endeavours to reconcile the discordant distances in the three iters, but still considers Benaventa and Isannavaria to be the same station, and assigns it to Wedon[g]; in which opinion he is followed by Camden, who says, "Surely I should wrong the truth, if I should not thinke (albeit I have thought "otherwise) that Wedon is the very station that Antonine the Emperor nameth BANNAVENNA, BENNAVENNA, "BENNAVENTA, and once corruptly ISANNAVENTA: notwithstanding there now remains no expresse tokens of "that name, considering how Time changeth all, both names and things. For the distance from the next stations "and baiting Townes which were in ancient times, answereth just: and in the very name of BANNAVENNA, the "name of the river Aufon, the head whereof is neere unto it in some sort doth plainly discover itselfe. Likewise, "the high Portway or Roman street goeth directly from hence Northward with a bridge or causey oft broken and "worne out[h]." He was however originally "easily induced to guesse" Northampton, but modestly observes, "If my conjecture missed the trueth, the confession of my errour may save it[i]." Gough, in his edition of, and additions to, Camden, quotes the sentiments of other writers, but gives no specific opinion of his own. Burton, in his commentary, recites and implicitly follows Camden's adoption of Wedon[k]. Dr. Gale prefers Castle Dykes, an intrenchment about a mile south in the parish of Farthingston, and reads its name Pen Avon[l]. Morton says, "Bennavenna Mr. Camden has placed at Wedon in the street; in which he cannot be much mistaken. "Bennavenna or Isannavatia is, according to the Itinerary, 12 Miles from Lactorodum, on one side of it; and as "many from Tripontium on the other. And Wedon, according to the best Maps, is 11 Miles from Stratford, that is "Lactorodum; and at or very near the same distance from Lilburn, or rather from Dow Bridge, which some call "Lilburn-Bridge, the ancient and true Tripontium; which 11 Miles agree as exactly with the Distances set down "in the Itinerary as can well be desired; the Miles there used being as short, or shorter than the shortest used "this Day in Italy. Tis true, there are no Roman Antiquities to be met with at Wedon: but this does not hinder "its having been a Roman station; for as there are abundance of Places with Roman Antiquities, whose ancient "Names are bury'd in Oblivion: so also are there a considerable number of Stations, particularly in the West of "England, where there are not the least Vestigia of Antiquities.....Nor are we so confined by the Distances from "Lactorodum and Tripontium, but that Bennavenna may be set at Daventry[m]." The measurement alluded to was by computed miles; for Wedon is eight statute miles from Towcester, and fifteen from Old Stratford. Whalley, the editor of Bridges, notices this station under Wedon, but merely echoes Morton[n]. According to Dr. Stukeley, in his first volume, "Weedon in the Street is beyond dispute Benavona, as surely it ought to be wrote, being situate "on the head of the Aufona, running to Northavonton or Northampton[o]:" and yet in his second volume, without adverting to, or adducing any reason for his retractation, when commenting on Richard of Cirencester, he transfers it to Towcester[p], and, unconscious of the glaring inconsistency, adds, "We learn [from him] to correct many "words in our geography which before were not truly wrote: for instance, Bannavenna, Towcester, sometimes "Benavona, Bennaventa, which words have no meaning, is really Isannavaria, ill placed at Weedon: or rather "Isantavaria, which words are easily deduced from the British[q]."

Baxter, in his Glossarium, is the first who assigned this station to Daventry; but he tortured its Roman name to Dannavantria, which he rendered Dan avon tre—the town within, or near the river—and into which, he contended, all the various corrupt readings of Bannavantum, Bennaventa, Bennavenna, Isannavaria, and Isannavantia, in the Antonine MSS. might be resolved, Is being often mistaken or written for B.[r]"

Horsley rejects the claim of Wedon, because it exceeds the itinerary distance of 17 miles from Venonæ; and remarks, that if Stukeley's proposed reading of Benavona be admitted, "it would almost induce me to seek for this "place where Watling Street crosses the Avon, and to suppose that Bensford retains part of the name Benavona, rather "than of Venonæ. If we suppose that in the XVII set over against Bennavenna, the odd VII have been by mistake "borrowed from some neighbouring number, and that it should be only X; this would both be somewhat of a balance "for the surplus we have before, and make the 'distance between Venonæ and the river Avon to answer exactly to the "distance between it and Bennavenna in the Itinerary. But in the eighth iter we have the distance of XVIII miles "between Venonæ and Bannaventum, and I believe Bannavantum in the eighth iter to be the same with Bennavenna in "this; and the sixth iter, where a small excursion is made to Tripontium, the distance between Isanavatia (which I still "believe to be the same station) and Venonæ is XXI. This is a strong confirmation that the number is pretty right in "this iter, and that the true distance between Bennavenna and Venonæ is seventeen or eighteen miles in the Itinerary. "And the reason why there is no station just where Watling street crosses the Avon, might well be the neighbourhood "of Tripontium, situated on the same river[s]." He then hesitates between Daventry and Legers Ashby; but in the preface, after expressing his obligations to Mr. Eayre (of Kettering) for an accurate draught of that part of Northamptonshire through which the Watling street passes, he thus resumes the subject: "Daventry is exactly eighteen "miles distant from High Cross, and so seventeen from Cleycester, according to the scale which Mr. Eayre has annexed "to his draught. In this second iter the distance between Venonæ and Bennavenna is seventeen miles; in the eighth "iter, eighteen. I suppose the exact distance has either been between the two measures, or possibly the short "diverticulum from the military way is taken into the computation in the latter number, and not in the former. "However, the exactly correspondent distance in the Itinerary has inclined me to declare in favour of the neighbourhood of Daventry, in preference to Weedon, for the station of Bennavenna. Legers-Ashby is wrong laid down "in Camden's map, and, as Mr. Eayre informs me, has nothing of Roman antiquity about it, and therefore must be "thrown quite out of the question. But between Daventry and Watling street is Burrow-hill camp, and near it a "Roman work called Burnt walls, containing about six acres, according to the computation of the same gentleman. 'This is large enough for a common station, and Burrow-hill might be the exploratory or summer encampment. "Mr. Eayre's account of Burrow-hill is, that it has a triple ditch, is the largest of all the Roman camps in that part "of the country, being a mile long, and half a mile broad, and has a lofty situation, with a vast prospect into the "neighbouring country. He adds, that there are one and twenty of the usual tumuli in it. This last particular "seems rather to argue against its having continued to be a Roman encampment[t]."

Pennant, in his tour from Chester to London, conjectures Borough hill to have been a strong hold of the Coritani, and called by them Ben-Afon, or the head over the river, one of the streams which form the Nen passing beneath; and adds: "The Romans, as was usual with them, latinized the British name, and formed from it their Bennenna; "which I beg leave to place here, rather than at Wedon, a place destitute of all classical traces[u]."

The rev. Mr. Reynolds, rector of Little Bowden in this county, in his ingenious commentary on Antoninus, published in 1799, justly remarks, "When it is recollected how much the decisions of Camden are influenced by the "comparison of the ancient and modern names of these towns, and how much of BENAVENTA is retained in DAVENTRY, it must seem extraordinary, that he could give the preference to the village of Weedon, five [four] miles from "it. But it may be the distance of this town from the road might appear to him an insurmountable objection." He observes, "The name is supposed to be of British original, and consequently descriptive of some circumstance "relative to the situation of the town to which it belongs. The map of Northamptonshire shews, that one of the "sources of the river Nen has its rise close by Daventry. And this river has been thought by most writers to "have been called in the ancient times Aven or Avon. Pen Aven means the Head of Avon, and therefore suits "exactly the site of this town. Stukeley applies that argument to Weedon, but it is certainly much more strictly "applicable to Daventry than Weedon[x]." After alluding to Roman coins having been found here, the vicinity of Borough hill, and Burnt Walls (the description of which is copied from Bridges), he concludes, "Possibly "Burnt Walls might be a Roman station." Adverting to this point again, under the sixth iter, he observes, "This town is the most remarkable of any for the varieties of its names. In the second Iter it is called "Bennavenna, and here by another name (Isannavatia), so intirely different, that it might be supposed to mean a "different town, if the numbers did not establish its identity. In the second Iter it is called Benavenna, in the eighth "Bannavantum, and in both those instances in some copies Benaventa. It is here denominated Isannavatia, and "in some copies Isannavantia, Isanantia, and Isannavenna. The varieties of these two names may be ascribed "to copyists, but the names themselves cannot well have had this origin. They both are thought to be British "names, and may have been used indifferently, being equally expressive of the situation of this town. Benaventa "has been already supposed to mean, that this town lies at the head of the Aven, or Nen. Is, Mr. Whitaker "interprets, below, or implying the situation of a place south of another, or some particular object, as 'Isurium' "is compounded of Is and Ure, and imports that Aldborough lies below, or to the south of the Ure. In this " place therefore Isannavenna may shew that Daventry lies to the south of the Nen, which the map confirms to " be its situation[f]." This is true as applied to the northern branch of the Nen, which is several miles distant, but it lies north of the nearest or western branch of the river. " The common reading of the numerals in this place

" is XVII. In Iter VIII the same distance is made XVIII, and in some copies XIX. M.; and in that Iter, to " make the particular numbers agree with the total, it appears necessary to correct the numerals in this particular " stage to XX. This seems to be the true reading, and it is accordingly adopted here. In Iter VI. where
" Tripontio intervenes, this distance is XXI miles. The communication between Daventry and the Watling
" street has most probably proceeded by the most direct line by the camp, and through Norton. By comparing
" the maps of Northamptonshire and Warwickshire together, it is plain this distance cannot be less than twenty " miles[g]." But in his comment on the eighth iter he admits, " I cannot plead the authority of any copy for this " reading, but I believe it to be the real distance of these towns by the route used in the Itinerary. In the present
" Iter, this number is necessary to make the particulars agree with the total, and it is the only number that will " admit of such correction. In this distance there are no less than five various readings of the numerals. In
" Iter II. the number is XVII, and in some copies XVI, M.P. In Iter VI. where Tripontio intervenes, the " distance is XII and IX M.P. that is XXI miles. And in the present Iter we read XVIII, and in some " copies XIX, M.P. Under such uncertainty there must be less objection to the admission of the correction here
" proposed, especially as it is sanctioned by two such pleas in favour of it[h]."

In the Beauties of England and Wales[b], Borough hill, or rather the Burnt Walls, is considered the site of this station. The last authority which remains to be cited is the rev. Mr. Leman, who, in his commentary appended to the new edition of Richard of Cirencester, published in 1809, says, " Burnt Walls was the Roman " post of Isannavaria, Borough Hill on the hill above it, was the great British fortification, Bennavenna[c]."

The superior advantages of personal investigation enjoyed by the local historian, would, he is persuaded, if equally enjoyed by the preceding writers, have effectually secured them against the fallacious hypotheses, which it will enable him, he trusts, satisfactorily to detect and refute. Without laying any undue stress on the derivation of Benaventa, which he has hazarded at the outset of this inquiry, the proximity of Borough hill to the Aufona or Nen, and its position relatively to it, which form the basis of all the etymologies in the preceding quotations, cannot be sustained; for the western branch of that river, which rises at Staverton, is not only an insignificant stream at its source, but does not at the nearest point approach within two miles of the foot of the hill; and the northern branch, which flows from Naseby or Sibbertoft, in the direction of Northampton, is never within four or five times that distance: and neither, therefore, can with any degree of probability have suggested the appellation.

The Roman mile has been generally supposed shorter than the English one, but Reynolds very forcibly contends that the Roman mile and our statute mile are one and the same measure. Where there are discrepancies in the numerals of different iters, the most legitimate course must be, to adopt those which best accord with the real measurement when it can be ascertained, inferring the others to be corrupted or spurious; and in the present case it is a strong primâ facie presumption in favor of the sixth iter of Antoninus, that it precisely corresponds with the first iter of Richard. Indeed it might naturally be expected, that the distances would be more loosely and carelessly given in the second and eighth iters of Antoninus where the intermediate stage is omitted, and such was the fact; for there is an exact conformity between the numerals of the sixth iter and the actual distance from Venonis by Tripontium to Benaventa, whether identified with Burnt Walls or Wedon. High Cross in Leicestershire, at or near which antiquaries have by common consent placed Venonis, being IX miles from the south side of Dovebridge—the now acknowledged site of Tripontium: thence pursuing the Watling street to the lane leading to Norton is IX miles, from which point, through that village, and winding round the valley between Borough hill and Daventry to Burnt Walls—or continuing on the Watling street to Wedon—is nearly equa-distant, and somewhat more than III, but certainly not IV miles. Yet Reynolds, unable to reconcile the variations of the second and eighth iters, conjecturally altered the numerals to XX, in preference to the more obvious mode of selecting the sixth iter; though in commenting on it under the heads of Tripontium and Venonis, he admits the correctness of the distances[d]. And Horsley was led by the excess of distance in the sixth, over the second and eighth iters, to the erroneous assumption of Tripontium being an excursion out of the main road. He rejects Wedon, as being beyond XVII miles, and fixes on Daventry as being exactly XVII miles, according to Mr. Eayre's map; but either the one or the other must by mistake have reckoned only to the point of the Watling street opposite Norton. Arguing from distance alone, the claims of Burnt Walls and Wedon are equal; but independently of the latter furnishing no internal evidence of Roman occupancy, an insuperable objection to its admissibility is found in its being irreconcileable with the succeeding stations, whereas the former completely harmonizes with them. From Burnt Walls to Lactodorum—decidedly Towcester—is the stated distance of XII miles, at least it enters the twelfth mile, and as no fractional parts are given in the iters, and the spots from whence the measurements were taken are unknown, greater accuracy is unattainable; and it agrees also with the total distance to the indisputable station of Verulam at St. Alban's, as is easily and correctly ascertained from the road books—the Watling street from Wedon being now incorporated with the great turnpike road from Chester to London. Another argument no less decisive in support of Burnt Walls may be derived from the eighteenth iter of Richard. The most cursory reference to the maps of Northamptonshire and Oxfordshire will shew that Burnt Walls is in a line with the next identified Roman station of Ælia Castra (Alcester near Bicester); the distances sufficiently correspond; and both to and from the intervening stage of Brinavis—which, under Chipping Warden, I shall endeavour to prove occupied the fields called The Black Grounds,—are detached lanes traditionally called the Port Way, a name common to Roman roads in various parts of the kingdom.

After the final evacuation of this Island by the Romans in the fifth century, the importance of Borough hill as a military post could not be overlooked: it was doubtless occupied by the Saxons, and probably by the Danes, and may be presumed to have undergone many modifications in adapting it to the various systems of castrametation.

Morton "ventures to pitch upon the year 1006 as the time of its being made a new Encampment. In that "year a Danish Navy arrived at Sandwich, and under Suægen or Swane their King, they harassed and spoil'd the "Country, burning all before them. Whereupon king Ethelred sends out orders to the whole Country of the "West Saxons and of the Mercians, to rise. And upon this alarm they gathered together, and stood upon their "Guard against the Danes the whole Autumn in great companies. One of these great Multitudes, perhaps the "whole Posse of Mercia, I am perswaded posted themselves upon Burrow Hill. The lesser camp before men- "tioned (at the northern extremity) was sufficient for the Roman force, which had formerly encamped there. "But this Army of Saxons consisting of far greater Numbers, enlarg'd the old Encampment to that Extent we "now see. And this Hill which is in the middle of Mercia, having by its height the Advantage of a large view "over the Country, with a spacious Plain on its Top, seems to have been as proper a Situation for the Encamp- "ment of a great Army in Time of War, as we can any where find in the whole Kingdom of Mercia. Tis the "most spacious Encampment I have ever seen or heard of. And upon an attentive View, it naturally led me to "think, that it must have been made for no less than a whole Country up in Arms. And the Agreement of the "History with the Place is such, that, in my Opinion, they mutually give Light to the clearer understanding each "other[e]."

The summit presents a most beautiful and extensive panorama view of the surrounding Country, abounding in objects of historic and antiquarian interest: as Naseby, where Charles the first was defeated; and Holmby house, where he was imprisoned; Northampton, Wedon Depot, the Spires of Coventry, and immediately below it, Daventry, and the reservoirs of the Grand Junction Canal. The Watling street passes within a short distance of the northern point of the hill, and continuing nearly at right angles, its course may be uninterruptedly traced for many miles in each direction, and at intervals XLV miles by the itinerary of Antoninus, from Lactodorum (Towcester) to Manduessedon (Manceter in Warwickshire)—the camp at Oldbury near that station being visible in a clear day. More westward may be seen Brinklow tumulus between Coventry and Hinckley; and from the southern point, the neighbouring camps of Arbury hill near Badby, and Castle Dykes near Farthingston.

The outer circumference of the ramparts is rather more than two miles and a quarter; the diameter from north to south, one mile; from east to west at the widest point three furlongs; and the contents of the whole area about one hundred and fifty acres.

[e] Morton, p. 546-7.

Prior to entering on the present state of the hill, it may be desirable to appropriate Morton's minute delineation of its appearance a century ago; as the earth works have been materially deteriorated by cultivation since the inclosure. Within the last two or three years the valla on the south east side of the hill have been broken up, thrown down into the fosses, and the surface carefully levelled; and if the same desolating process be continued, this far-famed camp will speedily be doomed to live only in description.

"In the Eastern Part of the Rampire, beginning at the South East and by South, and going Northward for "about 300 Yards, there is a double Trench, and Three Banks of Earth, that is, a Bank betwixt the Two Trenches, "and one on each Side. Farther on to the North, are Three Trenches, and Four Banks, the outmost and inmost "now almost level with the Surface. Somewhat farther Northward, Four Trenches and Five Banks: The Two "outmost small, the middle one is more rais'd, the Two inmost but little rais'd. Going still more Northerly in "that Part of the Rampire, below which on the Outside of it are several little Springs, the Works are so much "interrupted, that their Number and Form is not to be discovered. Advancing still onwards to the North, are "Two deep Trenches and Three Banks of proportionable Height.

"The North side of the Rampire is fenced in like manner with Two Entrenchments, and Three Banks of Earth.

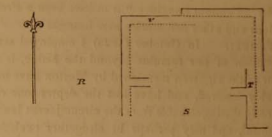
"On all the Western Side, there is only a single Entrenchment betwixt two Banks of Earth.

"That Part which lies Southerly, has, during its whole Course, Two Trenches, and Three Banks; whereof that "between the Trenches is the biggest.

"Traversing the Ground within the Circumvallations, or the Area of the Rampire, from South to North, at about "$\frac{3}{4}$ of the Length of it, appears a small Trench going overthwart, which from the Entrenchment on the West side "extends to about Two Thirds of the Breadth of the Area. Having passed over another $\frac{1}{4}$ of the Length, there is "another somewhat larger Ditch going cross the Hill from the Western Part of the Entrenchment Eastward, "almost $\frac{3}{4}$ of the Area. It terminates at or nigh the Round Banks. The Round Banks as they are called, are "about Eighteen in Number: the larger almost as large as one of our common Windmil-Hills, all a little hollow at "the Top: placed almost in a strait Row running North and South; close to each other. The whole Row is "about [One Hundred and] Sixty Yards in Length. The remaining Fourth of the Length of the Camp is divided "from the rest by a deep Trench, about 200 Yards in Length. The Area within is about Twelve Acres. This is "at the Northern Extremity of the Hill, and appears like the Cape or outmost Point of a pretty large Promontory. "The Area declines to the East. Upon the Eastern Declivity, near the overthwart Trench that divides the most "Northernly Part of the Rampire from the rest is the Spring call'd Spelwell, which by Mistake is call'd a Mount "by Mr. Camden. The Encampment being more easily assailable in the Eastern Part of it, as the fall of the "Ground is there more gentle and leisurely, it was therefore more strongly fenced in that Part, with double and "treble Trenches. 'Tis difficult to discover the old Entrances into this Encampment. The Interval that now "appears in that Part of the Banks S. E. and S. appears to have been one of them; there being no road at present "that leads up to it, or answers it. Pieces of Roman Money have sometimes been found in searching the Breaches "of the Trenches.

"Below the Encampment or Rampire about 250 yards, on the S. E. side of the same Hill, is a lesser Camp if I "may so call it, surrounded with a single Trench, and a Bank of Earth on the Inside of it. The Area is suppos'd "to be about an Acre. The Figure an oblong Square. The Entrances into it appear to have been one on the "East, and another on the opposite or Western side. The use of it perhaps for the lodging the Carriages[e]."

All the ramparts have been much reduced, and the ditches proportionably filled up since the inclosure, by the encroachments of a particular kind of plough, which lowers the vallum and raises the foss about a foot every time it is brought into operation.



Following the track of the above exploratory circuit from the south east, the works, as already remarked, have been entirely levelled for a considerable length, but the line of circumvallation is retrieved again towards the end of the field I, and is preserved along the east side, though the double, treble, and quadruple ditches are completely obliterated, and only two valla and a single ditch remain. The policy of additional defence in this quarter is very apparent on an examination of the ground, which projects beyond the ramparts, and the declination being gradual was peculiarly exposed to attack. In the space which remains to complete the circuit of the hill, no alteration deserving notice has taken place. "The small trench" which according to Morton "extends to about two "thirds of the area," on minuter inspection enters the western intrenchment at or near the upper corner of the field K, and crossing G H and I transversely, by a flexure blends with the eastern intrenchment precisely at the spot where Morton, unaware of the circumstance—owing probably to the area being then overrun with gorse—says, "The Works are so much interrupted that their number and form cannot be discovered." "The larger "ditch," northward of the demarcation, which he describes as reaching "almost three fourths of the area," forms a squarish earth-work with a slight bank inside the ditch, principally included in the field C, and containing about 18 acres. Had the trench been inside, instead of outside the bank, there would have been little hesitation in pronouncing it the place devoted by the Britons to their civil or religious assemblies: its construction, however, may still be confidently referred to that people. The southern termination coincides with, and is lost in the western intrenchment, but the north side passes through the intrenchment, and emerging beyond, connects with, or is formed into a covered way or communication winding under the hill into the valley towards Daventry. There are several linchets also, and other peculiarities on this side of the hill which are scarcely observable, except when assisted by the effect of light and shade in sunshine.

The northern or "remaining fourth of the length of the camp," as it is termed by Morton, is highly interesting, particularly field A, and has richly repaid the time and labor which I was induced to bestow upon it from a persuasion that it enclosed the Prætorium of the Roman camp. The circumvallation of this division is more perfect, and of a much bolder character than the rest of the encampment. Round the north corner fronting the Watling street, extra works have been carried on below the leading ones, and gradually die away into the declivity. At this point the inner foss is of considerable depth, and the vallum, though now its prominence would scarcely attract observation, was, within memory, elevated to a mount, known by the name of Bunker's hill. This was in all probability a speculum or beacon tumulus, and a fire kindled here would have conveyed intelligence of any hostile movement through a wide extent of country. There appears by a break in the ramparts to have been an entrance to the north east, approached from the Watling street between Wedon and Norton: and another—now the modern one—is still more evident, from the curved banks and small circular outposts, near the gateway on the west, leading into the supposed vicinal road from the latter village to Isannavenna. The intrenchments desert the general contour at the south, and turning inwards cut off all communication with the interior of the hill, except through an oblique entrance between their eastern and western terminations; and it constitutes rather a singular feature in these lateral works that they do not meet each other—the ditch of the eastern one advancing beyond the vallum of the western one. The space thus inclosed in field A is about eight acres. The spring called Spelwell is within the eastern ditch adjoining the present farm yard.

Suspecting the site of the Prætorium, or residence of the Roman general to be on the west side of this inclosure, I was enabled by the liberality of the neighbouring gentry to explore the spot last November (1823). Conjecture was fortunately converted into certainty, and we were anxious to trace the whole ground plan of the building; but the field being laid down to permanent pasture, the tenant objected to the turf being further disturbed, and the annexed plan exhibits the result of our imperfect and unfinished labors.

A denotes an ash pit, communicating with B, a fire-place. C was the fire-place in, or rather under, the room D, and had stocks of eight inch quarries in a perfect state. The floor of the room E was broken up, but there were decided indications of the entrance at F. At the north west corner of the room G the fragment of two sides of a tesselated pavement was found, composed of blue, yellow, red, and white tesseræ half an inch square, forming an outer border of the foliated vitruvian scroll, and an inner one of the simple guilloche, within which was a small ornamented circle, evidently the commencement of the central pattern. The hypocaust I was heated from the fire place H, and consisted of a central flue, from which ran four others at right angles on the north, and two only on the south side, by which arrangement the occupants of the room, by changing sides, were accommodated with a greater or less degree of warmth. The room K, from its diminutive size, and being considerably below the level of the adjoining apartments, is presumed to have been a bath. The walls had been painted in fresco of various colours; some small portions still adhered to them, as well as to the base, which was finished with a narrow sloped border or moulding. Several rows of large coarse tesseræ of the common stone of the neighbourhood an inch square, surrounded an elegant square mosaic pavement, partly destroyed, but sufficiently preserved to develope the leading design. The exterior arrangement consisted of five borders, the first white, the second dark blue, the third white and dark blue vandykes transposed, the fourth white, and the fifth a simple guilloche of red, white, and dark blue tesseræ. The same ornament was introduced in the central compartments and disposed into a circle within two intersecting squares. The wall L must have been subsequently added to form a passage; for it stands on the pavement and interrupts the pattern, which was continued and completed south of it. M was the fire place to the hypocaust N. From the horizontal flues, perpendicular ones of large hollow bricks 14½ in. long, by 10 in. wide, and 5 in. deep, scored on each side in different patterns, ascended up the walls—including L—at certain distances marked by slight projections in the plan. About three feet under the bottom of the floor, in removing the pavement, was discovered in one of the flues a small Roman cup of unglazed bluish clay, inverted—probably a drinking cup. Adjoining to the bath on the south was probably the apodyterium, or dressing room, as an ivory stylus or pin, a small pair of volsellæ or tweezers, and an instrument used for removing the water from the surface of the body after bathing were found there. The room O was floored with a composition of pounded bricks, lime, and sand. Upon it were considerable quantities of loose ridge and other tiles, apparently the effect of a fallen roof. The room P presented part of a tesselated pavement about six feet wide, principally of the larger tesseræ: the remainder had probably been dispersed by the plough, not being more than three or four inches from the present surface. The room Q had a similar floor to O. The space between P Q and R S was only partially explored. Near R was the remains of a fire-place, with abundance of burnt ashes, and a very large deposit of loose tesseræ of various colours and sizes. The wall T was 3 ft. thick, and conceiving it to be an outside wall, we dug for the foundation, but at the depth of 12 ft. we found a few tesseræ, fragments of pottery, an arch fallen in, and walls branching off in different directions.

The whole space excavated was 144 ft. long, by 67 ft. wide; and in endeavouring to connect the walls when filling in the ground, it appeared that we had not at any point reached the exterior of the building. The walls were in general 2 ft. thick, solid throughout, and constructed of the stone of the neighbourhood. Roman coins have been frequently found here, but a denarius of Constantine was the only one brought to light on the present occasion.

Near the foot of the vallum, south of the excavations, and running nearly parallel to it, a wall was traced for several yards, which if pursued would probably have formed the boundary of the prætorium. On the outside extending quite up to the base of the vallum about a foot or two below the surface, was an accumulation of burnt earth and charred wood, and amongst it the lower portion of an instrument like the sacrificing knife represented in Lysons' Woodchester, and the socket of a spear; and in every direction around, teeth, jaw-bones and other bones of horses, cows, deer, sheep, and pigs, with almost innumerable fragments of roman pottery of various kinds, on a careful examination of which, portions of no less than seventy vessels of different kinds, from a cup of two and a half inches, to a patera of thirteen inches diameter, were satisfactorily recognised.

It is difficult to discriminate between the original adits of this extensive encampment, and the modern entrances made for agricultural purposes; and the only one which can now be ascertained with any degree of certainty, except those in the north camp already mentioned, is that alluded to by Morton at the south end of the hill. The "lesser camp" noticed by him is barely discernible; the trench does not now average more than eight or ten inches. Pennant imagines "it to have been a Procestria, a sort of free post attendant often on camps, where provisions and other necessaries were brought[b]."

Tumuli. In October (1823) I employed several labourers to open the range of tumuli, which, with the exception of one tumulus beyond the hedge, is now included in the field marked D in the plan of the camp. Four of the eighteen mentioned by Morton have totally disappeared; and the whole of the remainder are considerably lowered, and have lost the depressions on the apex. No. 1 and No. 2, within the earth work, are scarcely distinguishable from the circumjacent land, and no indications of interment being found within them, are doubtful, and may perhaps be altogether excluded from consideration. In No. 3, charcoal and bones were found, and the cist with a covering stone; but the urn was gone. No. 4 was unproductive. No. 5 was the most prominent of the series, the diameter being about thirty-two feet, and the elevation nearly five feet. The accumulation of stones and the remains of a stratum of black earth near the floor, indicated a construction similar to No. 8; but a tobacco pipe, at the depth of more than four feet, confirmed the suspicion of our search having been anticipated, and we were subsequently informed that some of these tumuli had been opened about twenty years since by the rev. Mr. Andrew of Daventry, though the result of his researches was not known, and may therefore be presumed to have been unsatisfactory.

No. 6 was composed of the maiden soil of the surrounding ground piled over the sepulchral deposits. It may not improbably have been a family barrow, as it disclosed four distinct interments on the same level, with crematory urns of different sizes. The first urn, which contained ashes, burnt bones, and earth, was discovered north of the centre, within a foot of the present surface, and about two feet below the apex. The mutilated fragments have been combined so as to develope the original size and form. It is of a coarse light reddish earth unornamented, and unbaked, or baked only in the sun, nine inches in height and in its widest diameter, and graduating to three inches at the base. Near it were the broken remains of a smaller one of a bluish grey colour. About three feet to the south, near the centre, a second and most curious deposit presented itself in its original state, consisting of an urn of light reddish earth, assimilating in form to the first, but rather smaller, erect, and the mouth covered with a large rude stone, a portion of that species of eagle's nest termed ætites, and said to be held in high veneration by the ancients. Parallel to this covering stone, and transversely to the urn, lay a small vessel with a narrow neck and bowed handle; but the shape, dimensions, and relative positions of the articles, will be best understood by the engraved representation, which is on a scale of one fourth of the size. About the same distance bearing south west the third interment appeared. The urn varied but little in size and contour from the preceding, but was of a bluish or rather blackish earth, and judging from the regularity of the close and narrow lines which encircle it, must have been turned in a lathe. It was accompanied by a small vessel, nearly the counterpart of the one in the last, but not perfect: the handle was broken, and the fractures there, and in the side, proved its crude half-baked composition. Within a foot of the last on the west side was the fourth interment, probably of an infant, connected with the larger one; the urn, which is of light red earth, and filled with ashes, bones, and mould as the others, being only five inches high, and unaccompanied with any other vessel.

No. 7, doubtful, or had been previously examined. No. 8 was one of the most conspicuous, and differed in its construction and contents from all except No. 5. It might be almost denominated a cairn, and exhibited a simple interment by cremation. The floor was covered with a single course of small stones in a circle about four feet diameter, upon which was spread, above two inches in thickness, the burned ashes and bones of the deceased, intermixed with charcoal and red earth. At the east end lay a rude buckle of brass without a tongue, and also a considerable quantity of the same metal so corroded that it broke to pieces in removing. Above, was another single course of stones, succeeded by a stratum of fine dark earth nearly a foot thick, which was surmounted by stones apparently piled with care to the height of nearly two feet, and thinly covered with turf. In No. 9, at the depth of three feet and a half, was a floor of burned earth, charcoal, and bones, presenting the appearance, rather of the spot where the body was burned, than of the actual place of interment. Nos. 10, 11, and 12, furnished traces of the rites of cremation, but nothing worthy of particular detail.

[b] Pennant's Chester to London, p. 261.

In No. 13, at the depth of two feet from the apex, was a small circular cist just large and deep enough to contain an urn of coarse light brown ware about eight inches high, covered with five rude stones of the neighbourhood, the points of four of them which were rudely angular, meeting in the centre, and surmounted by the fifth. At the east side of the urn on the floor of the tumulus were considerable portions of burned earth and charcoal, indicating the place of cremation previous to the deposit in the urn.

No. 14 scarcely exceeded a foot in its highest elevation. About three feet below the central surface was a circular cist rather more than three feet in diameter, excavated out of the natural substratum of yellowish sand: the inner edge was lined with small stones, and the urn and its accompaniments were surrounded with fine maiden earth. The urn, which was of a mixture of coarse sand, and blackened by the smoke of the funeral pile, contained the same deposit as the preceding ones, except that the bones were less consumed: it stood at the east end with the mouth upwards, and uncovered. Contiguous to it on the south was a small vessel with a handle, somewhat similar but larger, coarser, and of more substantial manufacture than those in No. 6. A few inches to the west of the urn was a libatory or sacrificial patera of the red glazed Samian ware, and in a proximate position to it on the north and south were corroded nails and fragments of iron.

In the field marked H was the most prominent tumulus on the hill; but on investigation it proved to have been previously opened.

On the south west side of the inner entrance into the northern camp was a solitary circular tumulus of slight elevation which disclosed a primary and subsequent interment: the upper or later one had been evidently disturbed by the operations of the plough, for two or three years since, a broken amulet of jet was picked up on the surface; and on now digging into it at the depth of about half a foot were portions of human bones supposed to be of a female, with a boar's tusk, and fragments of animal bones. About two feet below we came to the primary interment. Beneath a layer of four or five inches of unctious fatty matter were vast quantities of burnt ashes and charred wood spread over the floor of the barrow. At the western extremity were small fragments of the mouth of a large urn which must have required more than thirteen inches to complete the diameter: its colour is a reddish brown, ornamented below the rim with the zig-zag or vandyke pattern, and exhibiting the other usual criteria of the rudest British pottery, being formed without the lathe, unbaked, crumbling to the touch, and black and sooty in the fractures. Near it was a small part of a patera of light red ware, thin, and unglazed. On the east side were dispersed several broken pieces of the same rude materials, but which, varying considerably in thickness, must have belonged to at least two or three different urns.

Nearly north of the last, on a slight elevation presumed to have been a tumulus, at the top of the inner vallum was found near the surface the under jaw and part of the skeleton of a man, the tooth of a horse, and several other bones. At the northern extremity of this camp, the skeleton of a man deposited in a cist composed of large sarsen stones, with a spear head by his side, were dug up by a labourer a few years ago.

Should the description of these tumuli be considered tediously minute, it may be urged in extenuation that they are not only the first in this county whose contents have been recorded, and interesting in themselves, as tending to illustrate the customs of our rude progenitors; but a comparison of similar discoveries in the different districts of the kingdom, furnishes the most useful data for arriving by analogy at the probable period when, and the people by whom they were raised. I presume not to fix the æra of these sepulchral deposits: where certainty is unattainable every hypothesis is liable to opposition; but if I were to hazard a conjecture, I should be inclined to attribute the earliest of them to the Britons prior to the Roman invasion, and the later ones to the Romanized Britons.

Races. "Just within the Entrenchments," says Morton, "the whole Circuit of the Area, excepting only "about a Quarter of a Mile in the Northern part of it, has for several Years been a celebrated Course for Horse "Races; which, as it has been measured, and is now usually computed, wants about 28 Yards of Two Miles." The Britons were much attached to this diversion. May not this have been one of their Cursus? Others have been traced on the Wiltshire downs. In modern times the races here were held annually for two, and sometimes three days, till the year 1741, when they were partially discontinued, though occasionally resumed till the hill was inclosed.

DRAYTON

Is a hamlet of the parish, and member of the borough of Daventry. It forms the western division of the parish, and was inclosed by act of parliament 25 Geo. 2 (1752). It contains about 1500 acres; of which John Plomer Clarke, esq. of Welton Place, the Lord of the Manor, has nearly 100 acres; William Rose Rose, esq. of Chapel Brampton, lessee of the dean and chapter of Christ Church, about 260 acres, including about 50 acres of freehold; the perpetual curate of Daventry, in right of his church, about 50 acres*; William Watkins, esq. of Daventry, about 305 acres; Mr. William Head about 200 acres; the rev. John Rose Holden, sen. of Upminster in Essex, about 160 acres; John Barnett, M. D. of Worcester, about 150 acres; and .... Macintosh, M. D. of Exeter, about 100 acres.

* Besides about 127 acres in Daventry field omitted in p. 304.

MANORIAL HISTORY. Drayton is unnoticed in domesday, and may be presumed to have been silently included in the survey of Daventry, though nearly equal to it in point of extent. The name occurs within a century of the Norman conquest in grants to Daventry priory, but the earliest mention of a manor here is not till 23 Hen. 8 (1531), when

Nicholas Wodhull, esq.* died seised of Drayton manor, held of the king as parcel of the duchy of Lancaster, leaving Anthony Wodhull, esq. his son and heir[i]; whose daughter and heiress Agnes was successively the wife of sir Richard Chetwode of WARKWORTH, and sir George Calveley, of Lea in Cheshire.

This manor subsequently became re-united to the paramount manor of Daventry, with which it passed on the sale of the earl of Winchilsea's estate in 1786, to John Clarke, esq. of WELTON PLACE, father of John Plomer Clarke, esq. the present possessor.

DAVENTRY PRIORY MANOR. Various grants in Drayton to the priory of Daventry are detailed in the cartulary Cott. MS. Claud. D xii. from fo. 54 to 65. b. These, however, for the most part consist of trifling donations from the families of Gemme and de Drayton. The largest grant is two virgates of land with messuage, &c. by Robert Fitzwalter lord of Daventry, for the health of the souls of his father Walter Fitz Simon and his mother Isabella de Pinkene[k]. Other benefactions here, both from his ancestors and successors, will be found blended with the grants in Daventry †.

Since the dissolution, a portion of the priory lands in Drayton have passed with the priory estate in Daventry to the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, under whom they are held on lease.

Besides the lands associated with Daventry, and which I apprehend included only "the demesne lands" of the priory, there were other lands in Drayton parcel of the priory, which were granted (int. al.) in 37 Hen. 8 (1545), under the description of the manor of Drayton in the parish of Daventry, and four yard lands and four closes in Drayton thereto belonging, late appertaining to king Henry the eighth's college in Oxford, to

BAGOT-CHESTER of CHICHELEY.

Agreeably to the above pedigree this estate descended to Anthony Chester, esq. afterwards created a baronet, who in April 37 Eliz. (1593), sold the "mansion house" in Drayton built by his father, to Thomas Seymour, esq.; and the manor of Drayton, with certain lands, to

Richard Symes, or Simmes, gent.[m] He died 6 Sept. following, seised of this manor, and lands in Drayton, Staverton, and Kislingbury, leaving Richard Simmes his son and heir, aged 21 years[n]; who in 44 Eliz. (1602) alienated his manor of Drayton to

Richard Raynsford, esq.§ and Robert Raynsford his son and heir apparent in fee; which Robert, in 6 Jac. (1608), his father being then dead, conveyed it to

Richard Farmer, gent. and Edward Farmer his second son in fee. In 17 Car. (1641) the said Edward Farmer and Elizabeth his wife, in consideration of £850, sold the manor of Drayton, and lands in Drayton, Daventry, and Staverton, to Thomas Clarke, senior, of Welton, in fee. His great grandson John Clarke, gent. by his will, in 1725, devised this manor in moieties to his son William Clarke, gent. and his daughter Mary, wife of Richard Hett, gent. who in 1729 purchased his brother in law's share, and in 1732 settled this manor in moieties on his only surviving children, John Hett, of the Inner Temple, esq. a master in chancery, and Richard Hett, gent. In 1756 Richard Hett conveyed his interest to his brother John[m], whose only daughter and heiress carried this estate in marriage to the present possessor, Dr. Mackintosh of Exeter.

THE MANOR HOUSE stood in the village.

DODFORD,

In domesday "Dodeforde"—"so named as I take it," says Fuller, "from a Ford over the Avon [Nen], and Dods "Water Weeds (commonly called by children Cat Tales), growing thereabouts[o];" but though this puerile etymology be rejected without hesitation, it would be no easy task to substitute a more rational one.

The lordship was inclosed by private agreement enrolled in chancery 21 Jac. (1623), and contains about 1400 acres; of which sir Charles Knightley, bart. of Fawsley, lord of the manor, has about 850 acres; the vicar, in right of his church, about 140 acres; Mrs. Watson, late of Badby, about 100 acres; and Miss Jane Freeman of Coventry nearly 100 acres. It is bounded on the north by Norton; north-east and east, by Brockhole in Newbottle Grove hundred; south-east, by Flore in the same hundred, and Stowe; south, by Wedon; south-west, by Everdon; and west, by Newnham. Morton says the inhabitants of this parish are remarkable for longevity and "generally live to 70 or 80[p]." The soil is principally a deep strong loam: about three-fourths of the lordship is in pasture, and much of it excellent feeding land. Oak, ash, and elm all thrive well. The following scarce plants have been found here. Scirpus sylvaticus, wood Club-rush*. Poligonum Bistorta, Snakeweed, in the meadows*. Cotyledon Umbilicus, wall Pennywort†.

The stone of this lordship is of the inferior oolite, abounding with terebratulæ. Large pectenites are occasionally found in it. Morton has engraved one 16 in. in circumference[q].

There is plenty of good diluvial gravel, which has furnished specimens of various ammonites, productus, gryphites, ostreæ, terebratulæ crumena and tetraedra, bituminous wood, and mica slate and garnets.

The Grand Junction Canal runs through part of the parish, and there are two small brooks, one of which serves the mill.

This lordship is plentifully supplied with springs. Two or three of them are slightly chalybeate. In the great flood in May 1664 "the water in a short space arose at least Eight Foot above the ordinary surface of the Rill, that runs through the Town[r]." Two mills are noticed in domesday—one only is now remaining, which is situated at the south-west boundary towards Everdon.

Manorial History. Moreton Fee‡. Honor of Leicester. In the saxon era "Dodeforde" was in the soke or jurisdiction of Fawsley. Turbern held an hide and a half freely, and the remainder of the lordship was divided between Orgar, Aluric, and Lewric. At the domesday survey the whole was held by William under the earl of Moreton for three hides. The arable land was seven carucates, two of which were in demesne with four servants, and the remaining five were distributed among eleven villeins, a priest, and six bordars. There were two mills worth 10s. yearly, and 12 acres of meadow. It had been rated at 40s. yearly, but was then doubled in value[s].

In the Testa de Nevill, about 19 Hen. 3 (1234-5), Simon Montfort (earl of Leicester) as guardian of the heir, accounted for the fees formerly belonging to Ralph de Keynes of the small fees of Moreton[t]. In another part of the same record, between 31 and 40 Hen. 3, the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented that William de Kaynes was lord of "Doddeford," which consisted of three hides and a half of the fee of (the earl of) Leicester, who held view of frank pledge and pleas of withernam[u]. By the inquisition after the death of Edmund, the king's brother, earl of Lancaster, in 25 Edw. 1 (1297) Robert de Keynes was found to hold of him Dodford, with its members, for one fee and a half of the small fees of Moreton[x]. In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) a writ of quo warranto was exhibited against Henry earl of Lancaster (and Leicester) to shew by what right he claimed (int. al.) in "Dodeford," East Haddon, Lilburn, Helmdon, and Wedon, with their members, parcel of the honor of Leicester, return of writs, pleas of withernam, view of frank pledge, with all privileges belonging to it, wayfs and strays, infangtheof, gallows, pillory, and tumbril, and acquittance throughout the kingdom from toll, pontage, stallage, pannage, and repairs of castles, bridges, &c.; to which he pleaded that Simon Montfort earl of Leicester and his ancestors beyond memory, were seised of the said honor with its privileges, which, after the forfeiture of the said Simon, was given by king Henry 3rd to his son Edmund earl of Lancaster and Leicester in fee, from whom it descended to Thomas, as son and heir, and from him to Henry, the present claimant, as brother and heir. The jurors presented that the said privileges were legally exercised, except in punishing offenders against the assize of bread and beer, by amerciament of 5s. 6d. instead of pillory and tumbril, and that Hawise de Keynes held of the earl the view of frank pledge in Dodford twice a year by the annual payment of two marks (26s. 8d.), and her bailiff in the name of the earl had execution of all corrections adjudged within the view[y].

The views of frank pledge or courts leet, and all the knights' fees in this county held of the honor of Leicester, as detailed in the Testa de Nevill, and inquisition after the death of Edmund earl of Lancaster and Leicester[z], were part of the confiscated fee of Moreton, and may therefore be considered of the second fee of Leicester, in contradistinction to the first fee, which consisted of the possessions recorded in domesday under the head of the earl of Mellent. A full pedigree of the Norman earls of Leicester will be given under Brackley, and of the Lancas-

HENRY PLANTAGENET, surnamed of Bolingbroke, duke of Lancaster, and earl of Leicester, &c. summoned to parliament as earl of Derby 3 Sept. 9 Ric. 2 (1385), created duke of Hereford 29 Sept. 21 Ric. 2 (1397), Rot. Parl. and ascended the throne by the name of KING HENRY 4th, 29 Sept. 1399, whereby the duchy of Lancaster, and the honors of Leicester, Derby, and Lincoln, &c. merged in the crown.

MANOR OR BARONY OF KEYNES. William was one of the principal feudatories of the earl of Moreton, under whom, besides this lordship, he held the whole or portions of Charwelton, Farthingston, and Snoscomb, in Fawsley hundred; Brington, Brockhole and Muscote, Flore and Clasthorp, Harleston, and Kislingbury, in Newbottle Grove hundred; (Cold) Ashby, (Little) Creton, and Yelvertoft, in Guilsborough hundred; Hanington, in Orlingbury hundred; Spratton, in Spelho hundred; Tiffield, in Towcester hundred; Silveston, in Norton hundred; Furtho, and Eston Neston, in Cleley hundred; and Croughton, Evenley, (King's) Sutton, Walton, and Purston, in Sutton hundred; together with a part of Heyford, in Newbottle Grove hundred, of the fee of the bishop of Baieux[a]. The identity of this William with William de Cahainges (or Keynes), who held a portion of Flore in capite[b], is placed beyond doubt by the proofs which the Hydarium of Hen. 2 and the Testa de Nevill furnish of all the possessions being held by, or under, his descendants. His son Ralph de Keynes had by gift of Henry 1st, Tarent and Combe in Dorsetshire, and Somerford in Wiltshire, in free marriage with the daughter of Hugh Maminot[c]. Hugh de Keynes, in 5 Steph. (1140), paid £4 on an old census of the forest[d]; and between 23 Hen. 1 (1123) and 12 Steph. (1147), gave the church of Dodford to Luffield priory, with the consent of his heir Richard de Keynes[e], between whom and his brother Ralph de Keynes the patrimonial property may be inferred, from subsequent circumstances, to have been divided. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 Ralph de Keynes ["Chanes"] was returned to hold three hides in "Dodeford[f];" and in the Liber Niger 14 Hen. 2 (1167), under the head of Dorsetshire, he certified that he had three knight's fees of the old, and three and a fourth of the new feoffment[g]. He died in 6 Ric. 1 (1195), when his son William de Keynes paid relief for his lands in Dorsetshire[h]; but he appears to have resigned Dodford and his Northamptonshire lands to his son about 22 Hen 2 (1175-6), in which year William de Keynes paid 500 marks (£333. 6s. 8d.) into the exchequer for offences committed in the royal forests[i]. In 1177 (23 Hen. 2), thinking to ingratiate himself with the king by a charge against Robert earl of Leicester, then under displeasure, he repaired to him at his court at Northampton, and represented that his barony ought to be held of him in capite, and not of the earl, who unjustly usurped the paramouncy; to which charge the earl, being summoned before the council, answered, that his great-grandfather, grandfather, father, and himself, enjoyed their lands and privileges by charters from kings William 1st and Henry 1st; but though the ancestors of the complainant had always held their barony of his predecessors, which they would not have done in opposition to the will and right of the crown, he was yet ready to submit, not only that point, but all his possessions, to the king's judgment. Henry, moved by this frank and unreserved appeal to his justice, restored to him his estates "in gross," as he had them fifteen days before the rebellion broke out in which he had been engaged with prince Henry. The attempt of Keynes to injure the earl recoiled on himself: the king, reproaching him for the malicious motives with which he had been actuated, dismissed him in disgrace[k]; and the following year a fine of 2000 marks (£1333. 6s. 8d.) was entered against him in the pipe roll, for the remission of the king's displeasure and confirmation of his charter[l]. The same year (24 Hen. 2) Richard de Keynes was found to owe £660 for a fine or agreement between him and this William his nephew, son of Ralph de Keynes[m]. In 4 Hen. 3 (1219-20), this William, son of Ralph Keynes, claimed against Richard Keynes (grandson of the above Richard) the manors of Horsted, Ilford, and Syhammerton, in Sussex. Richard denied having seisin of them, Gunnora de Keynes (his mother) holding them in dower. William claimed in demesne what Richard held in demesne, and that he held all the said premises in demesne, in services, or in alms; which Richard admitted, but referred to roll 8 for his right to two fees in Farthingston and Kislingbury, one fee in Brington and Charwelton, one fee in Evenley and Purston, one fee in Cosgrave, Tiffield, and Puxley, 60s. yearly rent in Heyford, and 40d. in Harleston, and one fee in Mursley in Buckinghamshire. He pleaded that he ought not to answer to the writ in the county of Northampton, because of the said 60s. rent he held only a moiety, and the prior of Luffield the other moiety, and prayed a view of the lands, as there were different fees or honors in those villages[n]. This suit evidently grew out of the family partition alluded to between Richard and Ralph, and shews the former to have had the Sussex estates, and the feudal services of five fees in certain vills in this county, all of which, as well as Dodford and its five dependent fees allotted to the latter, are included in the domesday survey of the lands of their common ancestor William, with the exception of Cosgrave and a few subsequent acquisitions. In 6 Hen. 3 (1221-2) Lettice, widow of William son of Ralph Keynes, had assignment of dower in Dorsetshire and Wiltshire[o]; and his son and heir William Keynes being a minor, the wardship and custody of his lands in those counties was committed to Richard (Poore) bishop of Salisbury[p]; and Dodford, with its fees in this county, to (Simon Montfort) earl of Leicester[q]. In the Testa de Nevill about 19 Hen. 3 (1234-5), his fees, then in wardship of the earl, were certified to consist of one fee in Creton and Spratton, one fee in Harleston and Heyford, half a fee in Yelvertoft, half a fee in Thurnby, the fourth of a fee in Holdenby; and the fourth of a fee in Hanington[r]: the accidental omission of one fee and a half in Brockhole (and Muscote) is supplied in another return, about 25 Hen. 3[s], making a total of five fees, corresponding with the number held by Richard Keynes[t], the representative of the other branch of the family. In 21 Hen. 3 (1236-7) the heir of William son of Ralph Keynes, under the head of debts of the jews, paid into the exchequer £45. 11s. 8d.; of which sum £18. 13s. 4d. being for debts to jews, as contained in rot. 8 Joh. for which Horsted in Sussex, Dodford, and Flore were pledged, Richard de Keynes who holds Horsted and Heyford, which were extended at £30, ought to answer for £8. 4s. 4½d.; Simon de Montfort who holds Dodford (as custos of the heir, still within age), extended at £23, ought to answer for £6. 6s. 3½d.; and William Tilli, and Robert son of Richard de Northampton who hold Flore, extended at £15, ought to answer for £4. 2s. 4d.[u] In 27 Hen. 3 (1242-3) William Keynes had respite of 8 marks (£5. 6s. 8d.), for talliage of the manor of Dodford[x]. He died prior to 50 Hen. 3 (1265-6), in which year his son Robert de Keynes was found by inquisition to be aged 18 years, and cousin (nephew) and coheir of Adam de Periton[y]. In 4 Edw. 1 (1275-6) the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented him to have a gallows and view of frank pledge, but they knew not by what authority[z]. He died 10 Edw. 1 (1281-2), leaving Robert de Keynes his eldest son, aged 10 years[a]. A mandate was directed to the sheriff the same year to take security from Hawise his widow, and the co-executors, for payment of all debts due from him to the king, if any[b]; and in 18 Edw. 1 (1289) it was found he was indebted 100 marks (£66. 13s. 4d.) to Vines son of Aaron the jew, by whose death it devolved to the crown[c]. Hawise was endowed with the manor of Dodford, and Robert her eldest son, having released his right, she levied a fine of it in 34 Edw. 1 (1305-6) to her youngest son William de Keynes in fee tail, on condition of rendering her £100 yearly for life, remainder to her daughter Lettice de Ayote, and her sons John Ayote, Lawrence Ayote, and William Ayote successively, in fee tail, with ultimate remainder to herself in fee[d]. William de Keynes re-granted it to her for life[e]; and in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) she gave the king 20s. to be admitted to claim by bill, free warren, weyf, and infangtheof, with its attendant privilege of a gallows, in "Dodeford;" and pleading prescription, her claims were allowed[e].

The male succession of the Dodford branch of Keynes became extinguished on the death of William's grandson John de Keynes, in 49 Edw. 3 (1375), whose sister Wentiliana, and aunt Elizabeth, dying within a few months unmarried[f], the right of inheritance clearly vested in William's great-granddaughter Alice, wife of Lewis Cardigan, and not, as erroneously found in the inquisitions through the artful chicanery of Brantyngham, in Margaret Wotton and Matilda Cressy, daughters of Lawrence Ayote.

Margaret Wotton dying s. p. the entirety of the manor centered in her sister, whose son John Cressy granted it for life to sir William Brantyngham, at whose death in 1 Hen. 5 (1413) it reverted to John Cressy, then a minor[g], but afterwards knighted, a privy councillor in France, and governor of Lyeieux, Orbef, and Ponticsque in Normandy[h]. His only son John Cressy died unmarried, when, sanctioned by the inquisition taken in 31 Hen. 6[i] (1453), the feoffees under the will of sir John Cressy conveyed this manor to

Isabel wife of sir Thomas Chaworth, and Eleanor widow of sir Humphry Stafford, the coheiresses of sir Thomas Aylesbury, as the legal representatives of Hawise Keynes, by descent from Margaret, daughter and heiress of sir Robert Keynes of Dodford, eldest son of the said Hawise. It will be seen, however, by the subjoined pedigree, every link of which is authenticated, and without a constant reference to which it is scarcely possible to render the involved succession of this manor intelligible, that this was an erroneous finding; Margaret, their ancestress, being daughter and heiress of sir Robert Keynes of Milton Keynes in Buckinghamshire, a junior branch of this ancient house. 'k Their right to this manor was disputed by Catherine, the wife of William Hathewyke, esq. who in the 'thirty-third year of Henry VI. laid claim to it, as descending to her from Hawisia, the daughter of William de 'Keynes; but not being able to support her pretensions, the cause was decided in favor of the possessors.' Notwithstanding this decision, she was undoubtedly the heir general of the family, and her son John Hathewyke, esq. was more successful in the assertion of his right; for the manors of Oxhill in Warwickshire, and Dodford, having been (int. al.) assigned to dame Eleanor Stafford on the partition of the Aylesbury property with her sister Chaworth, he recovered the former manor against her in 2 Edw. 4 (1462)[l], and commuted his interest in the latter for an annuity of £10[m]. Dame Eleanor did not long retain peaceable possession of Dodford, but met with a formidable opponent in the king's brother-in-law sir Edward Wideville*, devisee of his mother, who had purchased this manor from Philip son of William Purfrey, or Purefoy, esq. whose title was grounded on a pretended descent from William Ayote youngest son of Lettice Ayote. The pleadings in this suit disclose so many curious circumstances, that I am tempted to believe an abstract of them, though necessarily of great length after the closest compression, will not be considered tedious or irrelevant. To prove that Hawise, wife of sir Robert de Daventre, was not daughter of sir William de Keynes, sir Edward alleges, 1st. that an inquisition taken in Warwickshire Oct. 49 Edw. 3 (1375), after the death of Wentilian Keynes, found her aunt Elizabeth Keynes to be next heir, aged 54 years; 2d. that another inquisition, taken in Wiltshire 26 Dec. 49 Edw. 3 (1375), found that John de Beverley had a grant from the king of the wardship and marriage of John de Keynes and his sister Wentilian, and both being dead, their aunt Elizabeth Keynes was next heir, aged 50 years; 3rd. that another inquisition, taken in Northamptonshire, June, 50 Edw. 3 (1376), also found Elizabeth Keynes to be next heir, aged 50 years, and she being daughter of William de Keynes, if Hawise had been also one of his daughters, she or her issue would have been found heir with Elizabeth as her co-parceners; 4th. that another inquisition, taken in Dorsetshire, 10 July, 50 Edw. 3 (1376), found that Elizabeth also was dead; and Matilda, wife of Edmund Cressy, aged 35 years, and Margaret her sister, aged 40 years, the daughters of Lawrence de Ayote, were next heirs of Wentiliana Keynes; 5th. that another inquisition, taken in Northamptonshire, Dec. 9 Ric. 2 (1385), found that Elizabeth Keynes died 6 Nov. 50 Edw. 3 (1376), and the said Margaret, then widow of William Wotton, was next heir; and that a letter testimonial, dated 1404, under the seals of many worshipful men at Tarent Keynes, and another testimonial, under the seals of many gentlemen of Northamptonshire, that sir William de Keynes never had a daughter Hawise. Dame Eleanor, in reply to the inference drawn from the 3rd inquisition, observes, that Elizabeth, who is found heir, was then dead as well as Hawise; and whereas Matilda and Margaret are found heirs in the 4th inquisition, Margaret is found the only heir in the 5th inquisition, while in fact neither Elizabeth nor Hawise, nor Hawise Lodbroke, daughter of the said Hawise, should have been returned heir of Wentilian, who survived them all, but that Alice Cardigan, daughter of Hawise Lodbroke, ought to have been found next heir of Wentilian, "of the which, through fraud of one sir William Brantyngham, contriver of the inquisition abovesaid, the truth was detourned and covered." Whereas it is specified in the 2nd inquisition, that John and Wentilian were in ward to John de Beverley, the truth is not sufficiently declared, for before their decease he had "translated" his right in their wardship and marriage to Thomas Brantyngham then bishop of Exeter, who demised his right to his brother sir William Brantyngham aforesaid, of whose collusions and "contell" the following are openly and evidently proved to his great shame. After the decease of Wentilian, he excited a woman to present herself before persons unknown, and personate the aforesaid Elizabeth Keynes, as late coming from the holy land, "in white "clothyn as it were in an estate of innocencye," when on discreet examination she was discovered to be "a beest "envenymed thorough the covetye of the said Brantyngham," and both were so shamefully confused, that it abideth yet in evident writing and the remembrance of many men. He then prevailed on Margaret Wotton of Hemel Hempsted to represent herself as heir, descended of the Ayotes of St. Lawrence (in Hertfordshire), through which subtlety, she being found heir in the 5th inquisition, he granted her in recompence a yearly rent of £20 out of the manor of Dodford, by fine raised, as appears by an indenture between them written in French. Sir Robert de Daventre and Hawise his wife, daughter of sir William de Keynes, were long since dead, leaving several children, of whom none were then living except Simon de Daventre; for Hawise his sister, wife of sir John de Lodbroke, was also deceased, leaving a daughter Alice, wife of Lewis Cardigan, which Alice was disinherited by her father for marrying Lewis, who was his servant and cook, but was notwithstanding found his heir after his decease; upon which Brantyngham, to take better hold to satisfy his corrupt intent by the means and "supportation" of his brother, the bishop of Exeter, purchased a release of this manor from Simon, who soon after died s. p.; and Alice Cardigan, then standing next inherited to this manor, entailed by the fine, Brantyngham, aware she "was cast from the conceite of her frendes," laboured by many crooked means to disinherit her of Dodford and other "lyvelodes" of her mother. And Maud (Matilda) wife of Edmund Cressy having been found by the 4th inquisition joint heir with Margaret, he (Brantyngham) endeavoured to prove her illegitimate, in order to induce her heirs to forward his views, so that, through the releases of Margaret, and of Simon, and by the grant of John Cressy, father of the late sir John Cressy, deceased, he usurped for him and his wife the manor of Dodford for their lives; and through boldness of these surprises he disseised Alice Cardigan of "Oxchulra" [Oxhill], and continued in possession till he enfeoffed

John Brantyngham therein, who was afterwards ejected by Alice and her husband Cardigan, whose heirs "stand "possessioners" at this time. Dame Eleanor then proves that Hawise de Daventre was daughter of sir William de Keynes, by various verdicts on legal proceedings, between 11 Hen. 4 and 2 Edw. 4, in which Cardigan or Hathewyke were plaintiffs; and in refutation of sir Edward's two testimonials, which were "impetred" by Brantyngham, as is specified in the same, written in French, she opposes other testimonials of great approbation, both under the seal of arms of sir Richard Beauchamp sometime earl of Warwick, by examination of divers credible persons having expert knowledge in the matter, and other testimonials of worshipful men, of greater credence than the contrived testimonials granted at the labour and instance of Brantyngham. She concludes by affirming herself to be the inheritor of the manor; and reciting the conveyance from the feoffees under the will of sir John Cressy, states she was subsequently disseised by the said William Purfrey (Purefoy), under colour of whose title sir Edward makes his claim, though Purefoy "came never of the blood of Keynes nor of Ayott, and neither he nor none of "his ancestors bare the arms, nor never occupied no lands nor tenements of the Ayotts by inheritance, nor never "had he seisin nor possession in the manor of Dodford, by court holden, tenant returned, or money received, of "any part thereof." To prove that William Ayott brother of Lawrence, had issue Lawrence, sir Edward alleges, 1st. a testimonial or affidavit under the seal of John Mauntel, esq. dated 8 Jan. 34 Hen. 6 (1455-6), certifying that Aleyn de Ayote, son of Lawrence, told him, 40 years agone and more, that his issue would inherit the manor of Dodford, if Cressy, at that time lord, should die s. p. and prayed him tenderly to hearken thereon, and if such case fell, to let him have knowledge thereof; and that Christian Cressy, wife of the said John Cressy, told him the same 20 winters agoo; "and that this is true I will answer before God at the dreadful day of doom;" 2nd. another testimonial, under the seal of Robert Grey, esq. son of Reginald late lord Grey de Ruthyn, dated 8 Jan. 24 Hen. 6 (1445-6), certifying that sir John Cressy, who married his sister dame Constance, told him, if he died s. p. his cousin William Purfrey would inherit Dodford as next of kin and of the blood of the inheritance; and 3rd. that it was found and tried by twelve men, between William Purfrey, demandant, and Thomas Billing and Thomas Wylde, defendants, in a scire facias sued of the manor of Dodford, that William Ayote had issue Lawrence. Dame Eleanor, in reply to the two affidavits, answers generally, that they are made rather of favour and of envy, or of both, than of any zeal to declare the very truth; and appealing to the feoffment made to her by the feoffees of sir John Cressy, she asks, if the said sir John had understood that Purfrey was his next inheritor to the manor, what should have moved him to have made his will so obscurely to his feoffees, and Purfrey nor none of his blood remembered in the will nor feoffment: and as to the said trial between Purfrey, and Billing and Wylde, it was past on feeble grounds; for when Purfrey put in evidence unto the jury, the aforesaid testimonial of Mauntel respecting his conversation with Christian Cressy, the said Christian reproved Mauntel as an untrue and deceivable man, for she never said such language to him nor to none other, but on the contrary her mother-in-law Matilda Ayote, daughter of Lawrence, named in the fine (34 Edw. 1), wife of Edmund Cressy, reported unto her divers times that the said Aleyn de Ayote was the most "diversarie" person that her husband Edmund Cressy and she had between them and sir William Brantyngham, and if he had been son of Lawrence, son of William, youngest named in the fine, uncle of Matilda, he would have remembered the kindred, and the "possibilitie" so near of blood and knowledge; and in "approbation" (proof) of the same, dame Eleanor shews a record under authentic seal, certified by all the tenants of Dodford, of whom the greatest part are yet alive, that neither Christian nor her son sir John never took Purfrey for their kinsman, and they affirmed the same to Purfrey in the presence of the said tenants. Whereas the fine "reared" 34 Edw. 1 (1305) by Hawise de Keynes reserved the fee simple of the manor of Dodford to her and her heirs for ever, and her grandson and heir John de Keynes, in 21 Edw. 3 (1347), levied a fine of two parts of the manor to the use of himself and his wife Alianore, and the heirs of his body, remainder to his right heirs for ever, and the third part of the manor descended to him as heir of Hawise, viz. son of William, son of Hawise, the said manor should in justice resort to dame Eleanor, as cousin and heir of John, viz. daughter of Thomas, son of John, son of Thomas, son of Margaret, daughter of Robert, son of John, son of Lucas (son of Hugh), son of Ralph, father of William, father of William, father of Robert husband of Hawise, father of William, father of the said John de Keynes. To prove that William Ayote had not issue Lawrence, dame Eleanor alleges, that after the death of John Cressy, son of sir John, it was found before the escheator of the county of Northampton, 32 Hen. 6 (1454), that the said William Ayote was dead s. p. And whereas the said Philip Purfrey affirms himself to be son of William, son of William, son of Marian, daughter of Aleyn, son of Lawrence, son of William named in the fine, dame Eleanor says that Aleyn named in the descent, was lord of Shalston in Buckinghamshire, where he occurs in 2 Edw. 1, and 16 Edw. 2, and could by no means be son of Lawrence, son of William named in the fine, and that "Ayete of Ayete St. Lawrence" (in Hertfordshire), and "Ayote of Shalston," bear "several" (different) arms, and were "divers" (different) persons of name and kin. The chronological part of the last statement is incorrect, for it appears from Browne Willis's Buckingham (p. 262), that Shalston passed in marriage with the heiress of Baynell to Lawrence Ayete, in 18 Edw. 2 (1324). His son Aleyn could not therefore have been lord in 2 Edw. 1 (1273), and Lawrence possibly might be, though he is not proved to be son of William named in the fine.

Sir Edward and lady Eleanor subsequently agreed to refer their claims to the arbitration of king Edw. 4, whose award follows: Edward, by the grace of God king of England and of France, lord of Ireland, &c. &c. Whereas many years continuing there hath been great traverse, variance, trouble, and debates, for the right, title, and possession of the manor of "Doddeford" in the county of Northampton with pertinencies, and in special between sir Edward Wydevile, knight for our body, and all others having any interest or title to his behofe on the one part, and dame Alianore (Eleanor) Stafford and Thomas Stafford, esq. on the other part; which sir Edward, dame Eleanor, and Thomas, have submitted therein to obey our award, ordinance, direction, and judgment, of all the aforesaid right, title, and possession, with all other trespasses and offences of and for the said manor; by reason whereof, after the shewing of the title, and answers of them, their replications, traverse, and proofs of them, as well by the one part as by the other, at divers times and many, as well before us as divers of our lords, as before divers of our judges, and other discreet persons of our council; all which premises, orderly, distinctly, and ripely examined, heard, read, and understood, to the perfecting of our whole remembrance, and after great and long continuance of divers and many instance, suits, and humble requests, made to us by both the said parties, as by other many famous nobles of our realm, that it would like us to administer to the said parties our "habundaunt," that for the final appeasing of the said variances and debates, with our said judgment, ordinance, and award making: considering these premises, of our tender pity inclining our said grace to our subjects, and in things righteously shewed to us, have ordained and deemed, by the assent and agreement of both the said parties, and of our most entirely beloved wife Elizabeth queen of England, Edward our first begotten son, Richard our second son duke of York, our cousin Henry duke of Buckingham, and dame Catherine his wife, Thomas marquis of Dorset, Antony earl Rivers, John earl of Huntingdon and Elizabeth his daughter, Thomas lord Maltravers and dame Margaret his wife, Anne lady Grey, George lord Grey and dame Anne his wife, George lord Strange and Joan his wife, and sir Richard Wydevile, knight [the presumptive heirs of sir Edward], by these presents award, judge, and ordain, that the said dame Eleanor and Thomas Stafford shall have the said manor of Doddeford, with pertinencies to the said dame Eleanor and Thomas, and to the heirs of his body, remainder to dame Eleanor and her heirs, "quiete arrayne" the said sir Edward and his heirs for ever, and against all other that have any title in law or in conscience to the said manor by reason of the last will of dame Jaquete late duchess of Bedford; and that the said sir Edward, and all those that have any interest or title to the said manor to the use of sir Edward, shall release and quit-claim all their right and title to dame Eleanor and Thomas; and also that sir Edward shall suffer, do, and cause to be done, as much as in him by record or otherwise, all such things for the surety of the manor to dame Eleanor and Thomas as shall be advised by them, or by the learned counsel of them or either of them, at their cost; wherefore they, or one of them, shall content and pay to sir Edward £200 sterling; and we, for the full perfect appeasing of the said variances for ever, of our bounteous grace, have promised good and lawful letters patent to be made by us to sir Edward of as much lands and tenements as the yearly value thereof shall come to the sum of £50 above all charges, to have and to hold to him and the heirs of his body, remainder to such persons, to have and to hold to them in such manner as the said dame Jaquete, by her last will, willed and declared should have had the said manor of Doddeford; and that dame Eleanor and Thomas shall release all manner of trespass to sir Edward, and to such other of his servants as he will name to them, or either of them; to the which, this our award indented, we award that either of the said parties write in these indentures that they to this award be agreable, and to the same set interchangeably their seals; that one part thereof to remain with sir Edward, and the other part thereof to remain with dame Eleanor and Thomas. In witness whereof to these present letters of our award we have set our seal and sign; and for the more perfect agreement of the same our best beloved wife Elizabeth queen of England hath set her sign, Edward our first begotten son, Richard our second son duke of York, our said cousin Henry duke of Buckingham and dame Catherine his wife, Thomas marquis of Dorset, Antony earl Rivers, John earl of Huntingdon and Elizabeth his daughter, Thomas lord Maltravers and dame Margaret his wife, Anne lady Grey widow, George lord Grey and dame Anne his wife, George lord Strange and Joan his wife, and sir Richard Wydevile, have severally put their sign to these our present letters of award. And for the more perfect knowledge of the said agreement, Thomas by the grace of God archbishop of Canterbury and cardinal of England, Thomas archbishop of York, John bishop of Ely, Edward bishop of Chichester, John bishop of Lincoln, John Touchet of Audley, knight, William Hastings lord Hastings, Richard Fynes lord Dacre, and John Dynham of Dynham, knight, have at our request to the said letters set their signs, at Westminster, in our palace, 15th June, in the 21st year of our noble reign (1481)[n].

Thus was this manor assigned to an undisputed possessor, after being subjected to illegal descent, or legal contention for upward of a century. Thomas Stafford, esq. son and heir of dame Eleanor, dying s. p. in 9 Hen. 8 (1517) the family estates devolved on his nephew Humphrey Stafford, of Blatherwick, esq.[o] afterwards knighted, whose son sir Humphrey Stafford of Kirby, by indenture of bargain and sale 20 July 38 Hen. 8 (1546), conveyed the manor of Dodford and all lands thereto belonging in Dodford and Farthingstone [Dodford Wood, &c.], except all wards, marriages, and profits of courts, and a rent-charge of £64. 2s. 11½d. per ann. to

John Wyrley of Dodford, gent. and Dorothy his wife in fee tail[n]. The reserved covenants were released to him in 24 Eliz. (1581-2) by John Stafford, esq. of Blatherwick, son of sir Humphrey Stafford of Kirby, deceased, and brother and administrator of sir Humphrey Stafford, deceased; but the rent-charge remained on the estate till 1775, when it was extinguished by Lucy Knightley, esq.[o] John Wyrley, esq. grandson of the purchaser, in 1647 made a settlement in trust to the use of his will or appointment, and in default (subject (int. al.) to annuity of £60 to his daughter Dorothy), devised the seignory and manor of Dodford in moieties in fee tail to his daughters

Anne, wife of Henry Saunderson, esq. and Jane, wife of William Colley, esq.; by virtue of which one moiety passed to John Colley, esq. eldest son of Jane; and the surviving trustee in 1675 reciting that there was no surviving issue of Henry Saunderson, esq. conveyed the other moiety to

Henry Benson, esq. eldest son of Anne by Richard Benson, esq. her second husband[n]. In 1677 he contracted for the purchase of the other moiety with Caius Gabriel Cibber, gent. and Jane his wife, sister and heir of John and Edward Colley, esquires. A conveyance was executed in 1678, but a long litigation ensued in law and equity. By a decree in chancery 1 Jac. 2 (1685) the purchase was confirmed, and in 1701 Anne widow of Edward Colley, esq. and Thomas Wodhull, esq. her second husband, Colley Cibber, gent., rev. Lewis Cibber, Theophilus Parsons, gent. and Veronica his wife, the sons and daughters of C. G. Cibber and Jane his wife, deceased, joined in levying a fine to Henry Benson, esq. in fee[n].

Being thus possessed of the entire seignory and manor, he settled it, with all his other estates in possession or reversion, by deed 20 Mar. 1722-3 in moieties on his two daughters

Elizabeth Christiana, and Jane Grey [p]. The former died unmarried 14 March 1730-1, having by will devised her moiety to her sister, then wife of Lucy Knightley, esq. from whom it has passed by the same title as FAWSLEY [p] to sir Charles Knightley, bart. who, though not the representative, is of the blood of William Keynes the Norman grantee; the only alienation of this manor since domesday, being to John Wyrley, grandson of Guy Wyrley, by Jane daughter of sir Humphrey and dame Eleanor Stafford, coheiress of Keynes.

On the patrimonial division between Ralph and Richard Keynes, Dodford was constituted the caput honoris of the former, and amongst the Knightley evidences is the "Rental renewed and made 28 July 3 Hen. 7" (1488) of the tenants that hold of the manor of Dodford by knight's service, as "appearith by presidents [precedents] in "11 Edw. 1 (1282) of the endowments of Dame Hawis de Keynes." There were then fourteen mesne manors dependant on this barony in Bruckhole and Muscott, Flore and Clasthorp, Harleston, Heyford, Holdenby, Spratton (including Little Creaton), Hanington, Thurnby, Yelvertoft, Walton near Aynho, and Astrop; all of which places, with the exception of the last, are still within the jurisdiction of its view of frank pledge or court leet. The court rolls are extant from the beginning of the reign of Hen. 6. Both court leet and court baron are held half-yearly.

Luffield Priory had rents here, valued in the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3) [s], and 1291 (20 Edw. 1) [r], at 43s. per ann. Henry Michell, esq. died 2 Oct. 2 Hen. 8 (1510), seised of a messuage called Michell's Place, and two virgates of land in Dodford held of the abbey of Westminster as of the priory of Luffield, with other lands in Dodford, Flore, Eydon, and Haselbech, and William Trist (of Maidford) was found to be next heir, aged 38 years [s]. The Trist estate at Dodford afterwards came to Valentine Wyrley, younger son of Francis Wyrley, esq. whose two daughters and coheiresses Mary Butlin widow, and Jane Hogg widow, sold it in 1680 to Henry Benson, esq. and the deed of conveyance is endorsed "sale of Michell's manor in Dodford [t]." This manor in gross was nominally conveyed by the earl of Sussex with the impropriate rectory and advowson in 1700-1, but no manor is noticed in any of the subsequent conveyances of the estate.

Daventry Priory had a virgate of land in Dodford of the gift of William son of Ralph de Keynes, and confirmed by his son William de Keynes [u]. It is omitted in the taxation of 1254 and 1291, but valued in the cardinal's bundle, 16 Hen. 8 (1524-5), at 15s. per ann. [x]

Anthony Williams and John Conyers, gents. had a grant 7 Edw. 6 (1553) of a virgate and a half of land in Dodford, late parcel of king Henry 8th's college at Oxford[z], which they sold the following month to William Gent, gent. of NORTON.

CANONS ASHBY PRIORY had the fourth part of a virgate of land in Dodford of the gift of William de Keynes for the souls of himself and his wife Gunnora[a]; and confirmed by his son Richard de Keynes[a].

BROOMSGROVE CHANTRY in Worcestershire had a rent charge of £6. 13s. 4d. per ann. out of this manor, which was granted in 1605 to Richard Duncombe, esq.[b] of whom it was purchased by John Wyrley, esq. the lord of the manor.

THE MANOR HOUSE stood south of the church-yard.

THE VILLAGE is skirted by the great turnpike road to Chester through Daventry, from which place it is distant three miles. It occupies a narrow valley traversed by a small rivulet fed by springs principally rising in this lordship. Bridges states the number of houses to be 'one and twenty,' and 'five others dispersed in the fields[b].' By the census of 1801 it contained 39 houses and 205 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 40 houses and 236 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 43 houses and 247 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax is £129. 4s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2459. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £320. 8s. at 4s. in the £. The wake follows the Sunday after St. Michael.

ADVOWSON. The church of Dodford with all its pertinences was given by Hugh de Keynes with the consent of Richard de Keynes his heir to the priory of Luffield recently founded by the earl of Leicester, their paramount lord, and confirmed by Alexander bishop of Lincoln[c] between 1123 (23 Hen. 1) and 1147 (12 Steph.) The donation of Hugh and Richard was recited and renewed in pure and perpetual alms by Ralph de Keynes[d], who made a second grant of it for the souls of his father and his ancestors[e], the preamble to which being addressed to William archdeacon of Northampton fixes the date between 1144 (9 Steph.) and 1168 (14 Hen. 2). These grants were included in the general confirmation of their possessions by pope Alexander 3rd[e] between 1159 (5 Hen. 2) and 1181 (27 Hen. 2), and afterwards specially confirmed by St. Hugh bishop of Lincoln[e]. Robert archbishop of Canterbury, on a visitation of the diocese of Lincoln in 1270 (54 Hen. 3), certified the title of the priory of Luffield to the appropriated church of Dodford[f]. The priory was in 1500 (15 Hen. 7) annexed to the abbey of Westminster, to which it continued a cell till the dissolution in Jan. 1539-40 (31 Hen. 8).

The possessions of the late abbey of Westminster at Dodford were included in the endowment of the dean and chapter of Westminster in 1542[g] (34 Hen. 8), but resumed by the crown, and granted as parcel of Luffield in 1551 (5 Edw. 6) to sir Nicholas Throgmorton or Throckmorton[h] of PAULERS PERY.

This estate was assigned to Mary second daughter and coheiress of sir Arthur Throckmorton eldest son of sir Nicholas. She was the first wife of sir Peter Temple of Stowe in Buckinghamshire, bart. and on the decease s. p. of her only surviving daughter and heiress Anne, widow of Thomas Roper viscount Baltinglass in Ireland, it passed, probably by will—as there were descendants of the eldest daughter of sir Arthur living—to Thomas Dacre earl of Sussex grandson of Elizabeth third daughter of sir Arthur. In Feb. 1700-1 the earl sold the reputed manor in gross of Dodford called Michael's manor, the impropriate rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Dodford to Thomas Hewitt of Warwick, M. D. who devised his estate here by will to his nephew Thomas Hewitt, whose son Charles Hewitt of Atherstone in Warwick, esq. sold it in 1775 under the description of a messuage and the "parsonage grounds" to Stephen Watson of Thrupp in the parish of Norton, gent. whose son's widow is the present possessor.

THE ADVOWSON of the vicarage was purchased of Dr. Hewitt by the family of Welchman, of whom it was purchased by Robert Andrew, esq. of Harleston, father of the present patron.

THE RECTORY was valued in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[i] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[k] at 14 marks (£9. 6s. 8d.) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) the profits, as farmed of the abbey of Westminster, were rated at £10 per ann.[l]

The impropriate rectory consists of 100 acres of land, awarded under the deed of inclosure, in lieu of the great tithes.

THE VICARAGE is in the deanry of Daventry. The church is appropriated to the priory of Luffield and 'the 'vicarage ordained in the time of Hugh Wells bishop of Lincoln[m].' It was valued in the taxations of 1254[n] and 1291[k] at 6½ marks (£4. 6s. 8d.) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 at £10. 3s. per ann. deducting 3s. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[l]. By the deed of inclosure in 1623 (21 Jac.) 138 a. 2 r. 9 p. were allotted to the vicar in lieu of the glebe land and small tithes. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified the living to be a vicarage worth £70 per ann. in the patronage of lord Roper of the house of Baltinglass[o].

THE VICARAGE HOUSE stands in the village north of the church, and is a commodious residence built by the last incumbent.

Valentine Lane, B. D. already noticed under SPRATTON, was presented by sir Arthur Throckmorton of PAULERS PERY, and inst. 9 Oct. 1613. He resigned Spratton on obtaining this benefice, but retained the rectory of Stoke Goldington in Buckinghamshire[q]. He was buried here 22 Mar. 1624-5[q], and

William Pilkington was presented by the same patron and inst. 13 May 1625. He had been rector of Paulers Pery from 1602, but resigned on accepting this vicarage. He was brother of Thomas Pilkington of Northampton, gent. who entered his pedigree in the visitation of 1618, and whose son sir Thomas Pilkington was lord mayor of London in 1689, 1690, and 1691. On his decease,

Samuel Marshall, A. M. vacated the rectory of Water Stratford in Buckinghamshire, which he had held from 1617[q], and was inst. 6 Oct. 1641, on the presentation of sir Peter Temple, bart.* He died 18 June 1679, and was buried here, when

James Stewart was presented by Anne vicountess Baltinglass, and inst. 12 Dec. following. He died 17 June, and was buried here 19 June 1707, aged 59[q]; and in November following

William Welchman of Alban Hall, Oxf. A.M. was inst. on the presentation of Gilbert Gunter, gent. when he resigned the vicarage of Cotterstock with Glapthorn to which he had been presented in May. He died 12 June, and was buried here 16 June, 1749[q], aged 71; when

John Welchman of Hart Hall, Oxf. A.M. was presented by John Welchman of Brackley, gent. and inst. 22 June. He was buried here 22 June 1771[q], and his nephew

Richard Welchman of Worcester coll. Oxf. A.B. was inst. 18 Feb. 1772 on his own presentation. He was also rector of Preston Bagot in Warwickshire, and dying in Oct. 1800, John Fisher, A. M. was presented by his father in law Robert Andrew, esq. of Harleston, and inst. 13 Mar. 1801. He was rector of Brockhole from 1794 to 1806.

THE COMMUNION PLATE consists of a small chalice, a cover, and a large paten of silver, the gift of the hon. Mrs. Benson.

THE REGISTERS commence in 1581. The baptisms and marriages are perfect: there is an hiatus in the burials from 1667 to 1720, but copies of entries relating to the incumbents and lords of the manor are preserved in Taylor's collections in the British Museum[r].

THE CHURCH is situated on a gentle elevation between the Chester road and the village. It is dedicated to St. Mary, and consists of a tower containing six bells, nave, north aisle, south porch, and chancel. The lower part of the tower, and the whole of the north aisle except the east end, are lighted by lancet windows with expanding embrasures and are probably anterior to the thirteenth century. The nave is of subsequent erection, and has only two high narrow windows of uniform construction divided into two lights by mullions intersected by a transom. The porch is nearly the height of the nave and had formerly a room over it. The chancel was rebuilt a few years since. The tower is 15 ft. long by 12 ft. wide; the nave 55 ft. 9 in. by 24 ft.; the north aisle 32 ft. 8 in.; and the chapel 23 ft. 3 in. by 17 ft. 7 in.; and the chancel 20 ft. 3 in. by 14 ft. 2 in. The interior is indifferently paved, and principally fitted up with square pews. The arch between the nave and the tower is closed. On the north side of the nave are three small clerestory windows, beneath which are blazoned on the wall—I. Benson, impaling O. a fess wavy between six billets S. inscribed "Henry Benson, esq. and Frances Dumbleton, 1620." II. Benson and Wirley quarterly, impaling Grey of Groby, inscribed "Ecclesia Reparata 1714. Henrico Benson Ar. Dom. de Dodford." III. Benson impaling Wyrley, inscribed "Richard Benson esq. and Ann Wirley, 1650." The nave is divided from the north aisle by four large equilateral arches on octangular pillars with plain capitals. The octagonal plinth of the font is attached to the north side of the western pillar. The base is circular, supporting a shaft of the same shape but larger dimensions and richly ornamented †. The east end of the aisle is railed off, and appropriated to a chapel or burial place for the lords of the manor. On one side of the east window which retains slight traces of painted glass, is a bracket for a statue, and on the other, at the foot of the Cressy tomb is a trefoil headed piscina. The chancel is approached from the nave by an ascent of four steps, under a pointed arch partly closed, under which is an open carved screen of wood.

THE NORTH CHAPEL contains some very interesting ancient tombs. III. On the south side is a plain low wide table of Purbeck marble. On a slab in the centre reclines the cross-legged effigy of sir William Keynes who died in 1344 (18 Edw. 3), for to him it may be safely attributed, he being the only individual recorded to have been buried here. He is in a hauberk of ringed mail of a very peculiar construction, being banded between each row of rings. His hood or chaperon de mailles is drawn over his chin and forehead, and upon it is a round helmet with a projecting fillet down the front. A circular plate is strapped on the elbow, and the knees are protected by genouailles. His tunic scarcely reaches to the knees, and in the opening below the sword-belt, the mail skirts terminate, and leave an interval of drapery down to the genouailles. The shield approaching to an oval shape bears the arms of Keynes; it is hung on the left arm, and is fastened by a belt over the right shoulder. The gauntlets are divided into fingers. His left hand grasps his scabbard, into which his right hand has just returned his sword. His legs are slightly crossed at the knees so as to rest nearly in a straight position. A long, and a lozenge cushion are under his head, and his feet are placed on an animal *.

IV. In the middle of the north wall is an obtusely pointed arch with bold deep mouldings continued in the basement, which is nearly parallel with the table of two altar tombs placed beneath. The hood-mould springs from corbel heads, and the under part is ornamented with a series of flat four-leaved flowers.

On the inner tomb is a rude wooden figure of a female, now despoiled of both arms. Her head rests on two cushions, the under one, square; the upper, lozenge shaped. She has on a veil straight over her forehead and pendant to her shoulders, uniting near the temples to a wimple which covers the lower part of her chin and the whole of her neck. Her vest, hollowed out at the side, and partially disclosing her kirtle and band, conforms to her shape down to the waist, and from thence descends in formal perpendicular folds to her feet, which press on a mutilated animal.

V. Immediately in front of, and attached to the last tomb, is another, on which is the recumbent figure in stone of a female with hands elevated in devotion, no less rudely executed than the preceding. The costume bears a general resemblance to its companion, but the veil is confined round the head with a fillet, there is no wimple, and the hair flows in ringlets to the top of the vest, which is so low as to leave the neck wholly exposed. Her head reposes on cushions sustained by two angels, and at her feet is a mutilated animal.

The front of the tomb is divided by piers into five compartments in which are alternately placed a knight holding a sword and a female veiled; and in each intervening pier is a blank shield suspended from a talbot's head. Over the figures are trefoil-headed ogee arches with crockets and finials connected to the piers by crocketted pediments raised on small talbots' heads. Both the arch and the monuments exhibit traces of having been originally painted. The veil and wimple of the wooden figure appear to have been red, and the vest green.

No armorial bearings nor inscriptions assist in identifying these effigies, but they were not improbably intended for Wentiliana the granddaughter, and Elizabeth the daughter of the above sir William Keynes, who were both successively ladies of the manor.

VI. At the east end of the south side on a high stone plinth is a fine altar tomb of alabaster for sir John Cressy, who is represented bare-headed with short round hair, in a rich suit of plate armour having mail gorget or collar, pouldrons of a very unusual form, somewhat resembling a deep cape, jointed gauntlets ornamented on the knuckles, genouailles, and spur straps buckled on as in modern times. A collar of SS adorns his neck. A studded belt crosses his body transversely; on the hilt of the sword—the only part remaining—is inscribed I. H. S. His head lies on a tasselled helmet crested with the bust of a bearded man wreathed round the temples and holding a shield. On the sides of the tomb in large compartments are angels holding shields, and in smaller ones, figures—now headless—under trefoiled arches. At the west end two angels hold a shield bearing quarterly Cressy and Mortimer, on an inescocheon Keynes. The shields on the north side bear—I. Cressy. II. Keynes. III. Mortimer. IV. a fess wavy between three mitres ....; and on the south side V. quarterly in the fess point a mullet ..... VI. Mortimer. VII. Keynes. VIII. Cressy. Slight indications of the tomb having been originally gilded and painted are still traceable.

Round the ledge:

Sacred
to the Memory of
ELIZABETH SLADE
Wife of the Revd JAMES SLADE
Curate of this Parish
(and Vicar of Winsford in Somersetshire) who after bearing a very long & painful illness with singular fortitude & resignation departed this life Oct. 29th 1814, aged 61 Years.
As a wife & mother there has seldom been her equal and none of her friends or acquaintance need to be reminded of her worth:
Stranger, this memorial is for thee.
Learn thou that com'st to read with curious eye,
From her learn how to live & how to die;
In health's bright hour prepare to meet thy God.
Doth heaven afflict? be meek & kiss the rod;
Reader, be thine the FAITH that works by LOVE,
And HOPE shall light thee to the realms above.

Free School, &c. Mr. Joseph Cooke of Dodford, by will dated 12 May 1779, devised the interest of £100, in trust, for putting out one poor child of the parish, either boy or girl, as an apprentice; and the interest of £500 after the decease of Hannah his wife, in trust, for endowing a charity school in Dodford for such poor children of the parish whose parents do not hold, own, rent, or occupy lands of the rent or value of £10 per ann. to be taught by the schoolmaster chosen by the trustees and vicar of Dodford, the church catechism, the principles of the christian religion, reading and writing "true English," and arithmetic. Mrs. C. died in 1802, and the school was opened in 1804.

Robert Dodford, a learned Benedictine Monk, was a native of this village. He is said by Bale to have flourished about 1370, but Pitz places him a century earlier. He was educated in Ramsey abbey, where he became librarian, and devoted his time to the study of Hebrew. He wrote Postills on the Proverbs and other sermons, "which," says Fuller, "the envy of time hath intercepted from us."

EVERDON

Parish includes Great and Little Everdon, and Snoscomb.

The orthography of Everdon has not varied since the domesday survey. Its etymology is nevertheless very obscure; but probably bears some reference to the downs which for a considerable distance environ the parish.

Great and Little Everdon were inclosed by act of parliament 4 Geo. 3 (1764), and contain about 1800 acres; of which the lessees of the provost and fellows of Eton college, lords of the manor, have about 130 acres; the rector, in right of his church, about 155 acres; Mrs. Temperance Cleaver about 480 acres; general sir John Doveton, K. C. B. about 190 acres; sir Charles Knightley, bart. of Fawsley about 140 acres; Mr. Henry Hickman of Newnham about 100 acres; and Mr. Samuel Goodman about 100 acres, including about 40 acres as lessee under Eton college. It is bounded on the north by Newnham; north-east, by Dodford; east, by Wedon; south, by Farthingston; south-west, by Preston Capes; and west, by Fawsley.

The soil in the valley is a deep rich loam, and on the hills a light sandy loam. There is scarcely any arable land in the lordship except on the hills. The following scarce plants have been found here. Asplenium marinum, Sea Spleenwort, in the road from Fawsley *. Asplenium Scolopendrium, Hart's-tongue, a well in the village. Equisetum fluviatile, river Horse-tail, sides of the brooks.

Several brooks run through this lordship; and near the entrance to the village from Wedon over what is called the Fawsley water is a small stone bridge of two arches, which, from the character of the mouldings, must be of considerable antiquity.

Manorial History. Baieux Fee†. In the time of Edward the confessor "Everdone" was the freehold of Bern, and rated at 5*s.* yearly, but doubled in value at the domesday survey, when it was held by William (Peverel) of the fee of the bishop of Baieux. It was in the soke or jurisdiction of Fawsley and contained half a hide. The arable land was one caruca te in demesne with two villeins and two bordars. There were six acres of meadow[t].

Manor or Cell of Bernay Abbey. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 the monks of Bernay were certified to hold two hides and a half and two small virgates in Everdon[u]. The abbey of Bernay was of the Benedictine order situated in the diocese of Lisieux in Normandy, and founded by Judith wife of Richard second Duke of Normandy. In the portion of the Testa de Nevill which may be dated between 31 and 40 Hen. 3 the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented that there were four hides in "Ev'don" which, with the exception of ten virgates, were held by the abbot of Bernay who was lord of the manor, but did suit twice a year to the hundred court of Fawsley, and rendered 4*s.* (yearly) to the king[x]. This 4*s.* was in consideration of a view of frank pledge (or court leet) with its appendages; for in reply to a writ of quo warranto exhibited against the abbot in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) he pleaded that this privilege was allowed to his predecessor at the last iter on payment of 4*s.* yearly to the king. The abbot claimed also waifs in his manor, but the jury found that neither he nor his predecessors had liberty of waif, though he had seized a brood mare (jumentum) under pretence thereof; and having punished offenders against the assize of bread and beer by a fine of one mark, instead of the legal punishment of tumbril and pillory, the view was seized into the king's hands, but restored to him for a fine of half a mark[y].

The principal cell of the abbey of Burnay in England was at Okeburn in Wiltshire, and according to Dugdale and Tanner another was placed at Everdon. This establishment however, I apprehend, was nothing more than a little colony of monks imported from the parent abbey, for the better management of their estate, under the superintendence of a prior nominated by the abbot and removeable at pleasure. The revenues of all the alien priories, from the time of Edward 1, were forfeited to the crown during the wars between this kingdom and France, and restored on the return of peace; but in the parliament at Leicester in 2 Hen. 5 (1414) the whole of them, amounting to one hundred and forty-two[z], were totally suppressed, and their possessions given to the king and his heirs[a].

King Henry the 6th, on the foundation of Eton college near Windsor, in 1440 (19 Hen. 6), endowed it (int. al.) with the alien priories of Creting and Everdon, and all the appurtenances, portions, pensions, and rights, in the counties of Suffolk and Northampton[b]. The charter of the college with additional grants was confirmed by parliament in 1444 (23 Hen. 6)[c], and by king Edward the 4th in the first year of his reign (1461)[d].

A junior branch of the noble family of SPENCER, of whom a pedigree is subjoined, removed from Badby to Everdon, on becoming lessees of Eton college manor, and continued to reside here till the extinction of the male line.

The manor has not been subsequently granted out, and is now vested in the provost and fellows of Eton college, who annually hold a court leet and baron. The demesne lands containing about 130 acres are demised on beneficial leases renewable every seven years, and there are about 170 acres of copyhold.

The customs of the manor are the same as those of Wedon.

WAUNDEVILLE LANDS. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 Ralph de Waundeville and Walter were certified to hold four small virgates each in Everdon[e]. In the Testa de Nevill about 25 Hen. 3 (1241) Geoffrey de Waundeville, probably son of the above, was returned to hold two parts of a fee in Sewell, Braddon, and Everdon, of the fee of William Albini of Beauvoir[f], and in another part he was found to hold four virgates here and to pay the king 3s. yearly[g].

HONOR OF HUNTINGDON *. DAVENTRY PRIORY OR LITTLE EVERDON MANOR. Hugh de Leycestre or Viccomes †, for the welfare of his soul and of his lord Simon, gave to the prior and convent of Daventre, of his own foundation, all the land of Edric de Everdon in Everdon, containing six virgates and three parts of a virgate, with inland and outland and meadow, at a rent of 20s. yearly[h]; which grant was ratified by Simon earl of Northampton, whose father had given the said lands to Hugh[h]. Nicholas abbot of Bernay granted to Hugh de Leycestre and his heirs a mill which Hugh had made on the abbey land in Everdon, on his covenanting to continue the payment to the church of Everdon[i]. Abbot Richard confirmed the grant of this mill to the prior and convent of Daventry[i]; and Richard prior of Cretyng quit-claimed it to them before all the hundred of Fawsley[k]. Hugh le Botiller of "Snokescumb" released to them the mill in Everdon called the sheriff's mill and lands for the repair thereof; and it was further released by John Lovel (of Snoscomb) in 52 Hen. 3 (1267)[k]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 it was certified that Hugh Viccecomes had eight small virgates in Everdon which the monks of Daventry then held[e]. The prior and convent enfeoffed the family of Juvene or Young of these lands, and in the Testa de Nevill, Robert Juvene was found to hold six virgates here, and to do suit at the hundred court[g]. In 17 Edw. 2 (1323) Nicholas Young having claimed view of frank pledge of his tenants in Everdon relinquished his right to the prior of Daventry[l], who was summoned by writ of quo warranto in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) to substantiate his claim; when he pleaded prescription, but the jury presenting that none of his predecessors had exercised this privilege here, and himself only once, it was disallowed, though his tenants at Everdon were found subject to his view of frank pledge at Daventry[m].

Edmund Newenham, esq. died 23 Mar. 1506-7 (22 Hen. 7) seised of the manor of Everdon Parva, one moiety held of the prior of Daventry, and the other of the provost of Eton, and also of the manor of Newbold and lands in Everdon Magna and Farthingston, leaving Edmund his son and heir aged 38 years[n]. On the survey of Daventry priory about 1530 it was reported that "Edmund Newnham squire" holdeth freely of the lord his manor place of Everdon with certain other lands in the same town, and ought to pay yearly to the lord 25s. viz. for his manor place 20s. and for other lands 5s. which he has hitherto not paid, for his father had it in fee of the house [priory] of Daventry, and by that means it had like to have grown out of knowledge. The said Newnham required "sparing "and leesure" to search his evidences, and if he can find no discharge then to pay the said sum[o].

The pedigree of this family has been given under Newbold down to sir Thomas Newnham, who alienated that manor, and probably this manor also. The estate was disposed of in parcels, and no manorial rights are now claimed or exercised.

The Eton Manor House, formerly the cell to Bernay Abbey, stood at the east end of the village, and in the time of Bridges bore many marks of antiquity [p].

Little Everdon Manor House had degenerated into a common farm house, when it was purchased in 1809 by Gabriel Doveton, esq. a general in the East India service, and member of parliament for Lancaster, who converted it into a genteel residence, and died in May 1824, having by will devised his estate here to his brother sir John Doveton, K. C. B. a general in the East India service.

The Village is about five miles from Daventry, and is situated in a vale overlooked on the north, west, and south, by a range of hills. On the 13th of April 1786 a dreadful fire broke out here, about two o'clock in the afternoon, which in a few hours consumed above thirty dwelling-houses, besides out-offices. It was occasioned by a plumber's fire in the belfry, some sparks from which were blown by the wind out of the window upon a thatched building. Bridges states the number of houses to be 'seventy seven' in Great Everdon and 'seventeen' in Little Everdon [p]. By the census of 1801 Everdon contained 111 houses and 585 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 116 houses and 578 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 122 houses and 640 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax for this parish is £222. 17s. 10d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £4043. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £789. 14s. 4d. at 8s. in the £.

The wake is kept on the Sunday following (August 15th) the assumption of the virgin Mary.

The Advowson was included in the grant to the abbey of Bernay. In 1 Hen. 4 (1400) the king granted it to Hemwood priory in Warwickshire [q], and a licence of appropriation was obtained from pope Innocent 7th in 1404 [r]; but the donation was never carried into effect. With this exception—if it be one—the advowson has been immemorially appendant to the principal manor, and passed with it to the provost and fellows of Eton college.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Daventry. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3) [s] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1) [t], it was rated at 16 marks (£10. 13s. 4d.) per ann. At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it was valued at £24. 13s. 4d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton [u]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be in the patronage of the provost and fellows of Eton, and worth £106 per ann. [x] The commissioners of inclosure awarded 153 a. 1 r. 32 p. of land, and an annual rent charge of £100 in lieu of the glebe and tithes of Everdon; besides which the rector is entitled to the tithes of Snoscomb.

The Rectory House stands in the village, west of the church, and has been much improved of late years.

Mast. Reginald de Undele, 3 Aug. 1220.

Silvester de Everdon, chaplain, by the abbot and convent of Bernay, 1235. He was also rector of Hanslope in Buckinghamshire. He had the wardship of Hugh Lunell of Farthingstone about the time he was presented to this rectory, and in 1246 was appointed lord chancellor of England, but resigned the following year on obtaining the bishopric of Carlisle, which he enjoyed seven years, and died 13 May 1254. He has been generally classed by biographers amongst the eminent natives of Bedfordshire, but this village has a much fairer claim to the honor of his birth place than Everdon in that county, and he was not improbably son of the Randolph de Everdon who held the manor and advowson at farm in 1218.

Robert Fitz Walter, subdeacon, 1218.

William Paschet, subdeacon, by Matthew de Cornellis, procurator general of the abbot and convent of Bernay, 19 June 1263.

Sir Henry Patowe, priest, 26 Nov. 1419.

John Crukerne, clerk, by the king, 30 Oct. 1420.

William Hawekyns, priest, 3 May 1439.

Mast. William Westbury, S.T.B. B.D. by the provost of the college of the blessed Mary of Eton, 2 Apr. 1469. He was probably son of the provost of that name who died in 1447.

Mast. William Petyver, priest, 13 May 1476. He was, I presume, the same person as William Petyfere, rector of Byfield from 1485 to 1496.

Mast. John Person, Pierson, or Peirson, S.T.B. 29 Apr. 1496. He was fellow of Eton, and rector of St. Alban's, Wood-street, London.

Mast. John Sparke, priest, 19 Aug. 1500. He was also fellow of Eton, and died in 1502.

Mast. Richard Sydnor, A.M.

Sir William Weste, priest, 18 Jan. 1522-3. He was fellow of Eton. By his will dated 2 Apr. 1529 he directed his body to be buried in the chancel here, and bequeathed his best horse and saddle for his mortuary to "my Lord of Lincolne[a]."

Mast. William Smyth, A.M. 28 May 1529. He was fellow of Eton.

George Atkinson was instituted 13 June 1573, on the presentation of Robert Newton, A.M. for this turn. He was fellow of Eton, and rector of St. Mere in Norfolk. On his resignation, John Barker, fellow of Eton, was inst. 3 Feb. 1575-6.

Matthew Bust, A.M. fellow of Eton, was rector of Everdon from 1593 to 1611, and died vice provost of Eton in May 1613, aged 69[a].

William Harrison, A.M. fellow and vice provost of Eton, was inst. 14 Nov. 1611, on the resignation of the last incumbent, but survived only a few months, and Adanis Robyns, A.M. another fellow of Eton, was inst. 25 Feb. 1611-2. He was rector also of Munxton in Hampshire in the patronage of King's college, Cambridge, and is recorded as a benefactor both to that college and Eton. He died 14 Apr. 1613, and was buried here on the 17th[b]. His successor,

Richard Wright, was also fellow of Eton. He compounded for the first fruits 3 June 1613[c], and was buried here 16 June 1638[b]. He was succeeded by another fellow of Eton,

David Stokes, S.T.P. who was inst. 19 Sept. 1638, and held also a canonry of Windsor, and the rectory of Binfield in Berkshire. He lived to re-enjoy those preferments of which he had been deprived during the civil war; but he had previously resigned this living, to which

Matthew Day, A.M. was inst. 10 Aug. 1642. In the proceedings of the parliamentary committee at Northampton the following minute is entered 18 May 1644: "Liberty is given for a fortnight to John Houghton "servant to M[r] Day Parson of Everdon to goe to his "master whom he sayes is at Windsor & to bring a Certi- "ficate fro' the governor there that he is there & not able "to come to North'ton or if he be able he is to appeare "here himselfe[d]." On the 24th he returned without bringing a certificate, and reported that his master "wished him to tell the committee he would not take "the Covenant." The living was in consequence sequestered, and on the 6th of Aug. Mr. George Leeson and Mr. Thomas Preston agreed with the committee "for the parsonage of Everdon with the tithes & gleeb "lands belonging to the same to hold the same from "Th'annunciation last for one whole yeare, for w[ch] they "are to pay to the said Committee the sum of £50 at "Mich'm's & Lady Day next by equall portions & alsoe "the weekly tax during the said terme & the charges of "the Curate." On the 24th of this month Mr. Day submitted an exculpatory narrative of his movements to the committee: he stated that "about last Lent he went "from Everdon to Mapell Durham three miles from "Reading to a brother there, where he continued till a "little before Easter & and then went to Sutton Courtein "in Com. Berks & there continued with one Doctor "Stokes [his predecessor at Everdon] till Friday last; "that for p'te of the tyme he was at Sutton the King's "garrison was at Abington which was about two miles "from Sutton; that after his estate was seized by ordi- "nance of Parliament his serv[t] was with him at Sutton "& gave him notice of the sequestration & that while "he was at Sutton he was two or three tymes at Oxford "but he went in the morning & came backe at night; "and that he fell sicke about 2 monethes since at Sut- "ton & was sicke about six weekes, and that when he "went to Reading it was to the barber, and to Oxford "to buy other things." No ulterior proceedings are recorded, but the sequestration was confirmed, and Nathaniel Cotton was admitted rector by the authority of parliament 25 Mar. 1646[b]. Walker, in his Sufferings of the Clergy, quoting Newcourt's Repertorium (vol. 1. p. 186), says Matthew Day, A.M. was "sequestered of "what Ecclesiastical Preferments he had for his Loyalty; "got at last to be Master of the Free School at Lewisham "near Greenwich in Kent; but after the Restoration, viz. "Aug. 7. 1660 he was admitted Vicar of Staines in Mid- "dlesex; and on the 25th of the same Month, to be Pre- "bend[ary] of Neasden [in St. Paul's]: Both which be- "came Void by his Death before Oct. 13. 1663." In a note subjoined Walker adds, "I have been otherwise "informed that M[r] Day was elected to King's College "from Eaton School in the year 1629; and that he was "sometime Parson of Eversdon in Northamptonshire; "and so possibly that was the Preferment he Lost in "the Rebellion. Quære."

Nathaniel Cotton, the successor of Day, was deprived or dead prior to 1655, in which year the incumbent was

Samuel Winston[e], A.M. who to strengthen his title after the restoration, and doubting perhaps the legality of his former admission, was instituted 7 Feb. 1660-1. He was buried here 24 Nov. 1680[b], and

Philip Fell, son of Dr. Fell bishop of Oxford and fellow of Eton and All Souls coll. Oxf. was inst. 30 Dec. following. He was also rector of Southmeer in Norfolk, and is supposed by Ant. A' Wood to have been author of Lex Talionis, &c. He died at Hereford 26 Feb. 1682-3, aged 49, and was buried in Worcester Cathedral.

Thomas Montague, of King's coll. Camb. A. M. fellow of Eton, and afterwards head master of Eton school, was inducted 23 June 1683[f], but resigned in a few months, and

Robert Young, a native of Kingston on Thames in Surrey, of King's coll. Camb. A. M. was inst. 26 Feb. 1683-4. He was an assistant at Eton school, and subsequently canon of Windsor, where he died 10 Aug. 1716. During his incumbency a school was maintained here at his expence. His successor,

Thomas Carter, of King's coll. Camb. A.M. and fellow of Eton, was inst. 15 Sept. 1716. He was a native of Birmingham, sometime assistant at Eton school, and afterwards master of Wisbeach school in the Isle of Ely, where archbishop Herring was one of his pupils. He died 3 Dec. 1745, aged 75, and was buried at Eton. He resigned this benefice on obtaining the rectory of Worplesdon in Surrey, and

William Antrobus, of King's coll. Camb. A. M. was inst. 21 Dec. 1726. He was uncle to the poet Gray, and many years assistant at Eton school. He was buried here 28 May 1742[f], and

Peter Layng, of King's coll. Camb. A. M. was inst. 10 Aug. 1742. He was an assistant at Eton school, and published "The judgment of Hercules imitated, from "the greek of Prodicus. Also a metrical paraphrase "on the 43rd chap. of Ecclesiasticus." Eton, 1748. 4to. In 1745 he was instituted to the rectory of Farthingston, which he continued to hold with this benefice. He was buried here 21 May 1778[f], and

William Hayward Roberts, D. D. who was afterwards provost of Eton, and will be further noticed under Whiston, was inst. 21 Aug. following. On his resignation,

Adam Langley, of King's coll. Camb. A. M. was inst. 11 Sept. 1779. He was buried here 6 Apr. 1789[f], and

John Hayes, of King's coll. Camb. A. M. was inst. 25 June 1789. He was son of judge Hayes of Holyport near Windsor, and held also the rectory of East Hendred in Berkshire. He died 29 Sept. 1806[g], and

Edward Barnard was inst. 21 Dec. 1806; who resigning this benefice on his acceptance of the vicarage of Bexley in Kent, William Philpot of Eton, and afterwards of Pembroke coll. Oxf. A. M. was inst. 10 Jan. 1809.

The Registers commence in 1558.

The Church dedicated to the Holy Virgin is a neat edifice consisting of a tower in which are five bells, nave, north and south aisles and porches, and chancel. Most of the windows in both aisles are of the decorated style and of uniform design—two trefoil-headed mullions surmounted by two horizontal elongated trefoils and a quatrefoil. The side windows of the chancel have only a single mullion simply curved in the head without tracery: the east window is of the same character, but extended to three mullions. The inner door of the south porch is a fine specimen of the decorated style about the time of the third Edward. The archivolt presents a sweep of six leading mouldings continued down the sides; the three alternate ones are circular with a fillet running up the front, and below the arch are converted into shafts having regular bases, and an horizontal fillet beneath capitals of woven foliage. Of the intermediate mouldings, the inner one is hollow and has the four-leaved flower at intervals; the second has the perforated ball at intervals; and the third, which is hollow, has a series of vine leaves attached to stems. The dripstone springs from corbel heads—the dexter one a king's, the sinister, a bishop's—and connects with a doubly foliated ogee canopy crowned with a finial. The inner hollow moulding of the arch is studded with detached roses.

The tower is 12 ft. 11 in. long, by 9 ft. 5 in. wide; the nave and aisles 68 ft. 9 in. long; the north aisle 15 ft. 8 in. the nave 25 ft. 4 in. and the south aisle 12 ft. 2 in. wide; and the chancel 45 ft. 1 in. long, by 22 ft. wide. The interior has been recently very neatly paved and pewed. The nave is divided from each aisle by four pointed arches resting on lofty circular pillars with the peculiarity of four equi-distant fillets running up them: the bases are square, and the capitals of plain mouldings. The font has a circular shaft supporting plain multangular faces. A portion of the south aisle is appropriated to the inhabitants of Snoscomb. The chancel is entered from the nave under a neat wooden screen beneath a lofty closed arch. On the south wall are two seats and a piscina on the same level, between plain piers under trefoiled arches with crocketted pediments. In the north wall, within the altar rails, under a plain dripstone, is a singular monumental arch, engrailed—to use an heraldic term—up the sides and terminating at the apex with a small ogee.

'[h]The church-yard of Everdon was polluted by murder, whilst Oliver Sutton was bishop of Lincoln, who in 1292 'granted a commission to the priors of Daventry and Ashby to reconcile it.'

THE INDEPENDENTS have a small meeting house here, 22 ft. 6 in. by 20 ft. 6 in. erected on ground given by Mr. James Barge of Wedon, and opened in 1813. William Folwell, esq. by will dated 30 Aug. 1813, bequeathed the interest of £500 towards the support of the minister.

BENEFACTIONS (p. 239). Lady [Mrs.] Spencer's charity is held upon trust for the repair of the church and bells, and of all bridges and common ways within the town of Everdon, and for all such other lawful and laudable uses as the majority of all the inhabitants of the said town for the time being (the cottagers only excepted) shall agree and declare. The present rental is £30 per ann.

CHARITY SCHOOL. William Folwell, esq. by will dated 30 Aug. 1813, bequeathed the interest of £500 towards establishing a charity school in Everdon, but the trustees not agreeing as to the construction of the will, a decree of chancery was obtained in 1822 by which the appointment of a master is in future to be vested in the rector and churchwardens.

The bequest of the late sir John Knightley, bart. of Fawsley, for the support of a Sunday-school here, now produces £5. 15s. per ann.

ROMAN COINS. In a field called Long Small in this parish, lying in the line which I have ventured to assign for the Roman road from Benaventa through Preston Capes and Woodford to the station of Brenavis, a few years since, amongst mortar and ashes, several roman coins were ploughed up, particularly of Contantine, Constantius, and Magnentius. Those of the latter have round the reverse Victoriæ D D. N. N. AUG. ET CÆS. and in the centre two figures of victory holding a kind of shield between them, inscribed VOT. V. MULT. X.

SNOSCOMB

Is written in domesday "Snochescumbe," and in early deeds "Snokescumbe," Snotescumbe," &c. It would be difficult to find a rational etymology for the first syllable, but the final one is obviously the saxon comb, or cumb, a valley. It occupies the southern side of the parish of Everdon, and contains about 640 acres of old inclosure; the whole of which belong to sir Charles Knightley of Fawsley, bart. the lord of the manor. The soil varies from stiff clay to a light red loam: about two-thirds is in permanent pasture. Hen-wood was stocked up a few years since, but there is still a wood of about 25 acres.

Manorial History. Moreton Fee*. Honor of Berkhampsted†. At the domesday survey William (Keynes) held from the earl of Moreton a virgate and a half in "Snochescu'be." The arable land was one carucate, with one servant and one villein and two acres of underwood. It was valued then at 10s. yearly as in the time of Edward the confessor, when it was the freehold of Turbern who had lands also in Easton Neston[i]. The other portion of "Snochescu'be," consisting of half a virgate and rated at 5s. yearly, was the saxon freehold of Alric, who held it as mesne lord at the domesday survey under the earl of Moreton. The arable land was one carucate, with one servant, one villein, and one acre of underwood[k].

In the hydarium of Hen. 2 Snohescombe was certified to contain four small virgates of the fee of the earl of Leicester[l], the paramount lord of Keynes. In the scutage of that portion of the Testa de Nevill, which may be placed about 18 Hen. 3 (1233), one fee in Eston Neston and Snoccu'be was returned to be parcel of Berkhampsted of the fee of William de Listrid[m] [Le Estre]. In 34 Hen. 3 (1249) Margaret (afterwards wife of William de Echingham) and Isabel wife of Thomas de Aldham, the two daughters and coheiresses of William de Montacute of Preston Capes, confirmed the third part of a knight's fee in "Snottescumbe" to Robert de l'Estre[n], which Robert, in 51 Hen. 3 (1266), at the instance of Robert de Everdon and Isabel his wife, granted it to John Lovell[o] the mesne lord of

The Manor. Philip Lovell held the manor of Snotescumbe in fee in the time of king John, and was succeeded by his son John Lovell, whose son sir John Lovell had two sons, John Lovell, senior, born out of wedlock, and John Lovell, junior, lawfully born. This manor was settled by the father at a yearly rent of 1d. on the former and his heirs, but his only son Giles Lovell died without issue. John Lovell, junior, the legitimate son, had issue another John Lovell, who had issue a third John Lovell, who had issue Philip Lovell[p], who was cousin and next heir of Giles, and in 41 Hen. 3 (1256) obtained a grant of free warren (int. al.) in "Snokescumb[q], which was confirmed to his son John Lovell of Titchmersh by an inquisition ad quod damnum in 8 Edw. 1[r] (1279). His right to this manor was contested by Roger Ray of Snotescumb, Alice his wife, and Robert their son, who claimed as heirs of Giles Lovell, but on default of their appearance, the king's writ issued to the sheriff of the county to give him seisin 12 July 21 Edw. 1[s] (1293). He was afterwards styled of this place, to distinguish him from his contemporary of both names, the baronial head of the family, and it is not a little singular that both were summoned to parliament in 28, 30, and 32 Edw. 1 and 6 Edw. 2, John Lovell "de Titchmershe" amongst the barons, and John Lovell "de Snotescumb" amongst the king's council[t].

His estates, on the failure of his line, devolved on his heir male John lord Lovell and Holland of Titchmarsh, who by deed dated at "Snottescumbe" 10 Feb. 14 Ric. 2 (1390-1), conveyed his manor of Snottescumbe in the parish of Everdon, with all lands, rents, and services, to

Sir Richard Abberbury and sir John Kentwode, Hugh Cotingham and Thomas More, clerks, John de Appelton and John de Everdon, clerk, in fee[u]. The latter was the real purchaser, for sir John Lovell (lord Lovell) is expressly stated to have purchased the manor of Snotescumbe in Wiltshire with the money for which he sold Snotescumbe in Northamptonshire to John de Everdon[v]. The family of Everdon had property here as late as the reign of Hen. 7. Whether they were then in possession of the manor, or when it was alienated to the Knightleys, is not known; but in 1534 (26 Hen. 8)

Sir Richard Knightley died seised (int. al.) of the manor of "Snottescombe," held of the king as (of the honor of Berkhampsted) parcel of the principality of Wales[w]; from whom it has descended with Fawsley to sir Charles Knightley, bart. the present proprietor.

The Manor House, now reduced to a farm house, the water-mill, and a cottage, include the whole of Snoscomb, but it is 'reputed to have been formerly a more considerable village[x].'

FARTHINGSTON,

Now commonly pronounced Farraxton, is written in domesday "Fordineston," in early records "Fardingston," and in later times Farthingston. It probably owes its name to a combination of the saxon ford, a ford, and tone, a town, as a small rivulet crosses the village, and there was an ancient ford in the valley below leading to Castle Dykes. The lordship was inclosed by act of parliament 24 Geo. 2 (1751), and contains about 1680 acres; of which sir Henry Hawley, bart. of Leybourn Grange in Kent, lord of the manor, has about 470 acres; the rector, in right of his church, about 190 acres; William Kilpin, esq. of King's Clere in Hampshire, about 170 acres; Mr. William Tilcock and Mr. William Harris about 160 acres each; William Grant, esq. of Litchborough and Mr. John Herbert about 150 acres each; and Thomas Reeve Thornton, esq. of Brockhall about 140 acres. It is bounded on the north by Everdon; on the east by Stowe; on the south-east by Litchborough; on the south by Maidford in Norton hundred; and on the west by Preston Capes. The soil of three-fourths of the lordship is a stiff clay: the remainder is good turnip land. Nearly half the lordship is in permanent pasture.

Dodford and Castle Dykes woods in this parish extend to upwards of 200 acres. An accurate account has been kept of the growth of a number of young oak trees in the former wood, the property of William Grant, esq. The trees were marked with paint, measured in exactly the same place each time, and the solid contents ascertained. The following table shews the result as to six of the largest and six of the smallest size. The first column (after the number) contains the height of the butt where the highest circumference was taken; another measure was taken at the bottom, and a third in the centre; from which three measurements the girth was ascertained as stated in the next column in feet and inches: the four following columns shew the solid contents at the different periods of measuring, in feet, inches, and quarters: the last column shews the increase of each tree in thirty years: and the "Observations" state the quality of each tree, and of the land on which it grows.

Several scarce plants have been found in this parish. Adoxa Moschatellina, tuberous Moschatel, on Mantel's heath[y]. Fagus Castanea, Chesnut-tree, in Stump's wood[y]. And all the following in Castle Dykes. Campanula patula, field Bellflower. Sambucus Ebulus, dwarf Elder. Narcissus Pseudo-Narcissus, common Daffodil. Sedum Telephium, Orpine, or Live Long. Prunus avium, Black Cherry-tree. Malva Moschata, musk Mallow. Hypericum pulchrum, upright St. John's-wort. Gnaphalium rectum, upright Cudweed. Lycoperdon defossum, leathery Puff-ball. Merulius infundibuliformis, funnel-shaped Merulius. Peziza calyculus, little-cup Peziza. There is a quarry of red stone on the heath, which is sometimes used for building. A rivulet rises from Longwell and Cruell springs in this parish, and after dividing Stowe and Litchborough runs into the Nen at Nether Heyford.

MANORIAL HISTORY. MORETON FEE*. HONOR OF LEICESTER†. BARONY OF KEYNES†. Prior to, and at the domesday survey the whole of "Fordinestone" was in the soke or jurisdiction of Fawsley, but was divided into two unequal portions, of both which the earl of Moreton was the Norman paramount lord. One hide and a half of the principal estate had been the saxon freehold of Ularic, and the remainder belonged to Orgar, Tedgar, and Godric. It was then rated at 20s. yearly, but at the survey was quadrupled in value, and held by William (Keynes) under the earl. The arable land was eight carucates. One was in demesne with two servants; a soldier ("miles") held one hide and a half and had two carucates with two servants; and six villeins and three bordars had two carucates. There were sixteen acres of meadow, and a wood four furlongs long and three broad[z]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 this fee in "Fardingstone" was certified to contain three hides and a small virgate[a]. The paramouncy was soon after granted to the earl of Leicester. The jurors of Fawsley hundred, between 34 and 40 Hen. 3, presented that there were four hides here, and that the tenants used to do suit at the hundred court, but the bailiff of the earl of Leicester had transferred the suit to the earl's court[b]; and in the hundred rolls 4 Edw. 1 (1275-6), it was returned that the earl had for 26 years past withheld suit at the hundred court and sheriff aid for Farthingston[c]." An intermediate seigniory under the honor of Leicester was enjoyed here by the family of Keynes, descended from William the domesday sub-tenant, and on the partition between the two branches* was assigned to Richard Keynes, the head of whose barony was at GRETWORTH. By early subinfeudations this estate was divided into two distinct mesne manors.

GATESDEN MANOR. In the Testa de Nevill about 19 Hen. 3 (1234-5) Walter de Gatesden was certified to hold one small fee in "Fardingeston" of the five fees of Richard de Keynes of the small fees of Moreton[d]; and in another part of the same record, between 31 and 40 Hen. 3, the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented him to be lord of the town[b]. In 9 Edw. 2 (1315) Richard de Bray and Richard de Lunell or Luvell were joint lords of "Fardingston[e]." This Richard de Bray, who was rector of Woodford[f] in Wardon hundred, died in 14 Edw. 2 (1320), and in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) Richard son of William de Swinford of Newbold having failed in substantiating his claim[g], released and quit-claimed to Richard Lunell and Emma his wife and their heirs, this manor in "Far-"thingstone[f]," which thus became united in ownership with the other, or LUNELL MANOR. Walter Lunell owed 40s. in 28 Hen. 2 (1181) for his right to three parts of a fee against Richard de Fardingeston[h]; and the following year rendered an account of one mark for licence of agreement[i], but their differences did not end here, for in 9 Ric. (1197) twelve knights were summoned to hold a grand assize between Walter Lunell, plaintiff, and Richard de Fardingeston, defendant, concerning lands in Fardingeston[k]. It has been already observed under KISLINGBURY that this family was indifferently written Luvell and Lunell, and that in the Testa de Nevill about 19 Hen. 3 (1234-5) Hugh Luvell, in ward to Silvester de Everdon, had two parts of a fee in Farthingston, and the third part in Kislingbury of the fees of Richard de Keynes, of the small fees of Moreton[l]. Philip Lunell, senior, great-grandson of Hugh, made a feoffment in 33 Edw. 3 (1359) of all his estates here and at Kislingbury; as to the lands, rents, and services of his original patrimony in "Fardyngestone" and "Kyselyngbury" to the use of himself and Alice his wife for life, remainder to Richard, senior, his son by Alice Blancfrount his former wife, Philip, Richard, junior, John and Katherine his children by Alice his then wife, successively in fee tail; and as to his lands, rents, and services in "Fardyngestone" formerly belonging to sir Richard de Bray, late rector of Woodford, to himself and Alice his wife for life, remainder to Philip and their other children successively in fee tail[m]. On the death of all her brothers s. p. Katherine entered into possession, and in 8 Hen. 4 (1406-7), with John Yate her second husband, conveyed her life interest to John Cok of Lilbourn, who in 2 Hen. 5 (1414-5) released and quit-claimed the manors of Over-court and Nether-court in "Far-"thyngston" and lands, &c. in "Kyslyngbury" to

Thomas Sydenhale, esq. son and heir of the said Katherine[m] by her first husband. The male line terminated in his son Thomas Sydenhale, esq. with whose eldest daughter and eventually sole heiress Joan, the family estates passed in marriage to

Thomas Shuckburgh of Shuckburgh in Warwickshire, esq. the seventh in descent from whom, sir John Shuckburgh, was created a baronet in 1660. His son sir Charles Shuckburgh, 2nd bart. settled the manor of Farthingston in 1684 on his intended marriage with his second wife Diana Verney for her jointure, with remainder to their issue male, by virtue of which settlement it descended to her eldest son Charles Shuckburgh of Longborough in Gloucestershire, esq.[m] by whom or his son sir Charles Shuckburgh 5th bart. it was sold to James Hawley of Leybourn Grange in Kent, esq. M. D. after having been transmitted in lineal succession nearly six centuries.

Dr. Hawley died in Dec. 1777, and was succeeded by his son Henry Hawley, esq. who was created a baronet in 1795, and is the present lord of this manor*.

Moreton Fee†. Daventry Lands or Manor. The other portion of "Fordinestone" alluded to at the commencement of the manorial history was included in the possessions of Leuric. It was then valued at 10s. yearly, and in the domesday survey at 15s. yearly, when it was held by Ingelram under Alured, who held it from the earl of Moreton. It consisted only of three virgates. The arable land was one caruncate, which was in demesne with two servants[n].

[n] Domesd. fo. 224. * Vide Gayton. † Vide Bugbrook.

In the hydarium of Hen. 2 this estate was described as seven small virgates held by William de Strafford (Stafford) of Henricus Belet[o]. Ralph de Leycestre quit-claimed by fine in 33 Hen. 3 (1248) to Ingelram de Farthyngston a carucate of land in Farthyngston, for the right to which a duel had been waged between them[p]. A few years after Robert de Grimscote was found to hold eight virgates here of the fee of Belet[q]. In 9 Edw. 3 (1335) sir Robert de Daventre* had a grant of free warren (int. al.) in Farthingston and Grimscote[r]; and in 20 Edw. 3 (1346) '[s] Edward de Daventre accounted for the fourth part of a knight's fee here, as held of the honor 'of Leicester.' William de Whatelee of Dunstaple and Isabella his wife, in 33 Edw. 3 (1359), conveyed the capital messuage and lands in "Fardyngeston," late John de Grymscote's, to Londy of Farthingston; to whom they were confirmed in 41 Edw. 3 (1367) by Simon son and heir of John, son and heir of sir Robert de Daventre[t]. In 9 Hen. 5 (1421) Thomas Russheton granted to Richard Knyghtley of Fawsley, esq. all the lands and tenements late John Londy's in "Farthyngston[u]." Sir Richard Knightley, in 12 Hen 8 (1520), made a settlement (int. al.) of Farthingston manor[v]; but his descendants have long since alienated all their property here.

St. James's Abbey near Northampton, besides a virgate of land which will be noticed under the advowson, had a culture in close here of the gift of John son of Ingelram de Farthingston[w]. After the dissolution they were granted, 7 Edw. 6 (1553), to Edward Aglionby and Henry Hugford[x].

The Manor House stands at the entrance of the village, and is in the occupation of the tenant of the estate.

The Village is about five miles from Daventry. In the time of Bridges the houses were 'forty-three, the 'town houses included, which are five?' By the census of 1801 this parish contained 45 houses and 230 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 42 houses and 208 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 48 houses and 265 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £104. 8s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815 amounted to £2214. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £394. 19s. 6d. at 6s. 6d. in the £. The wake is kept on the Sunday following the 15th of August.

The Advowson was attached to the Gatesden manor. Walter de Gatesden presented in 1231, and within the year following appears to have given the advowson to St. James's abbey near Northampton, and to have resumed it again; for in 17 Hen. 3 (1232-3) Walter abbot of St. James levied a fine of it to Walter de Gatesden and Matilda his wife, who granted to him at the same time a virgate of land and a messuage with pertinencies in Farthyngston[y], probably in compensation for its relinquishment. In 44 Hen. 3 (1260) Walter and his wife levied a fine of four acres of land and the advowson of "Farthyngston" to Richard (Gravesend) bishop of Lincoln[z], with whose successors in the see of Lincoln the patronage of this church has ever since continued.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Daventry. The abbey of St. James near Northampton had a pension of half a mark of silver yearly out of this church of the gift of Richard de Farthingston confirmed by Ingelram his son. A dispute having arisen between abbot Ralph (de Hecham) and John de Gernemue the rector, in 1291, respecting the arrearage of this pension, the latter purchased the perpetual remission of it for six marks[b]. This rectory was rated at 8⅔ marks (£5. 13s. 4d.) per ann. in the taxations of 1254[c] (38 Hen. 3) and 1291[d] (20 Edw. 1); and at £13. 19s. 6d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7½d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton, in the ecclesiastical survey of 1235[e] (26 Hen. 8). The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage in the patronage of the lord protector, worth £74 per ann. and that .... Hogg was the incumbent[f]. The rectory now consists of 187 a. 1 r. 20 p. of land allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of glebe lands and all tithes whatsoever.

The Rectory House is an indifferent building south of the church yard.

Ralph Barlow, B. D. inst. 28 June 1609, on the death of the last incumbent. On his resignation,

John Atkinson, A.M. was inst. 23 June 1610. He was buried here 6 Nov. 1627[j], and three days after

Richard Meredith, B. D. was inst. and again 2 Apr. 1629. He was rector of Wappenham from 1632 to to 1640, but held this benefice a few months only after his second institution,

William Dillon, LL.B. being inst. 17 Feb. 1629-30, and to the rectory of Shenley in Buckinghamshire in November following[k]. He was of New college, Oxford, and proceeded LL.D. in 1730. The parliamentary committee sitting at Northampton sequestered this rectory 11 Oct. 1643[l]; and on 17 Aug. 1644 appointed William Hughes "to gather up the tithes of corne graine "and hay in Farthingston & have for his teame & own "paines 4s. a day[m]." On the 29th of the same month Mr. Martin Tomkyns and Mr. Edward Boddington took the tithes belonging to the rectory or parsonage for a year from the annunciation last, on payment to the "committee of £60, viz. £30 in hand & the other £30 "at Midsummer next & alsoe the weekly tax during the "said terme[n]." On the 7th of Sept. following "William Hughes agrees with the committee to sow till & "husbund the gleeb landes belonging to the parsonage "of Farthingston by halves, according to the usuall "course of husbandry for the next yeare beginning at "Mich'as next, for w[h] he is to have halfe the p'fites "togither w[th] the house yard barnes and out-houses be-"longing to the parsonage untill a minister be put therein "by order of Parliam[t] provided that he allow M[r] Tom-"kyns & M[r] Bodington convenient roomes in the "dwelling house for the lodging of themselves their "agente or servante & likewise the necessary use of the "yard. And he is to mowe reape make ready & carry "the p'fites of the same & lay it in such place the com-"mittee shall appointe in Farthingston aforesaide, or "within a mile thereof; the committee to finde halfe the "seede, & paye halfe the weekly tax[o]." On the same day Mrs. Grace Flowerdue waited on the committee and desired to compound with them for the parsonage of Farthingston, "to & for the reliefe of D[c]or Dillon late "possessor thereof in comiserac'on to him being her "kinsman[p]." Her mediation appears to have been unsuccessful; for on the 19th of October, the committee, reciting the sequestration of sir Richard Shuckburgh's estate, issued an order to Mr. William Muscot, one of his tenants, to pay the sum of £10 out of his half year's rent due at Michaelmas last to Mr. Goodman for supplying the cure of the parish church of Farthingston[q]; and Walker states that the doctor was imprisoned and died in jail; adding he "was esteemed a person of great "learning, and of a good life and conversation[r]."

James Elliott accounted for the first fruits 11 June 1646[s]. "John son of James Elial, D. D. and parson of "Farthingstone," was baptized 5 Dec. 1647[t]. How long Dr. E. continued to reside here or enjoy the benefice is not known; nor whether he was immediately succeeded by Thomas Hogg, who occurs in 1655[u] and 1688[j], and in the entry of whose burial, 1 Jan. 1679-80, he is stiled "formerly rector of this parish[j]." His successor,

John Hutton of Queen's coll. Oxf. A.M. was inst. to the rectories of Hanington and Farthingston 12 Jan. 1679-80, and installed archdeacon of Stow in Lincoln diocese 21 Feb. 1684-5. He resigned this living in 1686, on obtaining the rectory of Wappenham, and

Francis Gibson was inst. 8 Feb. 1687-8. He was buried here 24 Mar. 1689-90[j], and

Thomas Garnett of Queen's coll. Oxf. A.M. was inst. 19 May 1690. He was buried here 10 Sept. 1714[j], and

Robert Wake, of Pembroke coll. Oxf. A. M. was inst. 30 Oct. following. He was, I presume, the same person who was rector of Buckstead in Sussex and dean of Bocking in Essex, and great-grandfather of the present sir William Wake, bart. of Courteenhall. On his cession,

John Gibson, provost of Queen's coll. Oxf. A. M. 1700, B. D. 1712, D. D. 1716-7, was inst. 14 July 1720. The following year he added the rectory of Isham Inferior, and was also prebendary of Lincoln and Peterborough. He published a sermon on Ps. lxxxiv. 10, 11, preached at the consecration of Queen's college chapel, 1719, 8vo. He died at Oxford 2 Sept. 1730, and was buried on the 9th[j]. His successor was

George Reynolds of Trinity hall, Camb. LL.B. 1712, and of Jesus coll. Camb. LL.D. 1726, son of the bishop of Lincoln, who was inst. 9 Nov. 1730. He was rector of Walgrave and Hanington many years, but retaining this benefice only a few months was succeeded by his brother

Octavius Reynolds, of Trinity coll. Camb. A.B. inst. 16 Mar. 1730-1; on whose cession,

Richard Inett of John's coll. Camb. A. M. rector of Tansover, was inst. 4 Apr. 1733. His death introduced

Peter Layng of King's coll. Camb. A. M. who was inst. 11 Nov. 1745, and has been already noticed under Everdon. On his decease, Samuel Bateman of John's coll. Camb. A.M. was inst. 15 Nov. 1778. He was appointed to the donative of Overton in Lancashire in 1785.

The Registers commence in 1538, but have been incorrectly kept, and are defective from 1640 to 1672.

The Church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, stands facing the road near the middle of the village, and consists of a tower containing five bells, nave, south porch, and chancel. The tower is 10 ft. 6 in. long, by 7 ft. 2 in. wide; the nave 45 ft. 6 in. by 18 ft.; and the chancel 28 ft. 9 in. by 14 ft. 9 in. At the east end of the nave on the north side is a pointed arch, opening into a recess or chapel 6 ft. by 11 ft. 7 in. At the west end of the nave is a large plain font.

Castle Dykes. At the western extremity of Farthingston wood is an extensive and irregular intrenchment on an elevated situation, and occupying an area of about 13 acres, called the Castle Dykes. It is surrounded by a single ditch and an outer bank or vallum varying rather in height, but at all points much lower than the inner vallum. A deep ditch completely intersects it, and produces two nearly equal divisions. The northern one approaches to a square with the angles rounded; the depth of the vallum from the crown to the centre of the foss is about 17 feet, and the height from the level of the inner area about 7 feet. The southern division is surrounded by a ditch about 28 feet below the crown of the rampart, which is about 15 feet above the level of the area: in the centre of this division is a circular mound or keep on the same level with the rest of the area, and encompassed by a ditch and rampart of the same dimensions. The only decided entrance appears to have been near the middle of the south division, and to have been protected to the south-east by an additional vallum and ditch within the outer one.

It bears a striking resemblance to the double Saxon camp described by Dr. Stukeley[t]. Morton attributes it to the same era, conjecturing that it was one of the numerous castles and forts erected in 913 under the direction of Æthelfleda, relict and successor of Æthelred viceroy of Mercia: and that it was set on fire and demolished by the Danes under Suane in 1013[u].

The site of the circular keep seems to have been subsequently converted into the baronial castle of the feudal lords. Morton has given a circumstantial detail of the proceedings of some workmen in digging the ruins for stones to build the house which is now standing at a small distance from the castle hill. They discovered a room with a vaulted stone roof, and another room beneath. "Amongst other stones in the Rubbish they met with "Three very rudely carved, each with an ill proportioned Figure standing out upon it. One a Bearded Head, "another that seems to have been designed for a Woman's Head, The Third of a Man or Woman with Arms "a Kimbo. All which were placed with the Faces outwards in the Wall of the said House adjoining to the "Dykes, and are still to be seen[u]." The two former are still remaining, but are mere corbels of no very remote antiquity.

In a field recently reclaimed from wood to tillage, about a furlong south-west of the Castle Dykes, and described by Morton as "a Plot of Ground call'd Castle Yard," is a square intrenchment with only the inner vallum remaining; but on the north side, which is within the wood, both the vallum and the foss between are still visible. The vallum at the west end is now in progress of being levelled to facilitate the plough, and is ascertained to be about 9 feet in width, and constructed of two outer walls of stone about 3 feet each in thickness; the intervening space of 3 feet was filled with soil, except at one point, where earth and small cobble stones, which had evidently undergone the action of fire, were used for about 3 yards in length, and at each end was a solid mass of several hundreds-weight of scoria of iron intermixed with considerable quantities of charcoal, and inside the wall near to the scoria was found a long iron spoon, and the socket of a spear. Similar masses of scoria dug up in the vicinity of camps in various parts of the kingdom have been considered indicative of Roman occupation, and corroborated as it is in the present instance by the regular form of the earth-works, there can be little hesitation in referring this spot to a summer encampment of that warlike people. Morton, it is true, observes that it is "not "of the usual figure of the Roman Camps, nor indeed of any other regular figure[x];" but he might naturally be led into this mistake by the thick underwood which then concealed it, and rendered an accurate investigation impossible.

FAWSLEY,

In domesday "Falelav" and "Falewesle," is compounded of the saxon Falepe, expressive of the colour of the fallow deer, and leȳ, a field; and accurately characterizes the colour of the soil, particularly on the north side of the park.

The parish contains about 1850 acres, exclusive of Badby wood, which is incorporated with the park. The lordship is all old inclosure; and, except the vicarial land, is the property of sir Charles Knightley, bart.

The boundaries are formed on the north and north-east by Badby; east or south-east by Everdon; south by Preston and part of Snoscomb; and west by Charwelton.

Fawsley is noticed by Morton for its "excellent pasturage[x];" the soil is a rich deep loam, and the whole lordship is still, as described by a modern agriculturist, "without a single blade of corn, being wholly at grass and "applied to feeding and mostly to the fatting of oxen and breeding and fatting of sheep[y]." Timber of all kinds flourishes luxuriantly.

The lake south of the mansion receives a spring from Charwelton field, but is principally supplied from two springs near its banks called Seywell and Bryseland. The stream flows from hence by the name of the Fawsley water, through Snoscomb, Everdon, and Dodford, to Wedon, where it unites with the western branch of the Nen.

Several comparatively rare birds have been seen in this lordship. Morton says "The Shell-apple, or Cross-bill, "Loxia Gesneri, has been shot at Fawsley, and is the only one of the kind I have met with here[z]." "The Cormo- "rant, Corvus aquaticus," he says also, "I am told has been shot in Fawsley lordship[a]." To which may be added the following, which have been shot here within the last few years: Strix Otus (Lin.), long-eared or horned Owl; Loxia Coccothraustes (Lin.), Hawfinch or Grosbeak; Picus Medius (Lin.), the middle-spotted Woodpecker; Fulica atra (Lin.), Bald Coot; Colymbus cristatus (Lin.), great-crested Grebe; Rallus aquaticus (Lin.), Water Rail; and Scolopax Totanus (Lin), the spotted Redshank.

MANORIAL HISTORY. TERRA REGIS OR ANCIENT DEMESNE *. The saxon proprietor of this lordship is not recorded; but after the norman conquest it formed a portion of the Terra Regis, and is thus described in domesday. The King himself holds "Falelav." There is a hide and a half and the fifth part of a hide. The inland or demesne arable land is two carucates, but it is sufficient to maintain four ploughs, and there are six bordars having four ploughs. In the arable land out of the demesne are six villeins with a bailiff having four ploughs, and there is a meadow of the yearly rent of 2s. The whole was rated yearly at £15 by tale of 20s. to the pound, in the time of Edward the confessor, and pays the same number of pounds now by "xx^ti in ora," i. e. by the ounce or one of twelve to the nummulary pound, of the value of 20d. each, thus securing the sterling sum clear of any deficiency in weight or depreciation of the current coin. To this manor belongs the soke or legal jurisdiction of a hide, wanting a bovate or oxgang, which produces 2s. yearly[b]. The locality of this land is not mentioned, and the return of the inquest is evidently very defective on this point of enquiry, for, though omitted here, it appears under the surveys of the respective places, that all Farthingston[c], Everdon[d], and Dodford[e], and parts of Staverton[f] and Braunston[g], were within the soke of "Falewesle," to which may probably be added the portion of Welton and Thorp[h] stated to be in the king's soke; and the tribute of church scot hereafter shewn to have been rendered to this church from the two hundreds of Gravesend and Egelweardsle is a positive proof that all the towns which originally appertained to them, and now constitute the hundred of Fawsley, were ecclesiastical if not manorial members of this great saxon parish.

To the profits attached to this extensive paramouncy may perhaps be attributed the striking and otherwise disproportionate valuation of this manor: in number of hides and carucates it was below the general average, nor had it a mill, one great source of the lord's perquisites, and yet, excepting Daventry, which was estimated at £8, it was surveyed at more than treble the amount of any other manor in the two hundreds.

In the hydarium of Hen. 2 the king was certified to have two hides here[i]: and in 19 Hen. 2 (1172) the sheriff in rendering his account of the farm of the county entered 40s. arising from "Faleweslea[k]." King John alienated this manor at a fee farm rent of £15 per ann. the domesday valuation; which reserved rent was frequently appro- priated towards the dower of the dowager queens[l], and remained vested in the crown till granted in 30 Hen. 8 (1538) to Ursula wife of Edmund Knightley, sergeant at law, with remainder to the right heirs of her husband for ever[m], since which time it has merged in the successive lords of the manor.

Fawsley is not specified by name, but in the Testa de Nevill about 18 Hen. 3 (1233), Hugh Russell, the lord of it, paid scutage for certain fees of Berkhampstead[n] †, and it is still reputed parcel of that honor.

MANOR. A writ issued to the sheriff in 7 Joh. (1205) to deliver this manor, late in possession of William Britton, to Simon de Haverel [o], and another the same year to transfer the land of "Falewes," late Simon de Haverel's, to William de Butteri [p]. John de la Bruere, the next possessor, dying without issue, it escheated again to king John [q], by whom it was granted in fee farm to Hugh Russell [r], who was previously resident here, as lessee for life of a capital messuage and three virgates of land from the prior and convent of Daventry [s]. In 13 Hen. 3 (1229) he owed five marks (£3. 6s. 8d.) for a confirmation of this manor [t], and died in 19 Hen. 3 (1235), when the manor was seised by the sheriff in behalf of the king, but restored to his cousin [great nephew] Hugh de Capes, to whom he had given it during his life-time [u]. In 24 Hen. 3 Robert le Prevost and Galiena his wife (sister of Hugh Russell), and Cecilia de Trop Mundeville (another sister, who had in her widowhood assumed the name of her birth-place), severally released by fine to Hugh de Capes a third part of two carucates in "Falewesle," a carucate and a half in Preston, lands in Thorp, &c. rents in Whitfield, Badby, and Northampton, half a knight's fee at Lubenham in Leicestershire, and a carucate at Bloxham in Oxfordshire [x]. In that portion of the Testa de Nevill which may be placed between 31 and 40 Hen. 3 the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented that there were two hides in "Falewesle," that Hugh de Capes held the manor in fee farm of the king, paying £15 yearly, and the hundred, which was worth 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.) yearly, for life, at a rent of 15 marks 8s. 4d. (£10. 8s. 4d.) yearly [y]. He died 40 Hen. 3 (1255), leaving Thomas de Capes his son and heir [z], who sold the manor of Preston Capes to John Hylberd [a], and the manor of "Falewesle" to Simon son of Robert Fitz Walter of Daventry [a] in 30 Edw. 1 (1301), as appears by an inspeximus of the licence of alienation and a confirmatory charter in 1 Edw. 3 (1327) [b].

RUSSELL AND CAPES OF FAWSLEY AND PRESTON CAPES.

From Cotton MSS. Claud. D. xii. fo. 111, public records.

Arms. On a seal appendant to a deed 24 Edw. 1. A cross, and in the dexter chief two ermine spots; circumscribed "S. Thome de Capes."

Simon Fitz Robert, on his purchase of this manor, adopted the local appellation, and by the name of Simon de Falwesle was summoned by writ of quo warranto in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) to shew by what right he claimed view of frank pledge, correction of assize of bread and beer, amerciaments for hue and cry when raised by his tenants, free warren in his demesne lands, and infangtheof within his manor of "Falwesle;" to which he pleaded prescription, and reciting the title from the time of John de la Bruere (which has been already deduced) exhibited the charter of king Edward, the king's grandfather, confirming for a fine of 100s. Thomas de Cape's conveyance to him under the description of Simon son of Robert de Daventre. Richard de Aldeburgh, the king's attorney, contended that the manor to which the aforesaid privileges were asserted to belong, having fallen into the king's hands as an escheat after the death of John de la Bruere, the liberties, if any there were, legally accrued to the king in right of his crown, and not as appurtenances of the manor, and as Simon shewed to the court no special act by which the said liberties were granted in express words to Hugh Ruffus (Russell) by king John, and nothing had been done by any other king, either in favor of Simon or his enfeoffors, the said liberties ought not to be extended, and therefore prayed judgment for the king; whereupon a day was appointed for judgment, when it appearing to the court that the charter of king John to Hugh Russell declared the king to have granted the manor with all liberties and free customs thereunto belonging, a jury was empannelled to try the issue, who on their oaths presented that all the aforesaid liberties immemorially belonged to the manor before the seisin of John de la Bruere, as well as since the charter of king John to Hugh Russell, and that Simon duly used these liberties in all things as he ought, except that he had neither pillory nor tumbril for the judicial punishment of offenders against the assize of bread and beer, nor a gallows for executing felons in the exercise of his privilege of infangtheof. The view of frank pledge and infangtheof were therefore seized into the king's hands, but at the petition of Simon were restored to him again for a fine of 10s. [c]

He died 7 Edw. 3 (1333), and the inquisition after his death furnishes a minute picture of the agricultural state and soccage tenures of the manor. There was a capital messuage newly acquired of divers cottagers of the vill—meaning probably that the site was lately in their occupation—worth 18d. yearly, and no more, because it had neither garden nor curtilage; there were in demesne 8 virgates or yardlands of 12 acres each, worth 6d. per acre yearly, 48s.; 22 acres of arable land of worse quality, which used to be in tenantcy, worth 3½d. per acre, 5s. 1½d.; a certain meadow called Sewell mead estimated at 4 acres, which was several or inclosed and not open to the commoners from the feast of the purification of the blessed Mary (Candlemas) to the feast of St. Michael, worth 5s. 4d.; a small meadow called the Milne mead, with Hallywelle mead and two holms from the feast of the purification to the feast of St. John the Baptist, worth 6s. 8d.; consequently they were only several for that period, and like the preceding of no value the rest of the year, being laid open to the common; a water-mill without suit, the tenants not being compelled to grind there, worth 6s. 8d.; two small woods of which the underwood was worth 6s. 8d. every seventh year, and it was cut the year before Simon died; and a pasture about the said woods in the Holeway and Hale worth 6s. 8d. every other year, and of no value that year because the land lay open. There were divers socmen who held amongst them 30 virgates, and paid £10. 15s. rents of assize or certainty money in equal portions at Easter and St. Michael, besides which, if they had ploughs of their own, they rendered a day's ploughing for each virgate in one of the three seasons, Winter, Spring, or Autumn, towards the cultivation of the lord's demesne lands; and if they had not ploughs, they yoked all the beasts they had to three of the lord's ploughs, but were not boarded at his expence; which service, amounting to 30 days ploughing, was worth 4d. per day for each plough, 10s.; they harrowed in seed time with 15 men after dinner, each man's work being worth ½d. for the half day, 15d.; and they mowed the lord's meadow of Sewell mead and made it and collected it together, the lord finding them provision, which work was worth 6d. beyond reprises, or the cost of their board. Sixteen of them reaped the lord's corn at ½d. per day each, 8d. The whole of them carried 10 loads of hay for the lord, worth 2d. each load, 20d. Nineteen of them mowed in autumn or harvest with one man each, for one day for a work called "Bederipe," or the customary service which inferior tenants paid to their lord in cutting down his corn or other work in the field, worth 2d. per day for each man, 6s. 2d. Each of them did a Bederipe worth 2d. per day for each man. Each of them did a Bederipe, the lord finding them provisions in one family at a common table, which work was worth 12d. beyond reprises. Each of them did a Bederipe with all his hired harvestmen between the feast of St. Peter ad vincula and the feast of St. Michael, saving his own family free who were not subject to this service, which work was worth one year with another 3s. 2d. And the whole of them carried 10 loads of corn for the lord, worth 2d. each load, 20d. There were in rents payable there yearly at the nativity of our Lord 8 hens worth 1d. each, and 2 cocks worth 2d. each, 14d. And there were pleas in the two views of frank pledge, worth 2s. exclusive of heriot land[c].

He was succeeded by his son Thomas de Falwesle, whose son John de Falwesle marrying Elizabeth sister and heiress of John Say, enjoyed the barony of Say in her right. By deed dated 1 Mar. 10 Ric. 2 (1386-7), in which he styled himself Johnes Falwesle ch'r, dñs de Say, he conveyed the manor of "Falwesle" in fee to John Waltham, keeper of the privy seal, Robert Warbulton, citizen and merchant of London, and Robert Pubelowe. The appendant seal is of red wax bearing his arms, two chevrons differenced by a crescent, surmounted by a helmet, and crest, out of a ducal coronet, a boar's head gorged with a plain collar[d].

In 16 Ric. 2 (1393) the above John Waltham, then bishop of Salisbury, and John Pubelowe, clerk, conveyed this manor to Drugo Barentyn, citizen (and goldsmith) of London (who as lord mayor met Henry 4th on his first entrance into that city), Geoffrey de Somerton, and Lawrence Kelshill and William de Salisbury of London, chaplains[e]; and 31 Jan. 3 Hen. 5 (1415-6) Geoffrey de Somerton had licence to alienate the manor of "Falwesle" to the trustees of Richard Knightley, esq. and Elizabeth daughter of Thomas Purefoy, esq. and the heirs of the said Richard for ever[e].

The Knightleys are locally denominated from "Chenistelei" or Knightley in Staffordshire, of which vill their ancestor Rainald was mesne lord at the domesday survey; and are equally distinguished by well-attested antiquity, extensive possessions, and splendid alliances. The purchaser of Fawsley afterwards added the manors of Hellidon, and Upton with the hundred of Newbottle Grove, and was succeeded by his son of both names, whose son sir Richard Knightley was one of the knights made in 10 Hen. 7 (Nov. 1, 1494), when the king's second son was created duke of York[f]; and had the honor of being four times sheriff of this county. He acquired the manors of Alderton, Stoke Bruerne, Plumpton, Morton Pinkeney, Middleton Cheney, and Great and Little Harrowden, and lands in several other places, in marriage with Jane daughter and heiress of Henry Skenard or Skinnerton, esq. the representative of the St. John, Harweden, and other Northamptonshire families. Prior to the marriage of Edmund his second surviving son in 1520, he executed a general settlement of his estates, comprising manors and lands in thirty-three places in this county, one in Buckinghamshire, four in Warwickshire, and three in Staffordshire, besides messuages in London. The testamentary disposition of his affairs thus commences, and is perhaps worth preserving as a specimen of the piety of the age: "I Richard Knyghtley knyght, beynge in good helthe "and perfect mynde, not grevyd vexyd troublyd nor diseased with any bodily sicknes, knowyng and considering "well the uncertaintye and unstableness of this wretched life, and that ther is nothing so uncerten, as to any "creature in this world lyvynge, as is the departure from the same, and doubtless nothing so uncerten as the

His son and heir sir Richard Knightley, generally designated of Upton, survived him but three years, and leaving daughters only, the family estates passed under the father's entail to his next brother sir Edmund Knightley, a lawyer of considerable eminence, one of the commissioners for inspecting the religious houses previous to their dissolution, and a sergeant at law. Dying without surviving issue the inheritance devolved on his next brother sir Valentine Knightley, who was knighted 10 Feb. 1 Edw. 6 (1546-7), after the king's coronation, " but the time " being so short, the ceremony of the bath could not be performed[h]." His son and successor sir Richard Knightley was dubbed a knight at Fotheringhay by the earl of Leicester in 8 Eliz. (1566)[h]. The puritans, or opposers of the new act for uniformity of worship, assumed the importance of an organized party about 1568, and sir Richard was one of their earliest and most zealous patrons. Their publications, principally from the pen of John Ap Henry, better known by the assumed appellation of Martin Marprelate, were industriously though secretly disseminated by means of a travelling printing press conducted by one Walgrave. To elude detection, the scene of its operations was frequently changed. It was first set up at Moulsey in Surrey, from whence it was removed to Fawsley, and worked in a private upper room approached only by a winding staircase. Its next stage was to Norton, another of sir Richard's seats. It was subsequently conveyed to Coventry, Woolston in Warwickshire, and finally to Manchester, where it was seized by the earl of Derby. For these clandestine proceedings sir Richard and his associates were summoned before the court of starchamber and heavily fined; but archbishop Whitgift, though one of the most prominent objects of their attacks, with a truly christian spirit, obtained by his intercession a remission of their sentences. In the succeeding reign (1605) sir Richard ventured, with sir Edward Montagu, sir Francis Hastings, and sixty or eighty other gentlemen, to petition the king in behalf of the puritan clergy in this county, but they were severely rebuked in the star chamber and at the council table for their presumption, and sir Richard was dismissed both from the lieutenancy and the commission of the peace. He and sir Francis Hastings joined afterwards in presenting a petition to parliament for toleration to the roman catholics, hoping thereby, had it been successful, to have secured a similar concession in favor of their own party. The expensive habits and pecuniary difficulties of his eldest son led, from numerous demises and family arrangements, to a final agreement in 33 Eliz. (1591) between sir Richard and his two eldest sons Valentine and Edward, whereby the manors of Upton with the hundred of Newbottle Grove, Plumpton, Hellidon, Badby, and Newnham, and the advowsons of Litchborough, Plumpton, and Bugbrook, were released to the use and appointment of Valentine in fee; and the manors of Fawsley and Snoscomb, and advowson of Byfield, were settled in tail male successively on Valentine, Edward, Seymour, Dudley, John, Nathaniel, Robert, and Francis, sons of sir Richard; Edmund, Thomas, and Edward, brothers of sir Richard; with remainder to the right heirs of sir Richard. The manors of Upton, Plumpton, and Hellidon, and advowsons of Plumpton and Bugbrook, were sold by sir Valentine Knightley or his appointment during his father's life time; and the manors of Badby and Newnham and advowson of Litchborough descended to his three daughters and coheiresses; but the manors of Fawsley and Snoscomb and advowson of Byfield resorted to his brother Edward's son and heir Richard Knightley, esq. then of Preston Capes, who died s. p. in 1639, having by entail in 1630, and by will in 1637, devised these estates to Richard Knightley, esq. of Burgh hall in Staffordshire, son of sir Richard's brother Thomas in tail male.

He was an active adherent of the parliament from the commencement of the struggle with the crown, and his eldest son Richard having married the daughter of the celebrated John Hampden, and thus become allied also to the protectorate house of Cromwell, the ties of social connexion were superadded to the force of public principle, and produced one of the most formidable private combinations of that eventful period. At Fawsley the plan is said to have originated for retrenching the royal prerogative by depriving the crown of the right of making peace or war, and placing the royal revenues under the direction of four councils to be appointed by parliament which was to meet annually without summons from the sovereign, and to have the control of the militia, and the disposal of all places of trust or profit. He died in 1650, having been a leading member of all the local committees nominated by parliament for this county; as was also his son and successor sir Richard Knightley, K.B. He did not however sanction the trial and execution of the king; and in 1660 was one of the council of state which promoted the recall of Charles the 2nd, who at his restoration received him into favor, and made him one of the knights of the bath previous to the coronation. Richard Knightley, esq. his only son by Elizabeth Hampden, died at Paris in 1665 unmarried, and was represented by his half brother Essex Knightley, esq. son of sir Richard by his second wife; on whose decease Fawsley and the entailed Northamptonshire estates vested in his uncle and heir male Devereux Knightley, esq. but the unentailed estates in Staffordshire, Worcestershire, Warwickshire, and Buckinghamshire, descended to his posthumous daughter and heiress Ann, afterwards wife of Thomas Foley, esq. and ancestress of the present lord Foley. Devereux Knightley, esq. only son of the above Devereux, died a minor and unmarried in 1695, when Fawsley and the family estates centred in his first cousin and heir male Lucy Knightley, esq. who died unmarried in 1726, having by will in 1724 settled them in trust for the lives of his brother Richard, and nephew Lucy eldest son of Richard, remainder to Valentine only son of Lucy in tail male, with divers remainders over; and bequeathed his personal property in trust for the purchase of freehold lands to be settled to the same uses. Valentine Knightley, esq. in right of his mother Jane Grey Benson, inherited a co-claim to the ancient barony of Fitzwarine, which still remains in abeyance. Lucy Knightley, esq. eldest son of Valentine, died without issue in 1791, having by will in 1784 made a new destination of Fawsley and the family estates to his brothers Valentine, John, and Charles, in tail male. The rev. Charles Knightley, the youngest brother, died prior to the testator; Valentine Knightley, esq. died unmarried in 1796; and the rev. sir John Knightley was created a baronet 2 Feb. 1798, with remainder in default of issue male to the heirs male of his deceased brother Charles.

In 1802 he executed an entail of Fawsley and the family estates to the same limitations, with remainder to his own right heirs; and dying without issue in 1812 was succeeded in his title and estates by his nephew sir Charles Knightley, the 2nd and present baronet.

Godwin Fee. Godwin the priest, one of the king's cleemosinaries, held of the king four parts of half a hide in "Felveslea." The arable land was one carucate occupied by four bordars and worth 10s. yearly[i]. This I apprehend was the land which subsequently constituted Daventry Priory Manor. By an inquisition before John le Meyne, escheator within Trent, 54 Hen. 3 (1270), it was found (int. al.) that when Hugh, called Vicecomes, transferred the priory which he had founded at Preston, to Daventry, as a recompence to the monks for the damage they sustained in the removal, he gave them three virgates of land in "Falwesle," for which William, called Vicecomes, son and heir of Hugh, afterwards impleading them, they went and stated their case to king Henry (2nd), grandfather of the king, who compassionating their poverty, not only confirmed the donation of the three virgates, but gave them the church of Falwesle with the church-scot of two hundreds in perpetual alms. So that they held nothing there in capite of the king except the church in form aforesaid ; the other land they had of the confirmation of king Henry (2nd) in perpetual alms[k]. In 6 Joh. (1204) the prior and convent leased these three virgates and a capital messuage to Hugh Russell for his life, and a moiety of them for the life of his wife Felicia, daughter of Hubert, if she survived him[l].

and woods in Falwesle; and in 7 Edw. 1 he and the abbot and convent of Evesham granted them commons here and at Badby[m].

In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) the prior of Daventry was summoned by writ of quo warranto to shew by what right he claimed (int. al.) view of frank pledge and wayf in "Falweslee" and Everdon; when he pleaded prescription, but admitted that he had neither pillory nor tumbril at Falwesle, and only a tumbril at Everdon for the punishment of offenders against the assize of bread and beer, and that offenders within the view of frank pledge in Falwesle were amerced instead of being corporally punished; on which the king's attorney contended, that it was contrary to law to punish such transgressions by fine and not by pillory and tumbril, the necessary appendages to courts of frank pledge; and as to wayf, it was a royal privilege conferred by special grant, which was not shewn by the prior, nor, as he claimed as prior only, could he plead prescription; that Simon de Falwesle was lord of the manor of Falwesle, and forasmuch as the prior claimed view of frank pledge in Falwesle as belonging to that manor, he prayed judgment for the king. The claim of wayf was withdrawn. The jury presented that the prior and his predecessors had immemorially exercised the view of frank pledge in Falwesle over their own proper tenants there, but that Everdon was within their view of frank pledge at Daventry, and that the extent of fines paid by offenders against the assize of bread and beer in Falwesle and Everdon was 2s. 6d. which had been frequently taken as a commutation for corporal punishment. The view of frank pledge was therefore seized into the king's hands, but restored again to the prior on payment of one mark[n]. The possessions of Daventry priory in Fawsley were not specifically valued in the taxations of 1254 and 1291, and they may be presumed to have been alienated in fee prior to the dissolution, as no temporalities here occur in the survey called the cardinal's bundles.

The Park, extending with Badby wood to nearly 700 acres, is well stocked with deer, and beautifully diversified in its surface. The downs on the northern verge of the park well merit the attention of every one who has feelings to enjoy a delicious prospect: rich woodland scenery forms the foreground, beyond which a protracted range of cultivation opens,—Scotland wood near Kelmarsh, and Finedon church in opposite directions being plainly discernible in the distant horizon.

On the slope of this summit within the park are evident traces of an ancient encampment, but too mutilated and indistinct to supply any correct data for ascertaining its original extent or probable period of formation.

The new park, now incorporated with the old one, was inclosed in the reign of Elizabeth, and a secondary mansion erected in it, called "The Lodge," which was generally held in jointure. Dame Anne Knightley (widow of sir Richard), who died in 1704, was probably its last inhabitant, and it now furnishes the subjoined picturesque ruin, etched and contributed by my friend Mr. Blore.

The Manor House has been the established residence of the Knightley family since the reign of Henry the fifth. It is situated just beyond the precincts of the park, on a gently elevated lawn commanding a rich expanse of wood and fertile pasturage, enlivened by two fine sheets of water. A suite of rooms on the south side was taken down a few years since, but it is still an extensive and imposing structure. The east front with the hall and its beautiful oriel window presents a fine specimen of the Tudor style of domestic architecture: the modern addition at the north end has been recently castellated. The windows in the breakfast room are enriched with the following armorial bearings. I. Knightly, and eleven quarterings; 1. Az. a buck's head cabossed O. Golafre; 2. In this room are also some curious family portraits. Sir Valentine Knightley, father of sir Richard, in black, with short round hair, pointed beard, and whiskers. Sir Richard Knightley, 1567, æt. 33, in black velvet cap, yellow dress, black cloak, and small ruff; a medal suspended from his neck by a black ribbon; sword and small rod. On the back ground,

In vi a Fortuna.
So hitherto, by helpe of heavenlie powers
My doubtful liffe hath ronne his posting race;
Whos recklesse youthe hath passed such stormie showers
As might have cute me of in halfe this space.
Yet mightie Jove, by his celestial grace,
Hath brought my barke to such a blissful shore
As daylie doth advaunce me more and more.
In vita Fortuna.

A second and interesting portrait of sir Richard in 1613, at the advanced age of 80, seated, and laying his hand on the shoulder of a little girl, who is standing between his legs playing with his stick, and whom he is regarding with a look highly expressive of aged affection. At his side are his spectacles, a bible, and an hour glass. On his head is a coif, and he is habited in a plain black suit with laced ruff. The child is in a grotesque costume with her hair turned back and powdered. Lady Elizabeth Seymour, 2nd wife of sir Richard, 1590, æt. 40, with a favorite lap-dog on a table. Her face and hands are remarkably small; she has on a black gown profusely ornamented with pearls, small cap, and quilled ruff. Anne wife of sir Richard Knightley, K.B. and her daughter Jane, afterwards wife of sir Thomas Delves-Broughton, 1619. Richard Knightley, esq. 1698, æt. 40, in armour. Lucy Knightley, esq. "the Benefactor." Lucy Knightley, esq. in a masquerade dress, by sir Joshua Reynolds. The late Valentine Knightley, esq. in full length, in a shooting dress with a favorite horse and pointer. D. Virginius Ursinus D. Brigland, in armour. King Henry 8th. Two small portraits on panel of King Edward 6th and queen Anne Boleyn. Lord Mansfield, chief justice of England 1771, full length, seated in his robes.

But the chief ornament of the mansion is the magnificent gothic hall, 54 ft. long, 24 ft. wide, and 43 ft. high, now tastefully fitted up as a saloon. The construction of the open timber roof, and the combined effect of the interior, are correctly and beautifully exhibited in the annexed representation, for which I am indebted, amongst many other favors, to the kind patronage and liberality of the proprietor. "The chimney-piece is large, grand, and well carved. Above it," says Pennant, "is a great window. The smoke is conveyed by flues passing on each side of it, so that the chimney does not in the least disturb the uniformity of the room." This arrangement has since yielded to modern convenience, which has added a lower tier of windows on the opposite side; the upper or original range being placed, in conformity to the prevailing fashion in great halls from the fourteenth to the sixteenth centuries, at a considerable height from the floor, except at the upper end, where, as in the present instance, an oriel or projecting bay window was introduced for the double purpose of affording light to, and accommodating the attendants at, the high table. On the west side, in corresponding compartments, are five full-length portraits: King Charles 2nd. Charles 12th king of Sweden. Thomas lord Grey of Groby, in armour, and a boy giving him his helmet. A lady. Valentine Knightley, esq. grandfather of the present baronet, in a masquerade dress. The windows are filled with heraldic alliances, some of which have been anticipated in the breakfast room, and many of the others have been so misplaced when the windows were repaired as to preclude a correct description. At the south end of the room is the family achievement, marshalling the almost unprecedented number of 334 quarterings.

The Village in 17 Edw. 4 (1477), as appears from the rental of Richard Knightley, esq. deceased, consisted of 10 messuages besides the manor house, 5 cottages, and a cottage called "le Presthows." Bridges states it to be 'a village of six houses; of which two only, Mr. Knightley's seat and the vicarage house, are near adjoining; the 'rest are dispersed in the fields[n].' By the census of 1801 it contained 4 houses and 29 inhabitants; by that of 1811 the same number of houses and 41 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 5 houses and 22 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax is £213, at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property-tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2276. There are no poor's rates, the poor having been always maintained by the lord of the manor. The wake is not observed.

Advowson. The grant of this church to Daventry priory by king Henry 2nd, and the particular circumstances which led to it, have been already incidentally noticed. The charter itself is recited in a confirmatory exemplification 19 Hen. 3 (1234), and the terms of the grant seem to recognise and convey a complete ecclesiastical, if not civil jurisdiction over the district comprehended within the parish; the church in the manor of "Falwesley" being given in perpetual alms to be held by the monks of Daventre freely, quietly, and honorably, with all which belonged to it in inland and outland, in men, and services, and tithes, and in all other things in town and without town, in borough and without borough, and in all places, with sac and soc and thol and theam and infangtheof, and all other customs and privileges; and church-scot of the two hundreds to the said church, from what places soever it was rendered in the time of king William and king Henry, and no one to withhold it on pain of forfeiting the king's protection[o]. The church of Falwesle was (int. al.) confirmed to the priory by Richard (qu. Weathershed?) archbishop of Canterbury[p] (1229 to 1231); by Boniface (of Savoy) archbishop of Canterbury in 1260[q]; and by Robert (Kilwarby) archbishop of Canterbury in 1277[p]. The priory of Daventry was one of the smaller monasteries suppressed in 16 Hen. 8 (1524-5), for the foundation of cardinal Wolsey's college at Oxford, and the impropriate rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Fawsley, though inadvertently omitted in the survey, passed with its other possessions, and are enumerated amongst them in the schedule after the cardinal's attainder and death[r]. They were also assigned, as parcel of the late priory of Daventry, to king Henry the eighth's college at Oxford, founded by the king in 1532[s]; but on the dissolution of that establishment in 1545 they were resumed by the crown, and subsequently granted to the Knightley family.

Church-scot or Church-seed was an offering to the church of the first fruits of harvest, ordained by Ina king of the West Saxons in the seventh century, and subsequently by kings Edgar and Canute, to be paid yearly at St. Martin's mass. As the charter of king Henry 2nd proves the early privileged jurisdiction of this parish, so the tributary token of "cyric sceat," or church-scot, rendered to it from nearly all the neighbouring towns, demonstrates its high antiquity and superiority. On the endowment of this vicarage, the church-scot was (int. al.) assigned to the vicar, and towards the close of the fourteenth century, payment being neglected or resisted, the affiliated members of the church of St. Mary of Falweslee, which were subject to this annual mark of subjection at the feast of St. Martin the confessor, and the exact measure of corn payable by each, are thus minutely recorded: Charwelton, abbot of Thorney, for his manor there, three bushels of wheat and iiij^{d}, and his tenants five bushels of wheat. Prioress of Catesbye, half a quarter of wheat. Staw'ton, one quarter and a half of wheat and frank pledge; and fines for breaches of the peace ("frythorn"), whenever they happened in that village, shall be collected and carried. Bra'nston, one quarter of wheat, viz. the land which Philip Rote holds, half a quarter; and the land of William Clerek, two bushels; the land which Thomas Rolf holds, one bushel; and the land of John Aleyn, one bushel. Throp, one quarter of wheat and rye, viz. John H'berd, senior, two bushels; Henry Cok, two bushels; and the land which Robert P'stesura and William H'berd hold, two bushels each; John Bateman, one bushel; John Muleward, one bushel; and Richard Muleward one bushel for the land which he holds. Norton, one quarter of wheat, viz. for the manor of John Golafre there, half a quarter; and for Cornwayl's manor, half a quarter. Newnham, one quarter of wheat and rye mixed ("Anestibonis"), to be collected and carried by two collectors in common. Ev'don, one quarter of wheat and rye; the land of Robert Young, half a quarter; Robert Rolf, two bushels; John Graunt, one bushel; and William Porter to collect one bushel and carry it. Lychebarwe, one quarter of rye for the manor of the lord of the said town. Baddeby, one quarter of wheat for the commonalty or parishioners at large, and two collectors to carry it. And "Churchescoth" of the two hundreds (of Gravesende and Egelweardesle), as thus granted by the king (Henry 1st) "from what "places soever it was rendered in the times of king Edward (the confessor), king William my father, and William "my brother, and no one shall withhold it on pain of forfeiting my protection, but should any detain it, the bishop "of Lincoln, the sheriff, and my justices, shall enforce right therein." The charter of Henry 2nd is next adduced, and a list of kings given, from Ethelred 1st down to Richard 2nd, by grants from whom, or during whose reigns, this privilege was exercised. The chronological inaccuracies in the early part of the series must be confessed, however, to throw a shade over its authority, though it is in some degree corroborated by the charter of Henry 1st, which carries back the privilege into the saxon era. The sentence of the bishop on the hearing of the case, dated at Buckden 9 June 1367 (41 Edw. 3), was an appalling one to the timid or conscientious catholic: John (Buckingham) bishop of Lincoln, to our beloved sons the dean of Daventry and the perpetual vicar of Preston (Capes) greeting. Simon, perpetual vicar of the church of the blessed Mary of "Falwesle," grievously complaining that certain "persons whose names are unknown have withheld their payment of wheat and meslin, "commonly called Churcheschot," payable to the church of Falwesle yearly at the feast of St. Martin from time beyond memory, and have unjustly detained the same to the great peril of their souls, the subversion of the privilege of the church, and the bad example of others; we therefore command you jointly and severally by virtue, of the obedience which you owe to us, solemnly to admonish all those withholders and despoilers as aforesaid, in the churches of the towns of Evdon, Norton, Throp, Braunston, Stavton, Katesby, Charwelton, Baddeby, Neunham, and Lichebarwe, and also in the church of Falwesle, on three several Sundays and holidays during the celebration of mass, that on pain of the greater excommunication they make due satisfaction to the said vicar for all oblations of wheat and meslin withheld, within twenty days immediately following such admonition: and against all such as shall hereafter withhold all such oblations and satisfactions, you shall publish the sentence of the greater excommunication, in due order, and according to the canons, at such times and places as to you shall seem most expedient[t].

Then follows a similar denunciation from the official of the archdeaconry of Northampton, dated at Daventre 15 Mar. 1373 (47 Edw. 3)[u].

The contest was revived in the sixteenth century, and determined by the following decree of chancery, dated 15 June 1 Maria (1553): Whereas matters in variance have long depended between one William Chapleyn, vicar of "Fallesley," plaintiff, by the name of vicar of Fallesley, "which is the mother churche of all the parish churches "within the deanrie of Daventrie," and Thomas Smith and others, defendants, concerning wheat, corn, and grain, called "Churche Shot," &c.; it is therefore decreed by Stephen (Gardiner) bishop of Winchester, lord chancellor, &c. that the said vicar and his successors shall from henceforth have and enjoy the said wheat, corn, and grain, called Churche Shot, and tithes, out of the parishes and towns of Everdon, Norton, Throp, Brandeston, Staverton, Catesby, Charwelton, Badby, Newnham, and Lychebarrowe, in as large and ample manner as the said vicar or his predecessors have had within the last forty years, to be collected yearly by the thirdboroughs or tithing men of the said towns, reserving their accustomed fee or fourth part, till the defendants have proved in this court sufficient matter to the contrary[x]. When this custom ceased is not known, but it has long since been discontinued.

The Rectory was rated in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[y] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[z], at 11 marks (£7. 6s. 8d.) per ann. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it was certified to be appropriated to St. Frideswide's, usually called king Henry the eighth's, college at Oxford; but no valuation was given, because it was accounted for in Oxford amongst the other possessions of the college. The impropriate rectory being now vested in the lord of the manor, who is also sole proprietor of the lordship, the great tithes are merged in the general estate.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Daventry. The prior and convent of Daventry, on the usual plea of poverty, procured a licence of appropriation from Hugh (Wells) bishop of Lincoln[a], from 1209 to 1235, and a vicarage was endowed with all the altarage [small tithes] of the church, and the corn which is called "churchescoth;" and besides these, tithes worth half a mark (yearly), to be assigned in some particular place, with the manse near the church opposite the gate of Hugh Russell: the vicar to pay synodals only, and the prior and convent to pay St. Peter's pence and all other customary burdens[b]. The prior of Daventry, and Robert perpetual vicar of "Falvisle" (1255 to 1267), were summoned before Richard (Gravesend) bishop of Lincoln (1258 to 1280), to hear and receive the ordination of the said vicarage, because it was alleged to have been diminished after the first taxation; and the prior, on behalf of himself and convent, willingly, and of his own accord, granted to the vicar and his successors whatever appeared to be the diminution of his vicarage, viz. the tithes of one virgate of land[c] [in tenure of Will. Fountain, Godfrey the Miller, and Philip Typily[c]]. This was probably the assignment of particular lands for the tithes of half a mark mentioned in the endowment. By an inquisition taken in Fawsley church in 1269, before the archdeacon of Northampton, the vicar was adjudged to repair the chancel at his own cost, except it be burned or fall down, in which cases the prior and convent of Daventry were bound to rebuild[d]; and in 1295 the archdeacon issued his mandate commanding the repair of the chancel[e]. The vicarage is valued at 5 marks (£3. 6s. 8d.) per ann. in the copy of the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) in the British Museum[e], but does not occur in the printed copy of that record. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), it is rated at £8 per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[f]. Richard Knightley, esq. the patron, in 1630, vested in trust for the augmentation of the vicarage a messuage, garden, and orchard, three small closes, a small meadow adjoining, and a clear yearly rent charge of £40; with a proviso that it be withheld whenever the vicar should require the original endowment[g]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a vicarage "in itself without dependance on any other "whatever," worth £60 per ann.; Richard Knightley, esq. patron, and John Wilson incumbent[h]. In 1777 a faculty was obtained from the bishop of Peterborough, by virtue of which, in January 1778, an exchange was effected between Lucy Knightley, esq. the patron, and the rev. Francis Mapletoft, the vicar, whereby a newly erected messuage west of the manor house, in lieu of the old vicarage house, and 17 a. 3 r. 3 p. of land, were vested in the vicar; which, with 8 a. 1 r. 16 p. the residue of the land settled in 1630, not included in the exchange, and the annual rent charge of £40, constitute the present vicarage. In the return of livings under £150 per ann. made to the governors of queen Anne's bounty in 1809, the bishop of Peterborough certified it to be of the yearly value of £100.

VICARS. John de Falwesle, by the prior and convent of Daventry, between 1209 and 1235.

Robert, witnessed a grant to the priory of Daventry in the time of Hugh Capes, before 1255 [i].

Henry de Merswicon, priest, 15 May 1267. In 1282 he agreed with the prior and convent of Daventry to pay 30s. yearly towards repairing the chancel of the conventual church, and not to demand any tithe of the heriots paid at their court of Fawsley [k].

Richard de Esseby, 8 Dec. 1291. He was also vicar of Weston on Welland.

Roger de Aula or Att Hall of Daventre, 16 Sept. 1322.

Nicholas de Audren of Allerwas, priest, 1 July 1348.

John Philips of Braden, 1351.

Simon de Silveston of Daventre, priest, 1 July 1352.

Richard Taylor of Welton, chaplain, 10 Sept. 1400.

Thomas Avery of Lichborowe, 18 Jan. 1403-4.

William London, between 1435 and 1446. He was also vicar of Norton.

Robert Bodyngton, priest, 19 Aug. 1446. He was rector of Maidford 1448 to 1463.

Sir Richard Stowe, priest, 4 July 1449. He was also vicar of Wedon Bec.

Sir John Parey, between 1471 and 1478.

Sir William Symond, priest, 15 Oct. 1478.

Sir Robert Convey, between 1521 and 1525.

Sir Ralph Rodys, or Roads, chaplain, 7 May 1525. He was also rector of Slapton. On his decease,

William Chapleyn, clerk, was presented by Edmund Knightley of Fawsley, esq. and instituted 31 July 1542. He was vicar of Welton from 1523 to 1561, in which year he appears to have died. His intermediate successor here is not known, but

Oliver Houghton was presented by sir Richard Knightley, and inst. 11 Dec. 1580, on the death of the last incumbent. He obtained the vicarage of Easton Maudit in 1564, and was buried there 27 Dec. 1605, but resigned this benefice to

Edward Sharpe, probably in 1582, when he vacated Preston Capes. He was buried here 11 July 1601 [l], and

Sampson Wood, A. M. was presented by sir Richard Knightley of Norton, and inst. 19 Aug. following. On his deprivation the bishop collated by lapse Christopher Spicer, A. M. afterwards rector of Cogenho, who was inst. 26 Feb. 1605-6. Wood, however, must have subsequently been re-instituted, as he died vicar, and was buried here 13 Mar. 1624-5 [l].

John Wilkins, A. M. afterwards bishop of Chester, of whom a memoir will be given in the biographical department, was presented by Richard Knightley of Preston Capes, esq. and inst. 2 June 1637, on the resignation of the last incumbent. He retained it but a short time, and was succeeded by his maternal grandfather

John Dod, A. M. generally styled the Decalogist, from his celebrated exposition of the ten commandments, who had been principally resident here several years under the patronage of the Knightley family. This learned puritan divine was the youngest of the seventeen children of John Dod, esq. of Shocklach in Cheshire, where he was born in 1555. He was educated at Jesus college, Cambridge, of which he was elected fellow in 1585, and the same year incorporated M. A. at Oxford. He was successively minister of Hanwell in Oxfordshire, Fenny Drayton in Leicestershire, and Canons Ashby and Fawsley in this county; though occasionally silenced for nonconformity at each of them. In one of these seasons of ministerial deprivation he published, in conjunction with Robert Cleaver, "a plain exposition of the "Ten Commandments." Lond. 1604, 4to; and with Cleaver and William Flinde "an exposition of the book "of Proverbs." Lond. 1606, 4to. The latter work was re-printed in 1611, and the former in 1622. In 1635 appeared in small 4to "a plain and familiar exposition "on the Lord's Prayer, first preached in divers sermons, "the substance whereof is now published for the benefit "of the Church, newly corrected and amended by John "Dod Minister of the Word;" in the dedication of which, to "his much honoured loving friend Mr. Rich-"ard Knightley," he states that "these sermons were "preached above twenty years agoe, and now they are "lately printed without my consent or knowledge. The "printer had no copie from mee, but onely such broken "and imperfect matter, as were taken from my mouth "by my hearers. And therefore because the readers "should not bee offended with the errors and mis-"takings, which they shall finde in the first impression; "and I would not beare the blame of other mens faults: "I thought it now my best way, to amend the things "that are amisse in the printed Treatise, according as "my age (being eighty yeares old) and manifold occa-"sions otherwise, would permit mee. I dedicate this "booke unto you, that as the Lord is my witnesse that "I pray daily for you by name, and so (by his assist-"ance) I purpose to doe whiles I live: so I must leave "some testimony behinde mee to men after my death "(which I continually waite for) of mine unfeined and "hearty thankefulnesse, for all your favours and good-"nesse to mee and mine."

He survived ten years, and dying at the very advanced age of ninety years, was buried here 19 Aug. 1645 [l]. Besides the works already enumerated, he published, Six Sermons. Lond. 1614, 4to. Sermons. Lond. 1618, 4to. Six Sermons. Lond. 1621, 4to. His sayings acquired great provincial celebrity, and according to Granger "have been printed in various forms: many "of them on two sheets of paper, are still to be seen "pasted on the walls of cottages. An old woman in "my neighbourhood told me that 'she should have gone "'distracted for the loss of her husband, if she had been "'without Mr. Dod's sayings in the house." Fuller characterizes him as "by nature a witty, by industry a "learned, by grace a godly divine." His life was written by Samuel Clarke, and there is a scarce portrait of him, æt. 96 [90], with four english verses, engraved by T. Cross, 8vo.

Philip Lacock Story, of Jesus coll. Camb. A.M. was presented by the rev. sir John Knightley, bart. and inst. 24 Apr. 1808. His resignation introduced

Henry Knightley, of Christ Ch. coll. Oxf. A.M. who was inst. 22 Mar. 1810, and to the rectory of Byfield the day following; both on the presentation of his uncle the rev. sir John Knightley, bart. He died at Charwelton 8 Sept. and was buried here 12 Sept. 1813[m], when

Philip Lacock Story, of Jesus coll. Camb. A.M. rector of Walton on the Wolds in Leicestershire, was presented by sir Charles Knightley, bart. to both benefices, and inst. 1 Dec. following. He died at Lockington hall in Leicestershire 25 May 1819[n], and was succeeded in this vicarage by Richard Farrer, of Brasenose coll. Oxf. A.M. rector of Ashley, who was inst. 8 Oct. following, on the presentation of the same patron.

The Registers commence in 1588, but the early part is a transcript, and the baptisms are entered irregularly and not chronologically.

The Church stands a short distance east of the mansion, detached from the lawn by a sunk fence, and shrouded on the west by some venerable elms. It is dedicated to the holy virgin, and consists of a tower containing four bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. Notwithstanding the high antiquity of this parish, the oldest portion of the present edifice is a lancet window at the west end of the south aisle, which may be referred to the close of the twelfth century; the other windows are later insertions of decorated and perpendicular character. At the west end of the tower is a long narrow niche surmounted by a crocketted canopy and finial; and beneath it, a window of two lights with a dripstone springing from corbels and terminating in a finial. The tower is 13 ft. 2 in. long, by 8 ft. 2 in. wide; the nave 46 ft. 8 in. by 17 ft. 3 in.; the north aisle 43 ft. 10 in. by 11 ft. 8 in.; the south aisle 47 ft. 4 in. by 10 ft. 9 in.; and the chancel 19 ft. 8 in. by 16 ft. 10 in. The whole interior is a model of neatness; it is paved in lozenges of alternate white and grey stone with black marble at the joints, and pewed throughout with oak. In the panels are introduced some of the grotesque carvings from the ends of the old seats, and though it must be confessed the subjects are calculated to excite very opposite feelings to those of devotion, yet they deserved to be rescued from destruction as specimens of the perverted and exploded taste of the olden times; and with the same view a selection from them is given in the accompanying vignette.

All the windows are filled with painted glass, principally modern, except in the one at the east end of the north aisle, which is heraldic, and contains Knightley with numerous quarterings; but defective and erroneously marshalled coats, and misplaced inscriptions, bear ample testimony to the ignorant innovations of modern glaziers. The nave is divided from each aisle by early english circular pillars with plain mouldings, supporting three pointed arches; the western pillars were destroyed when the church was repaired, and plain piers substituted.

Monumental Inscriptions.

Nave. 1. Under the eastern arch on the south side of the nave is a fine altar tomb in high preservation, with cumbent figures in alabaster of sir Richard Knightley and his wife Joan Skinerton. The head of the knight reposes on his helmet and crest, and his feet are supported by a lion. His hair is short and cropped; round his neck is suspended a collar. He is in a suit of plate armour, with pass guards, and ornamented elbow points, and genouailles or knee pieces. The lady is in a close pedimented head dress: round her neck is a collar and triple chain with a pendant cross. Her vest is open round the bust, and has long plaited sleeves and ruffles. On her mantle, which is fastened across the breast by a band and tassels attached to two roses, are the arms and quarterings of Knightley. Her head rests on a double cushion supported by two angels, and at her feet is a lion. At the west end of the tomb, on an achievement, with mantle, helmet, and crest, is Knightley, quartering, 1. Golafre or Burgh; 2. Burgh; 3. Cowley; impaling 1. Skenard or Skinerton; 2. Harwedon; 3. St. John of Plampton; 4. Bagot; 5. Lyons; 6. Combemartyn or Collacombe; 7. Warkworth; 8. Morton Pinkeney *. The north side of the tomb is divided by foliated ogee arches into four compartments, in each of which is a female figure; and in each compartment on the south side, are two male figures in military, lay, or clerical habits.

On the ledge of the slab is inscribed in raised letters:

Orate p' a'i'ab's Ric'i Knyghtley militis' & Johanne ux'is ei' q' de'
Ric' obiit viij die me'sis Decembris
anno d'ni MCCCCCXXiiij et q' quidem
Johan'a obiit .... die mensis ....
An° d'ni MCCCCC.....

The central space of the whole nave is paved with a series of monumental slabs.

1. On a grey marble slab is a small brass figure of Thomas Knightley, esq. in plated armour with mail collar and skirts: his arms on his surcoat, a dagger at his right side, and a long sword at his left. His head is uncovered, and rests on his helmet and crest. At each corner, the arms of Knightley. Over the figure is a head, from which issues three labels or reasons bearing the following inscriptions:

Et i' novissima die de terra surrecturus sum
Et i' carne mea videbo deu' salvatore' meu'.

Beneath him is inscribed:

Orate p' a'i'a Thome Knyghtley Armig'i, secundi filii Ric'i Knyghtley militis
Qui quidem Thomas nuptus fuit Johan'e Burneby filie & heredi Thome Burneby armig'i, qui obiit sine exitu xviij die Octobris anno d'ni M°CCCCCxvi.

'foundation walls are still extant [b].' The ruin is now reduced to a small fragment of the west wall. The parochial duty has been performed for many years past in the chapel at Catesby house. The church yard, which still continues the place of burial, is on an eminence commanding Shuckburgh park and an extensive view into Warwickshire.

Monumental Inscriptions:

In the church yard is a neat altar tomb terminating in a pyramid surmounted by a gilt ball. On the west side is inscribed,

John Wilkins, D.D. a learned prelate and philosopher of the seventeenth century, was son of Walter Wilkins of Oxford, but born at Fawsley in 1614, in the house of the rev. John Dod, the Decalogist, his maternal grandfather. When only thirteen years of age he entered a student of New-Inn, Oxford, which he exchanged for Magdalen hall, where he graduated A.M. His first ecclesiastical preferment was the vicarage of his native place, which he probably resigned on becoming domestic chaplain to William lord Say and Sele. He afterwards served Charles count palatine of the Rhine in the same capacity; but on the commencement of the civil war joined the presbyterians, took the solemn league and covenant, and in 1648 was appointed warden of Wadham college by the parliamentary committee for reforming the university. In the following year he proceeded D.D. and when enjoined, subscribed the engagement to be faithful to the commonwealth. In 1656 he married Robina widow of Peter French and sister of Oliver Cromwell, then lord protector, who procured for him a dispensation for retaining his wardenship, though vacated on marriage by the statutes of the college. In 1659, through the influence of his nephew Richard Cromwell, he obtained the mastership of Trinity college, Cambridge, from which he was ejected at the restoration. The tide of ecclesiastical favor however soon flowed again: he was chosen preacher of the society of Gray's-inn; rector of Cranford, Middlesex, 1661; vicar of St. Lawrence Jewry, London, 1662; dean of Ripon; rector of Polebrook in this county, 1666; prebendary of London, 1667; and in 1668 elevated to the bishopric of Chester. He died at the house of his friend Dr. Tillotson, in Chancery Lane, London, 19 Nov. 1672, and was buried 12 Dec. in the chancel of St. Lawrence Jewry. By indefatigable application, combined with strong mental powers, he acquired a high reputation in mathematics, and in almost every department of natural and practical philosophy. Whilst warden of Wadham he encouraged the study of astronomy; and at his lodgings, Boyle, Dr. Wallis, and other scientific men, assembled to indulge their taste for philosophical experiments. The Royal Society of London was partly projected by him, and on its incorporation he became one of the most efficient members of its council. In public life he acted avowedly on the principle of submission to "the powers that be," which sufficiently explains, if it does not justify, the vacillation of his religious conduct. Amidst the turbulence of contending parties he was ever distinguished for his moderation; and by advocating mutual concessions, exposed himself to the enmity and reproaches of the opponents of conciliation. So far from being mercenary, he devoted his professional income to the service of the church from which he derived it; and being secured from want by his private fortune, would often say he did not wish to be richer. Bishop Burnet thus eulogises him: "He was a man of as great a mind, as true a judgment, as eminent virtues, and of as good a soul, as any I ever "knew; and though he married Cromwell's sister, yet he made no other use of that alliance but to do good offices, "and to cover the university of Oxford from the sourness of Owen and Goodwin. At Cambridge he joined with "those who studied to propagate better thoughts, to take men off from being in parties, or from narrow notions, "from superstitious conceits, and fierceness about opinions. He was also a great observer and promoter of expe-"rimental philosophy, which was then a new thing, and much looked after. He was naturally ambitious, but "was the wisest clergyman I ever knew. He was a lover of mankind, and delighted in doing good." As an author, he aimed to be perspicuous rather than elegant, to instruct rather than to please. His first publication appeared anonymously in 1638, during his incumbency at Fawsley, where it was probably written; and is entitled "The Discovery of a New World; or a Discourse tending to prove that it is probable there may be another "habitable World in the Moon; with a Discourse concerning the possibility of a passage thither." 1638. 8vo. 4th edit. 1684. 8vo. HELLIDON.

In ancient records "Eliden," "Helidene," or "Halidon," may possibly be derived from the saxon Hals, steep, and dune, down, which at least is descriptive of the situation of the village. The lordship contains about 1510 acres; part is old inclosure, and the open fields were inclosed by act of parliament 14 Geo. 3 (1774). The principal proprietors are, Charles Parkhurst, esq. of Catesby (nephew and heir at law of the late J. G. Parkhurst, esq.), lord of the manor, who has about 155 acres; the vicar, in right of his church, about 60 acres; Mr. Robert Canning about 275 acres; the devisees of the late Joseph Ashby, esq. of Ashby Ledgers, about 235 acres; sir Francis Shuckburgh, bart. of Shuckburgh in Warwickshire, about 135 acres; and Mr. Richard Rutledge of Wedon, and Mr. Richard Stanton of Drayton near Daventry, about 120 acres each. It is bounded on the north by Newbold Grounds and Catesby; south, by Charwelton; west, by Priors Marston in Warwickshire; and northwest by Shuckburgh in the same county. Morton, in noticing "the small mountainous track" in this district, observes that "Rydon-Hill, a Hill near Hellidon, if you take in its several Stations, has the most extensive View of "all the high Hills adjoining. Thence you see the Malvern-Hills with Ease, when the Eye is assisted with a "glass, and, 'tis thought, may descry the Wreken in Shropshire[a]." The soil of the upper part of the lordship is light red land, and of the lower, a deep loam and clay; about one third of the whole is arable.

The river Leam rises close to the eastern entrance to the village of Hellidon at the foot of a small hill, and immediately forms a considerable basin called Leam pool; from whence, with the accession of some rills from the western side of this lordship, Staverton, and Catesby, it enters Warwickshire, where it receives the Ichin and other tributary streams; and after naming the two villages of Leamington Hastang, the seat of the Whelers, and Leamington Priors, now a place of fashionable resort for its saline baths, it flows into the lesser Avon near Warwick.

It is not a little remarkable that another river, the Charwell, takes its rise within a mile of the Leam, and "has a "small but constant supply from Rydon-Hill in Hellidon Lordship[b]."

Manorial History. Honor of Berkhampsted*. Honor of Clare†. The origin of Hellidon is involved in obscurity. It is unnoticed in domesday; nor is there any clue to deducing it from the domesday survey of any neighbouring manor. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 "Eliden" was certified to contain four hides of the fee of Berkhampsted[c]. It was soon afterwards transferred to the honor of Clare or Glocester, under which it was held as two manors by the Giffords and Baskervilles. In the portion of the Testa de Nevill which may be dated between 31 and 40 Hen. 3 the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented that "Heliden" was of the fee of Glocester and contained four hides; that neither Stephen Bansano [Baskerville] nor Matilda Giffard appeared, but that they owed suit to the hundred court and paid 33s. yearly to the king[d].

Gifford Manor. The inheritance of Walter Gifford earl of Buckingham passed in marriage to the Clares earls of Clare and Glocester; and though the point of connection cannot be ascertained, it is not improbable but the Giffords of Brimmesfield in Glocestershire, of which barony the Baskerville manor here was on one occasion found to be held[e], and the Giffords, mesne lords of this manor and of Twyford in Buckinghamshire, where they principally resided, were junior branches of, and enfeoffed by, the earl's family.

In 1 Joh. (1199) Matilda Gifford was returned to be quit of the third scutage of king Richard, by writ of the earl of Clare of whom the fee was held[f]. In 9 Edw. 2 (1315) John Giffard and Roger de Baskerville were joint lords of Helidon[g].

Roger Gifford, fourth in descent from John, died 10 Hen. 4 (1408), and was succeeded in this manor by Katherine his daughter and heir by his first wife Elizabeth, daughter of sir John Seyton, on whose issue it was settled[h]. "The wardship of this young lady, with the Manor of Hellidon, were granted by the king to William 'lord Roos of Hamlake: but in the twelfth year of this reign John Stokes and Isabel his wife, the late widow of 'Roger Giffard, laid claim to the custody of both, under a pretence that the Manor was not held of the King 'in capite, but of John de Seyton, as of his Manor of Maydemsell." In 8 Hen. 6 (1429) a settlement was made of this manor on the marriage of Thomas Gifford, esq. with Eleanor Vaux[k], from whom it lineally descended, agreeably to the subjoined pedigree, to Ursula daughter and heiress of Thomas Gifford, esq. and wife of Sir Thomas Wenman.

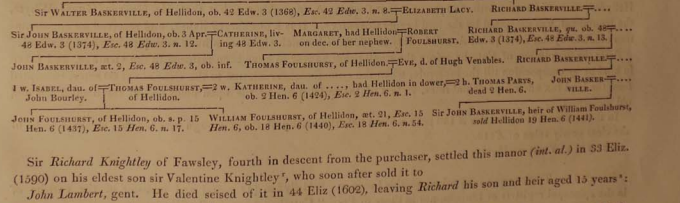
HELLIDON.



Sir Thomas Wenman and Ursula his wife sold this manor in 1556 to Robert Glover[1] of Hellidon, yeoman, who died the year following, seised of a capital messuage and seventeen virgates and a quarter of land in Hellidon, leaving William his son and heir, aged 23 years[m]. This estate has since been alienated in parcels, but a considerable portion is now vested in the devisees of the late Joseph Ashley, esq. of Ashby Ledgers.

Baskerville Manor. In the Testa de Nevill about 25 Hen. 3 (1241), Roger de Baskerville accounted for half a knight's fee in "Helydon" of the honor of Clare[n]. Sir John Baskerville, grandson of Roger, who was joint lord of Hellidon 9 Edw. 2 (1315), died in 48 Edw. 3 (1374), seised of certain manors in Herefordshire and Shropshire, and of the manor in "Helyden" called Baskerville's manor, held of the baron of Brimmesfield (then in grant to Edward De Spencer on attainder of Gifford), by the service of rendering a rose yearly on the feast of the nativity of St. John the baptist[o]. John his son and heir dying in infancy, this manor resorted to his paternal aunt Margaret, wife of Robert Foulehurst, in whose line it continued till the death of William Foulshurst without issue in 18 Hen. 6 (1440), when it vested in sir John Baskerville[p], of whom it was purchased the following year by Richard Knightley, esq. of Fawsley[q].

BASKERVILLE and FOULSHURST of HELLIDON.

From public records, &c.

Sir Richard Knightley of Fawsley, fourth in descent from the purchaser, settled this manor (int. al.) in 33 Eliz. (1590) on his eldest son sir Valentine Knightley[r], who soon after sold it to

John Lambert, gent. He died seised of it in 44 Eliz (1602), leaving Richard his son and heir aged 15 years[s]: of whom it was purchased in 1613 by

John Ball, gent. who died 12 July, 16 Jac. (1618), and his sisters Jocosa wife of Edward Verney, esq. Cecily widow of Samuel Bosse, esq. Mary wife of Anthony Marriott, gent. Dorothy wife of Robert Calcott, gent. and Margaret only child of his sister Elizabeth Bell, deceased, and wife of Edward Waterhouse, gent. were his co-heirs; but by will a few days before his death he devised this manor to his nephew

George Marriott, gent.[t] He died seised of it 12 Oct. 20 Jac. (1622), leaving Thomas his son and heir, aged 2 years[u]; by whom, or his immediate successor, it was alienated to the Onleys of Catesby; of which family both Catesby and Hellidon were purchased by John Parkhurst, esq. From him they descended to the late John George Parkhurst, esq. on whose decease they devolved on his nephew and heir male Charles Parkhurst, esq. of Catesby, the present proprietor*.

No manorial courts are now held.

Catesby Priory had lands in Hellidon, which were valued in 26 Hen. 8 (1536) at 42s. yearly, and after the dissolution were granted, with the site and demesnes of the priory, to John Onley, esq.[x]

Elstow Abbey near Bedford had a mill in "Helyden" rated at 12s. yearly in the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[y].

The Gifford Manor House stood at the east entrance of the village in a field called the Wood hill. It was taken down by the Ashley family about twenty years since.

The Baskerville Manor House is at the west or opposite end of the village, and is now reduced to a farm house. Mrs. Althamia Parkhurst, widow of Nathaniel Parkhurst, esq. held it in dower, and was the last resident proprietor.

The Village is about five miles from Daventry, and in the time of Bridges consisted of 'about sixty families[z].' By the census of 1801 it contained 81 houses and 340 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 71 houses and 340 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 89 houses and 408 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £102. 13s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2735. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £489. 13s. 3d. at 7s. in the £. The wake follows the 6th of July.

Advowson. John Gifford and Roger de Baskervill, '*as Lords of the Manor, in the third year of Edward III. 'laid claim to the presentation of the church of Hellidon; but upon a proper hearing, the cause was decided in 'favour of the prioress of Catesby.' After the dissolution, the impropriation and advowson of the vicarage passed to the Onleys[b]; but in Jan. 3 Car. (1627-8) Lionel Randall, Edward Craggs, and John Elliott, esquires, conveyed them, under the description of "the Chappelry of Hellidon with the tithes," &c. to Frances Bradgate, widow of Richard Bradgate, esq. of Peatling Parva in Leicestershire, by whom they were assigned to her eighth and youngest son Edward Bradgate of Hellidon, gent.[c] Part of the impropriate tithes, according to Bridges, 'were sold by Mr. Bradgate to the landholders[d],' and in 1648 he sold all the tithes of corn and grain arising out of 24 yardlands (about half the lordship), and out of certain inclosed demesne lands of the manor, to sir Richard Shuckburgh † of Shuckburgh in Warwickshire[e]; and land awarded at the inclosure in exoneration of the said tithes is now in possession of his lineal representative sir Francis Shuckburgh, bart.

The Advowson of the vicarage has descended from Edward Bradgate, gent. through an heir female, to Thomas Scrafton, esq. of Enfield in Middlesex[c].

The Rectory does not occur in any of the ecclesiastical taxations; but in 28 Hen. 8 (1536), prior to the dissolution of Catesby priory, the tithes of Hellidon were rated at £10 per ann.[f]

The Vicarage was ordained by Hugh Wells bishop of Lincoln[g] between 11 Joh. (1209) and 19 Hen. 3 (1234), but is not valued in any of the ecclesiastical taxations; the prioress of Catesby probably supplying the cure and retaining both the impropriate and vicarial tithes. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified that Hellydon was a vicarage worth £20 per ann. that the patron was unknown, but that Mr. George [Guye] Whyte, the incumbent, was presented by the lord keeper Coventry[h]. It is a discharged living, and received an augmentation of £200 by lot, from queen Anne's bounty in 1756, with which eight acres have been purchased at Welford.

After the dissolution of Catesby priory the small tithes appear to have been restored to the vicarage, and taken in kind or by composition till the inclosure, when the commissioners allotted to the vicar about 60 acres, exempted from the land tax and all parochial rates, in lieu of the small tithes of the open fields and of the homesteads and old inclosures.

In the return of livings under £150 per ann. in 1809, the bishop of Peterborough certified this vicarage to be of the clear yearly value of £118.

There is no Vicarage House.

Vicars. There are no institutions to this benefice in the episcopal registers of Lincoln, nor in those of Peterborough till 15 Oct. 1607, when

William Noœll, A.B. was instituted to "the perpetual "vicarage of the parish church of Hellydon" on the presentation of the king by lapse. Either he, or a contemporary of both names, was rector of St. Peter's, Northampton, from Jan. 1576-7 to Jan. 1590-1. He was buried here 5 May 1624, having "been vicar of "Hellydon [17 years] and minister of the parishe of "Catesbye 44 yeares." His successor, Guy White, A.B. was inst. to "the vicarage or free "chapel of Hellydon" 2 June following, on the presentation of Lionell Randall, esq. of Kimbell Parva in Buckinghamshire.

John Hyde of Christ Ch. coll. Oxf. A.M. was presented by Thomas Scrafton, esq. of Enfield, and Moses Scrafton, gent. of Kentish Town, in Middlesex, and inst. 24 Sept. 1807. He is also rector of St. Martin's, Oxford.

THE REGISTERS commence in 1571.

THE CHURCH, dedicated to St. John the baptist, stands on a steep ascent near the centre of the village, and consists of a tower containing four bells, south porch, nave, and chancel. The windows are square headed, except in the chancel which has a lancet window on the south side, and an arched one foliated at the east end. 'There are stone steps which lead out of the church-yard over the south porch, where it is supposed was formerly 'a resting place for the priest, and from whence it is probable he might give absolution to such penitents as had 'been guilty of public and notorious crimes. For that such penitents were sometimes absolved before the porch 'or doors of the church, appears from the thirty-second canon of the third council of Carthage[n].' The steps here alluded to were removed a few years since. The interior is of one pace. The tower is 13 ft. 6 in. long, by 7 ft. 5 in. wide; the nave 53 ft. by 21 ft. 3 in.; and the chancel 23 ft. 9 in. by 16 ft. 3 in.

BENEFACTIONS (p. 240). BALL'S SCHOOL. John Ball, gent. by will dated 6 July 1618, made (int. al.) the following bequest. "I doe bequeath outt of my lands att Hellidon ten pounds and outt of my lands of "Charwelton ten pounds more towards the maintenance of a school master at Hellidon for ever, to be paid unto "him by equal portions at our Lady and Michaelmes days. And I will that the vicar of Hellidon and he that "enjoyeth my mansion-house or manor in Hellidon shall have the choyce of the Schooll Master from time to "time and if they shall not agree I will that the next Justice and one of them shall make choyce." And he further directed his executors to expend £100 in fitting up the school within a year after his decease.

The bequest of the late rev. sir John Knightley, bart. in aid of a Sunday school in this parish, produces £5. 15s. per ann.

KILSBY,

In the saxon charter of earl Leofric is written "Kyldesby," in domesday "Chidesbi," and in the hydarium of Henry 2nd "Gildesborn;" thus furnishing a striking instance of the loose and capricious orthography of early records, and illustrating the inefficacy of the best index locorum to them, in tracing manorial history,—the initial letter in the present case being varied in every reading. The more ancient appellation was adopted in succeeding times, and softened down to Kilsby. The latter syllable is from the saxon bye, a place or habitation, and the former one probably had reference to the monosyllabic name of the original saxon proprietor. The lordship was inclosed by act of parliament 17 Geo. 3 (1777), and contains about 2210 acres; of which G. H. Arnold, esq. of Ashby Lodge, the principal lord of the manor, has about 150 acres; Warner Wright, M. D. of Norwich, the principal lessee of the prebendal or impropriate estate, about 280 acres; the vicar, in right of his church, about 80 acres; Mr. John Cowley about 145 acres; Mr. William Cowley of the Lodge about 135 acres; Mr. Thomas Roberts about 130 acres; Mr. Thomas Usher about 120 acres; Mr. Thomas Lee about 100 acres; Mr. William Cleaver of Green's Norton about 100 acres; Mr. Richard Cowley, and Mr. George Cowley, sons of the late Mr. John Cowley, about 100 acres each; and the residue is distributed in smaller freeholds, principally in the occupation of the proprietors. It is bounded on the north by Barby Nortoft; north-east and east by the Watling street road, which divides it from Crick in Guilsborough hundred, and on the south-east from Watford in the same hundred; south by Ashby Ledgers; west by Barby; and north-west by Hilmorton in Warwickshire, from which it is separated all the way by Rangebrook. The soil of the lower field or western and northern sides of the lordship is a strong dark loam on a clay bottom, and of the higher grounds a light loam on a gravelly bottom. The proportion of arable land is about one-fifth. Morton mentions "old delves at Kilsby" which had been dug for marl, though long since disused[o]. In 4 Edw. 1 (1276) the jurors of Guilsborough hundred presented, that the inhabitants of Kilsby had made a marl pit between that village and Creek, by which the king's highway was obstructed and narrowed, to the great inconvenience of travellers[p].

There is a fine bed of gravel in this lordship; the pit near the village adjoining the Watford road furnishes a variety of extraneous and other fossils, as various echini, ammonites obtusa, and Bucklandi, &c.; belemnites, gryphæ incurva, &c. terebratulæ; septaria, fragments of granite, micaceous schistus, and portions of elephants' teeth.

Several rills rise in or intersect this lordship. Range brook, the principal one, is the boundary for some distance between this county and Warwickshire. Ashby brook divides in this lordship, one stream flowing to Northampton, the other to Warwick. North brook separates this parish from Barby, and proceeds in the direction of Warwick. A fourth brook divides this parish from Crick, and joins the lesser Avon near Dove bridge.

MANORIAL HISTORY. COVENTRY PRIORY FEE. Leofric earl of Mercia, by the advice and licence of king Edward (the confessor) and pope Alexander, on the dedication of his church at Coventry in 1043, assigned, for the food and raiment of the abbot and monks serving God there, twenty-four towns in various counties, with sac and soc, thol and theam, and all liberties and customs as held by himself from king Edward; amongst which places were "Kyldesby and Wynewyke in Hamptonensi provincia[q];" and under the possessions of the church of Coventry in domesday, "Chidesbi" (or Kilsby) was certified to contain two hides. The arable land was five caruçates, two of which were in demesne with three servants; and ten villeins and eight bordars had the remaining three. There were eight acres of meadow, and the whole was worth 50s. yearly[r].

This manor was alienated within the ensuing century, for in the hydarium of Hen. 2 the bishop of Lincoln was returned to hold two hides in demesne in "Gildesborn[s]." Henry Burghersh bishop of Lincoln, in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), claimed by bill that his land and tenants might be quit of fines and pleas for murder in his manors of "Kylesby" and Hollowell, &c.; and produced the king's charter, dated 15 Feb. 3 Edw. 3 (1328-9), reciting and confirming the charter of his ancestor king Richard, which granted those privileges to all the lands and tenants of St. Hugh bishop of Lincoln and his successors[t]. The bishop was summoned the same year (3 Edw. 3), by writ of quo warranto, to shew by what right he claimed the chattels of felons and fugitives, view of frank pledge, correction of the assize of bread and beer, wayfs, strays, infangtheof, and free warren in his manor of "Kilesby," and also in his fee of Hollowell, except free warren; to which he pleaded, that the king, out of devotion to the blessed virgin Mary, to whose honor the church of Lincoln is founded, and of his special regard for the claimant, granted to him and his successors the chattels of his men and tenants in all his lands and fees, whenever forfeited by being convicted of felony, flying from justice, refusing to appear and plead in judgment, or any other offence; that by another charter[u] the king granted to him and his successors free warren in his demesne lands of "Kildesby," so that no person should enter therein without his licence to take or chase beasts of warren, under a penalty of £10 to the king; and that he was entitled to all the other privileges by prescription. But the king's attorney contended that he ought not to enjoy the privileges granted by those charters, because he had not sued a writ of ad quod dammum before the king's escheator to inquire what damage the king would suffer by granting them, and no inquisition thereof had been returned into chancery; that the bishop had tumbril at Kildesby to punish brewers for breach of assize, but he had no pillory, and punished bakers for breach of assize by amerciament; that he had neither tumbril nor pillory at Hollowell, but punished breaches of assize by amerciament only; and that the bishop being an ecclesiastical person could not plead prescription for wayfs and strays. The jury presented, that the bishop and his predecessors had from time beyond memory exercised the privileges of view of frank pledge, wayf, stray, and infangtheof, in the manors of Kildesby and Holewell, but that the bishop took a fine of 3s. 4d. in commutation of punishment by pillory and tumbril; which being contrary to the law of the land, the view of frank pledge was seized into the king's hands. It was restored again for a fine of half a mark; the other claims were allowed; and the grants of chattels of felons and fugitives confirmed by a new charter dated 12 Jan. 3 Edw. 3 (1329-30)[x]. Kilsby continued an appendage to the see of Lincoln till 26 Sept. 1 Edw. 6 (1547), when Henry (Holbeach) bishop of Lincoln conveyed it and divers other manors in the counties of Oxford, Leicester, Rutland, Huntingdon, Bedford, Nottingham, and Lincoln, in exchange to

George Whitmore and Thomas Whitmore, esquires[z].

By deed 3 June 23 Car. (1647), sir John Weld of Arnold in Middlesex, second son of sir John Weld of Holwell Gray, deceased, dame Frances, widow of said sir John Weld, Humphrey Weld of East Lulworth in Dorsetshire, esq. son and heir of said sir John Weld, deceased, and George Weld of Quadering in Lincolnshire, esq. third son of said sir John Weld, deceased, in consideration of £500, conveyed the manor of "Kildesby," with lands, rents, and services, as well of free as of copyhold and customary tenants, court leet and court baron, &c. to

Daniel Reading of Northampton, gent. who by will, 8 Feb. 1657-8, devised it to Francis Harvey of Weston Favell, esq. and another, in trust to sell; of whom it was purchased in Jan. 1660-1, by John Hollis, Thomas Hall, John Lee, and Robert Ayre, all of Kilsby[a].

George Arnold, then of St. Anne's Westminster, esq. in 1719 purchased of John Hollis of Kilsby, gent. two fourths, or a moiety of this manor. His son

Lumley Arnold, esq. purchased in 1771, of Mrs. Martha Theed, widow, sister and heiress of Henry Basset of Daventry, gent. a fourth part of this manor; in 1773, of William Waterfield of Daventry, gent. one-sixth of a fourth part of this manor; and in 1777, of Richard Goodman of Williamscote in Oxfordshire, gent. another sixth of a fourth part of this manor[b]; all which shares have descended to his grandson

George Henry Arnold, esq. of Ashby Ledgers. Mr. Thomas Lee holds three-sixths of a fourth part, and Mr. Thomas Usher the remaining sixth of a fourth part of this manor.

The lords of the manor hold a court leet and court baron annually.

A considerable portion of the lordship is copyhold of inheritance.

Gallows-bank, at the extremity of the parish overlooking the Watling street road, evidently denotes the spot where criminals were executed, whilst the privilege of infangtheof continued in force. Bridges says, 'In the 'town there is a spot of ground called Malt-Mill-Green, where the Lord's mill was formerly placed, and at which 'every tenant was obliged to grind his malt, and pay toll; and the town bake-house and oven are still standing, 'at a corner of a close called the Hall-Close, where according to old custom the tenants were wont to bake their 'bread[b].' Neither the building nor either of the customs are now remaining.

The Manor House doubtless stood in the hall-close north of the church yard; but being long since destroyed, the courts are held at one of the village inns.

The Village is rurally dispersed, and stands about five miles from Daventry, on the turnpike road to Lutterworth. In the time of Bridges it consisted of 'seventy-two houses, nine of which are set apart for the use of the 'poor[b]. By the census of 1801 it contained 148 houses and 703 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 143 houses and 642 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 154 houses and 690 inhabitants. The great increase of population during the last century was owing to a considerable manufacture of tammies and other worsted goods being carried on here, which has been rapidly on the decline since the termination of the late war. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £142. 11s. 8d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £3534. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £1155, at 11s. in the £. 'The wake is kept on the Sunday sevennight after the feast 'of St. Michael.'

The Advowson was claimed as a chapelry to Barby *, by Robert de Baud and Catherine (Lisle) his wife, who in 3 Hen. 3 (1218), by fine, released and confirmed it to (Hugh Wells) bishop of Lincoln and his successors, discharged from all tributary acknowledgment to, but still to be considered a member of, the mother church of Barby[c]. The præcentor of Lincoln is ex officio impropriator or prebendary of Kilsby, and patron of the vicarage.

The Rectory was valued in the taxations of 1254[d] (38 Hen. 3) and 1291[e] (20 Edw. 1) at 10 marks (£6. 13s. 4d.) per ann. It was subsequently converted into a

Prebend of the cathedral of Lincoln. John Buckingham bishop of Lincoln, who is erroneously stated by Brown Willis to have purchased the advowson of Kilsby[f], procured a bull from pope Urban 6th, and a licence from king Richard the 2nd[g], to assign this prebend, with the advowson of the vicarage, in augmentation of the præcentorship or chantorship of that cathedral, which from its inadequate stipend was then, and had been for several years, vacant. The deed of annexation was executed by Simon (Sudbury) archbishop of Canterbury,

3 July 1380 (4 Ric. 2)[h], and confirmed by the dean and chapter of Lincoln in April 1383, when the chantor (John de Newport) was put into real and corporal possession[i]. "Notwithstanding this it has been several times after the first 100 years collated to as a distinct prebend till 1633, when it was finally settled and determined to belong to the præcentorship and adjudged part of that dignity[k]. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) the rectory, as it is there called, is valued at £14 per ann.[l] The prebendal estate (except the advowson) is demised on lease for three lives, renewable.

The commissioners of inclosure allotted to the lessee of the præcentor or chantor of Lincoln, with the prebend of Kilsby annexed, 317 a. 0 r. 8 p. in lieu of glebe lands, tithes, and moduses; of which about 28 acres were sold to defray his share of the expences of the act.

The Prebend of Lincoln called Prebenda Major in Bedford, was entitled, with some trifling exceptions, to the great tithes of eight and a quarter yard-lands freehold, called the Hall yard-lands, and evidently therefore the demesne lands of the manor; in lieu of which the commissioners of inclosure awarded 35 a. 1 r. 17 p. to the lessee of the prebendary, who sold about two acres and a half to defray his share of the expences of the act.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Daventry. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it is rated at £7. 10s. 7d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations[l]; and in 1655 the parliamentary commissioners certified it to be a vicarage formerly in the gift of the bishop of Lincoln worth £44 per ann.; and that Mr. Timothy Hodgkin was incumbent[m]. Under the act 5 Anne (1707) it was returned to be of the clear yearly value of £18. 19s. 6d. only. It is consequently a discharged living, and in 1768 received an augmentation of £200, by lot, from queen Anne's bounty, with which 7 a. 2 r. 17 p. were purchased from the lessee of the præcentor after the inclosure. The commissioners of inclosure allotted to the vicar 76 a. 2 r. 28 p. in lieu of glebe and vicarial tithes; besides which he has the tithes of a few orchards and gardens belonging to persons who had not open field land at the time of the inclosure to exonerate them. In the return of livings under £150 per ann. made to the governors of queen Anne's bounty in 1809, the bishop of Peterborough certified it to be of the clear yearly value of £143. 11s. The Vicarage house, or rather cottage, is a mean thatched building on the south side of the church yard; and there has been no resident incumbent since Mr. Tarsey.

Rectors. Hugh de Cambio, clerk, by the bishop of Lincoln, 1220.

Richard de Wyke, between 1258 and 1272. He was also rector of Byfield.

Robert de Leycestria, subdeacon, 22 Oct. 1272. He was also rector of Boddington.

John son of Alan de Dalderby, acolyte, 17 July 1305. He appears to have resigned for the rectory of Walgrave in 1316.

Robert de Dalderby, subdeacon, 12 June 1316. He and his predecessor were probably related to their contemporary and diocesan John de Dalderby bishop of Lincoln.

Robert de Kildesby, 20 Jan. 1333-4. He was rector of Geddington in 1350.

Walter son of German de Brikendon, 12 Jan. 1336-7.

William de Berughby or Barby, 27 Nov. 1337.

John Selby, 1351.

Walter de Brunthorp, priest, 5 Nov. 1352. He was also rector of Harleston.

Sir John de Carlton, LL.D. 1363; whose other preferments will be found under Abington.

John de Bannebury, exchanged the rectory of Burnham in Buckinghamshire with William de Navesby, priest, 29 Nov. 1377. He was afterwards archdeacon of Chester and prior of Chichester[n].

Vicars. William Sherman, priest, was admitted to the vicarage of the prebendal church of Kilsby on the presentation of John Newport, precentor of Lincoln cathedral and prebendary of Kilsby, 19 June 1386.

Thomas Merston, priest, by the same patron, 17 July 1406.

William Dawys, priest, by John Kylburne, precentor of Lincoln, 18 Oct. 1447.

Sir William Res, priest, by Alexander Prower, precentor of Lincoln and prebendary of Kilsby, 17 Jan. 1463-4.

William Belyeter, by Henry Boleyn, precentor of Lincoln and prebendary of Kilsby, between 1471 and 1474.

Sir Robert Hynkeley, priest, 9 April 1474.

Sir John Hey or Hay, chaplain, by John Walles, precentor of Lincoln and prebendary of Kilsby, 23 Apr. 1490. By his will dated 5 Sept. 1521 he directed his body to be buried in the chancel, and devised his two houses to Robert Thornys and his heirs for evermore, to keep an obit in the church of Kilsby of four priests and two clerks[o].

Sir Richard Hall, chaplain, by Mast. William Woodward, precentor of Lincoln and prebendary of Kilsby, 26 Sept. 1521.

Bartholomew Grene, A.M. instituted 8 Dec. 1565, on the collation of the bishop, by lapse. On his decease

George Hordren was presented by John Longland, (præcentor and) prebendary of Kilsby, and inst. 23 July 1567.

William Lee was inst. 22 Oct. 1571, on the presentation of the same patron, then archdeacon of Bucks.

William Hodgkinson occurs as "Minister" from 1571 to 1613[p].

William Wilson, A.B. was presented by John Bill, D.D. prebendary and rector of Kilsby, and inst. 17 Nov. 1615, on the death of the last incumbent. On his resignation

Nicholas Darton, A.M. was presented by John Rudyard, prebendary of Kilsby, and inst. 31 Jan. 1627-8. He was a native of Cornwall, and entered a servitor in Exeter coll. Oxf. in 1618. He published, 1. Christ, the true and absolute bishop; a sermon on 1 Pet. 2. 25. 4to. 1641. 2. Ecclesia Anglicana, or his clear and protestant Manifesto, as an evangelical Key sent to the Governor of Oxford, for the opening of the Church doors there, that is shut up without prayers or preaching. Qu. 1649?

"...." Worth. Born in the parish of Woolstone near "Coventry. He was first ejected from a sequestration at "Burton upon Dunsmore in Warwickshire, and after "wards from this place [Kilsby], where he preached "without any title, by the Bartholomew act [s]." He was silenced for preaching, rather than ejected from the living, as no institution occurs here on the deprivation of an incumbent.

James Baker was inst. 5 July 1682, on the presentation of the king, by lapse.

Thomas Clendon of Eman. coll. Camb. A.M. was inst. 20 May 1702, on the presentation of the queen, by lapse. On his decease

James Mead was presented by the queen, by lapse, and inst. 2 Nov. 1710. He resigned for the vicarage of Long Buckby, and

Ralph Clayton of Hart hall, Oxf. A.M. was inst. 17 Nov. 1720, on the presentation of David Trimnell, S.T.P. præcentor of Lincoln and prebendary of Kilsby. On his cession the same patron presented

John Wilkinson, A.B. who was inst. 19 Mar. 1729-30. His death introduced

James Tarsey of Corp. Chr. coll. Oxf. A.M. inst. 16 Nov. 1738, on the presentation of the same patron. He died 28 June 1774, and was buried here, when

William Denny was presented by William Richardson, D.D. præcentor of Lincoln, and inst. 2 Nov. following. He was educated at Daventry academy, but after officiating for a short time to a dissenting congregation in Suffolk, conformed, and entered himself of Lincoln coll. Oxford. He was master of the free school at Daventry from 1772 to 1787; vicar of Wolfhampcote in Warwickshire; lecturer of St. John's, Coventry; and one of the masters of the free school in that city. He was buried here 16 Apr. 1794 [q], and

David Williams was inst. 12 May following, on the presentation of John Prettyman, A.M. præcentor of Lincoln. He exchanged this benefice for the vicarage of Alconbury in Huntingdonshire, with Henry Smith of Christ Ch. coll. Oxf. A.M. son of the late rev. Dr. Smith, master of Westminster school, who was presented by the same patron, and inst. 4 Nov. 1809. He is also prebendary of Southwell in Nottinghamshire.

The Registers commence in 1571, but are occasionally imperfect.

The Church, dedicated to St. Faith or St. Denis, or, according to Bacon, to St. Andrew, consists of a tower (containing four bells) surmounted by a low octagonal spire, north aisle and chapel, south aisle and porch, nave, and chancel. Nearly all the windows are despoiled of their mullions and tracery. The tower is 11 ft. 8 in. long, by 8 ft. 3 in. wide; the nave and aisles 50 ft. 3 in. long; the nave 15 ft. 5 in.; the north aisle 12 ft. 6 in.; and the south aisle 16 ft. 4 in. wide; the north chapel 12 ft. 1 in. by 13 ft. 4 in.; and the chancel 30 ft. 11 in. by 14 ft. 10 in. The interior was paved, new pewed, and a west gallery erected in 1816. The old font has been destroyed. The nave is uniformly divided from each aisle by four arches on octangular pillars with plain mouldings; and from the chancel by a similar arch of larger span. The north chapel is separated from the aisle by a low arch.

The Independents have a joint society here and at Crick, which originated in the ministry of Mr. Worth, and the ejectment of the rector of the latter village; but the public worship of the society was conducted for nearly a century without a stated pastor; the first being

Thomas Strange, one of Dr. Doddridge's students, who was settled here in 1751. By his exertions a new meeting-house was erected, and the adjoining house and garden appropriated to the minister for the time being. A posthumous volume of his "Sermons on various subjects," with a brief memoir (by Mr. Robins of Daventry), was published by subscription in 1807, 8vo. He died 1 Sept. 1784, and his successor

Jacob Harwood was ordained in 1786. He removed to the neighbourhood of Leeds, and was succeeded by Thomas Gritton; on whose removal to Kendal in Westmoreland,

Stephen Morell was ordained in 1795. In June 1799 he accepted an invitation to Little Baddow in Essex, and

Thomas Spencer succeeded him in Nov. following. He removed to Dartmouth in Devonshire, Mar. 1811. and William Morgan was ordained July following.

The Meeting House, erected in 1764, stands in an open part of the village, and is a neat stone building 33 ft. long, by 34 ft. wide.

On a square marble tablet against the south wall:

To the Memory of the Revd Thos Strange;
this House erected
& this Congregation greatly improved, by the blessing of God on his wise & unwearied labours, are a much nobler Monument

Benefactions (vide p. 240). Cowley's Charity consists of five acres of land at Lilbourn, which now lets for £10 per ann. The commissioners of inclosure allotted 6 a. 1 r. 33 p. in trust for the poor, which now lets for £24 per ann.

Bridges says, 'On a hill to the east of the town is a large bank or barrow, with a thorn-bush growing on it; not 'improbably supposed from its vicinity to the Watling Street to be the tumulus of some Roman soldier[1].' No tradition of the spot now remains, and I searched for it in vain.

LITCHBOROUGH, or LICHBOROUGH,

Is written in domesday "Liceberge," and in early records "Lichebarue," "Lichebarewe," or "Lichbarrowe." Lic or Lice-beorg is in saxon, literally, a burial place or cemetery; and the subsequent appellation will bear an analogous interpretation. Lich is from the saxon Lice. a corpse, and the gate through which the dead were carried into the church-yard was anciently called the Lich-gate; and barewe or barrow is well known to be a synonymous term for a sepulchral tumulus. However applicable the name might originally have been to this place, the progress of cultivation has obliterated every vestige of tumuli or early interments.

This parish contains about 1600 acres, exclusive of about 54 acres belonging to it in the adjoining manor of Foxley. The lordship was formerly divided into three open or common fields called Rodmore or Radmore, Windmill, and High cross fields, and a parcel of woodland called the Heath. The former, or eastern side of the lordship, was inclosed by deed of private agreement 20 Oct. 23 Car. 1 (1647); and Windmill and High cross fields, with the Heath, were inclosed by another deed of private agreement 1 Aug. 10 Ann (1711). The principal proprietors are, Mrs. Grant and her son William Grant, esq. who have about 460 acres; William Blake, esq. of Welwyn in Hertfordshire, lord of the manor, who has about 280 acres; the rector, in right of his church, about 166 acres; Mr. John Manning of Harpole about 180 acres; and Mr. Richard Linnell of Stow, and Mr. John Wait, nearly 100 acres each. It is bounded on the north and north-east by Stow, from which it is divided by a rivulet called Stow-brook, which, rising in Farthingston field, runs into the Nen at Lower Heyford; east by Grimscote in the parish of Cold Higham, and south-east by Pateshull, both in Towcester hundred; south by Blakesley, and west by Maidford, both in Norton hundred; and north-west by Farthingston.

[1] Br. 1. p. 73.

The soil varies from clay and loam to red land, and about three-fourths of the lordship is in permanent pasture.

The growth of two cedars of Lebanon planted on Mr. Grant's lawn in 1790, having been accurately marked, the result is perhaps deserving of notice. They were about 18 in. high when planted, and have progressively measured as follows:

	Jan. 1808.	April 1810.	Dec. 1811.	Nov. 1813.	Dec. 1814.	Dec. 1815.	Jan. 1818.	Dec. 1820.	Jan. 1823.	April 1824.

It is calculated that each tree contains about 20 feet of timber, and the lower branches of each, which have never been cut or lopped, cover a circle of 20 yards diameter.

A plant, supposed by our early botanists to be peculiar to this place, was discovered here by Gerard, who calls it Gentiana Concava, Hollow Felt-wort, and remarks, "I found this strange kind of Gentian in a small grove of a "wood called the Spinie neare unto a small village in Northamptonshire called Lichbarrow: elsewhere I have not "heard of it[u]." Morton says, it "is now quite lost there. I myself, and several of my Friends, have sought "for it at and near Lichborow with great Diligence, yet all in vain. No doubt but it was found formerly by "Mr. Gerard in the Place he mentions. And in all likelihood Dr. Lister, one of the Physicians to King James I. "who sent this Plant to C. Baubine [Bauhine], received it from this very Place. That C. Baubine [Bauhine] took "it to be a Plant peculiar to our Country, appears by the Name he gives it in his Prodromus, p. 103, viz. "Saponaria Concava Anglica (i. e.) the hollow English Scapwort. To a Query I formerly transmitted to my Worthy "Friend Mr. Ray concerning this Plant, I had the following Reply. 'I was so well assured by those who searched "the Spinney Gerard mentions, that it was there, that I thought it not worth my Time, when in those Parts, to make any "farther Scrutiny. I am of Opinion, that all the Plants of that kind, cultivated at this Day in any of the Gardens of "Europe, owe their Original to the Plants that Gerard *and other Herbalists about that Time, dug up at that Place at "*Litchborow, till they had quite extirpated it.'" The Spinney is grubbed up, and both this remarkable variety, and the "Saponaria Officinalis B," found by Martyn[y], have now disappeared. Morton mentions also "Saxifraga aurea. Ger. in a Ditch, on the side of a small Wood near Litchborow:" to which may be added Cotyledon Umbilicum, wall Pennywort, found on a wall in the park. The stone of this lordship is of the inferior oolite, and is occasionally used for building, but principally for the repair of roads. The church is said to have been built of stone dug up out of the Spinney adjoining the church yard, where Mr. Grant now keeps a few deer. There is a water-mill on a brook which rises at Sewell, in that part of Foxley which is within this parish.

MANORIAL HISTORY. EVESHAM FEE. HONOR OF CASTLE RICARD. *Levenot, one of the principal freeholders of the county in the time of Edward the confessor, held "Liceberge" in "Gravesend" hundred, and probably gave it to the abbey of Evesham in Worcestershire, under whose possession it was surveyed in domesday. It contained four hides. The arable land was ten caruecates; of which two were in demesne, five in the occupation of eight villeins and six bordars, and the remaining three waste, or unaccounted for. The whole was rated, as in the saxon valuation, at 40s. (yearly)[z].

The cartularies of this abbey in the British Museum, Cott. MSS. Vespasian B. xxiv. and Harl. MSS. 3763, have been searched in vain for any entry of the grant or alienation of this estate, which could only have been retained by it during a very limited period; for in the hydarium of Hen. 2 "Lichebarue" is certified to contain four hides of the fee of Hugh Poher[b]; and in 13 Joh. (1211) Roger Poher, besides various places in Shropshire, is returned to hold "Licheburg" in Northamptonshire, as parcel of the honor of Ricard's Castle in Herefordshire and other counties[c]. This honor had then recently passed, with Margaret daughter and heiress of Hugh de Say, to Robert de Mortimer †. In the Testa de Nevill about 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1) Thomas son of Sampson (Poher) was found to hold three parts of a fee in "Lithesbarue" of William de Stutevill[d], who had married Mortimer's widow[e], and was then tenant by courtesy of the honor.

On the partition of the Mortimer estate, the paramouncy of this manor was assigned (int. al.) to the youngest coheiress Margaret wife of Geoffery de Cornwall †, whose descendants usually styled themselves barons of Burford in Shropshire; and in the inquisitions after the deaths of Thomas Malory in 6 Edw. 6[f], and of sir John Nedham in 17 Jac.[g] the manor of Litchborough was found to be held of the barony of Burford by the service of rendering an arrow called a broad arrow to the lord, if demanded.

MANOR. Hugh or Roger Poher enfeoffed a junior branch of their family in this manor, who occasionally adopted the local surname of Litchborough. Sampson de "Licheburg" (son of Kai le Poher) having adhered to the barons, his lands here were granted in 17 Joh. (1215) to Ingelbert nephew of Theobald de Blund[h]. They were however restored to his son "Thomas de Lichesbar';" and in that portion of the Testa de Nevill compiled between 31 and 40 Hen. 3, the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented him to be lord of "Lichesbar," which contained four hides of the fee of the castle of Maud [Ricard], and paid to the king 18s. (yearly)[i]. From him it lineally descended, agreeably to the annexed pedigree, to William Poher, who held it in 1 Edw. 2 (1307-8), as appears from the inquisition after the death of Maud, widow of Hugh Mortimer[k].

POHER or DE LICHBAROWE.

From the cartulary of St. James's Abbey and public records.

John le Poher, of Litchborough, living 26 Edw. 1 (1298).=....

William le Poher, of Litchborough, living 1 Edw. 2 (1307-8).

Richard Mallore was lord of Litchborough in 9 Edw. 2[l] (1315-6). He died in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), leaving a son and heir Peter Mallore, within age, whose wardship was claimed by Geoffrey de Cornwall in right of Margaret [Mortimer] his wife, of whom the manor of "Licheburge" was held by homage and escuage[m]. "But this claim 'was set aside by Simon Malore of Winwick, who made it appear that Richard the father of this Peter Malore had 'held of him and his predecessors certain lands and tenements in Winwick, by a more early feoffment than that by 'which they were possessed of this manor of Lichborow. Before this decision "Geoffrey de Cornwall, as guardian 'to the heir of Richard Malore, had claimed a toll of a peck of fish from every waggon loaded with salt which 'passed through the town of Lichborow. But his pretensions seem to have been unsupported.'

Peter Mallore, in 40 Edw. 3 (1366), by the name of sir Peter Mallore lord of "Lychebarue," granted and demised all his lands, tenements, rents, and services, to John Mallore of Winwick, Agnes his wife, and Nicholas their son, for their lives, rendering yearly the services due to the chief lord of the fee, and £10 to the said Peter, and after his decease, a rose to his heirs[n]. By another deed in 50 Edw. 3 (1376), reciting the last, he released to John Mallore, then a knight, all his right in the said lands in consideration of an annuity for life of £10[o]. Both deeds are dated at Winwick, and have seals appendant bearing a cross—a coat which has no affinity to Malory of Winwick—a fess between three boars' heads couped.

This manor certainly reverted to, and continued in the line of Peter Mallore, though the only existing evidence of it through the succeeding century which I have been able to discover is confined to the attestation of sir Giles Mallore in 12 Ric. 2 (1388), and Robert Mallorie in 11 Edw. 4 (1471), to two deeds in the possession of W. Grant, esq. In the parliament summoned 9 Nov. 3 Hen. 7 (1487), "John Mallary of Lichbarowe in the "Countie of North'ton, Robert Mallary of Fallesley in the same Countie, Gyles Mallary of Grenysnorton in the "same Countie, William Mallary of Stowe in the same Countie" were attainted of high treason with John earl of Lincoln and his associates, in the ill-judged and ill-fated attempt to raise Lambert Symnel to the throne[q]. The parliament called 25 Jan. 19 Hen. 7 (1503-4) empowered the king to reverse the attainder of "John Malory of "Lichebarowe in the County of Northampton Gentilman," and others, by his letters patent under the great seal[r]; but though restored to favor he never obtained restitution of his estate, for it was not till after his death in 13 Hen. 8 (1521-2), that the forfeited manor of "Lichebarowe" and lands in Farthingston, Sewell, and Blakesley, were granted and restored to his son Thomas Mallory in fee[s]. His son Thomas Malory, esq. died 5 June 6 Edw. 6 (1552), leaving Robert Malory his son and heir aged 25 years[t], who in 15 Eliz. (1572) sold this manor to William Stone and John Gray[u]; but his descendants continued resident here in indigent circumstances till within these few years.

In Feb. 29 Eliz. (1586-7) William Stone conveyed this manor, with its appurtenances, to Richard Gray, gent. and Mary his wife, by whom it was alienated in 36 Eliz. (1594) to John Markham of Malden in Bedfordshire, gent. who in 39 Eliz. (1596-7) sold it to John Nedham, esq. one of the queen's gentlemen pensioners, and afterwards knighted. Under the will of sir John, dated 8 May 1618, it devolved on his nephew George Nedham, esq. whose sons John and Daniel Nedham successively enjoyed it. The latter, in June 1699, for an annuity and other considerations, conveyed his manor, manor house, and estate in Litchborough to George Smith of Everdon, gent. in fee[v].

The rev. George Butler, the trustees under whose will sold it in 1729 to Hannibal Roussey, esq. He transferred it the year following to his uncle

James Roussey, esq. on the decease of whose son James Roussey, esq. in 1739, without issue, it passed to his three daughters, Louisa, wife of colonel de Jean, a French officer, Frances, wife of .... Searle, gent., and Magdalen, unmarried. James Searle, gent. devisee and heir of Mrs. Searle, by will in 1755 devised his third share to his aunt Magdalen Roussey. Mrs. De Jean in 1764 devised her third share to her husband's niece Theresa De Jean, afterwards wife of John La Deveze of Dublin, esq. who, in conjunction with Mrs. Magdalen Roussey, in 1768, sold the entire manor to John Darker, esq. of GAYTON[x]. He was succeeded in this manor and his other estates by Elizabeth his sole surviving daughter and heiress, after whose decease in 1788 it was enjoyed by her second husband Edward Loveden Loveden, esq. of Buscot park, Berks, till his death in 1822, when it passed to Mary her only daughter and heiress by her first husband Joseph Nash, esq. now wife of William Blake of Welwyn in Hertfordshire, esq. PATESHULL LANDS. In 33 Edw. 3 (1359) sir William de Pateshull died seised (int. al.) of lands in Litchborough[y], which, from the partition of his inheritance amongst his four sisters and coheiresses, successively descended with the manor of PATESHULL through the families of Fauconberg, Nevill, and Strangeways, 'from 'whom,' says Bridges, 'it was named Strangeway's manor, and was some time after in the hands of the family of 'Englefield[z];' but these lands are not described as a manorial estate in any of the inquisitions post mortem or other records.

ST. JAMES'S ABBEY near Northampton had two virgates of land, at 4s. rent, in "Lichebarewe," of the grant of Kai le Poher, in consideration of 2 marks (£1. 6s. 8d.) to himself, 3s. to his son Sampson, 12s. to his son Jordan, and 6s. to his son Bruto[a]. In further consideration of 3½ marks (£2. 6s. 8d.) to himself, and ½ mark (6s. 8d.) to Emma his wife, he confirmed other lands of the gift of his son in law Henry Fitz Savarie; and by another deed confirmed the grant of 22 acres from Goscelin[a]. Sampson de Lichebarewe, son of Kai, gave with his body the 4s. yearly rent reserved by his father[b]. Richard archbishop of Canterbury, between 1228 and 1234, confirmed to the abbey, a carucate of land and Goscelin's land in "Lichesbarewe[c]." In the taxations of 1254[d] and 1291[e] the lands of this abbey in Litchborough were valued at 24s. per ann.; and in the survey of 1535 at £4. 16s. per ann.[f] The late possessions of St. James's abbey and Canons Ashby priory in Litchborough were (int. al.) granted to Richard Andrew in 34 Hen. 8 (1542)[g], by whom they were shortly after conveyed to Thomas Malory, gent. lord of the manor, who died seised of them in 6 Edw. 6 (1552)[h].

CANONS ASHBY PRIORY had all the land of Hugh Rossell in "Lichesbarewe," viz. three virgates and 20 acres in demesne, on condition that one of the monks, being a priest, should say a mass every day for his soul[i]. These lands, with other minor grants[i], were valued in the taxations of 1254[k] and 1291[e] at 20s. per ann.; and in the survey of 1535[f] at 59s. per ann.

THE MANOR HOUSE stood in the inclosure called the Spinny, and was taken down about 50 years since. It was severed from the manor in 1706 by George Smith, gent. who conveyed it to Thomas Whitfield, of the six clerks' office, London, esq. whose lineal descendant John Whitfield, esq. in 1792 sold the site of the manor house and certain lands in Litchborough to Thomas Grant, esq. father of the present proprietor.

The family of Leeke enjoyed an estate here from the fifteenth century, which is now included in the property of William Grant, esq. whose father adopted their residence. The house has been considerably enlarged and improved by his son, who has obligingly contributed the accompanying vignette. On the staircase is a large full-length portrait of sir John Nedham in armour and white hose, holding his plumed hat and staff of office as gentleman pensioner. He has black hair and long sandy beard.

The Village is situated about two miles east of the Chester road, and about five miles from Towcester and seven from Daventry. 'Lichborow,' Bridges says, '[l] is now a village of sixty-four houses, but it is reported to have 'been formerly a place of greater consideration, and [m] was probably one of the four British garrisons said to have 'been taken by the Saxons in 571. The action of this year is thus related in the Saxon chronicle: Hoc anno Cuth-'wulfus depugnabat contra Britannos apud Bedicanford, atque quatuor oppida cepit, Lygeanburgh & Egelsburg, & Ben-'singtun & Egonesham. Now supposing these towns not to have been taken in the order they lie here, but that 'Lygeanburgh was seized on by Cuthwulfe in his return from his expedition to Bedford, and Lichborow will agree 'better with the series of the action than either Loughborough or Leighton, the places assigned by Mr. Camden and 'Dr. Gibson. And Lichborow hath this advantage, as Mr. Moreton observes, that there is a much greater resem-'blance in the name; for leave out the an, which, when it is the second syllable in a Saxon name [n] is generally 'left out in our modern pronunciation, and from Lygeburg to Liceberge, the old name of Lichborow, will be an easy 'transition, the letter g only being converted into c to make the pronunciation smoother.'

Plausible as is the above hypothesis, and reluctant as I am to transfer the honor to another county, I have no hesitation in fixing "Lygeanburh[o]" at a small hamlet to Buckinghaun, still retaining the original name softened down by modern orthography to Lenborough, and which in its local situation is in perfect accordance with the route pursued in the chronicle from "Bedicanford[o]," or Bedford, to "Egelesburh[o]" and "Bensingtun[o],"—places long since appropriated without dispute to Aylesbury in Buckinghamshire, and Bensington, now commonly called Benson, in Oxfordshire.

By the census of 1801 Litchborough contained 57 houses and 302 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 70 houses and 311 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 77 houses and 393 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this lordship is £125. 10s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815 amounted to £2833. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £399. 16s. 3d. at 6s. in the £. The wake follows Martinmas day.

The Advowson was given to the abbey of St. James near Northampton by Kai le Poher[p], between 1209 and and 1222, on condition that Hugh de St. Edward should be permitted to hold the church for life, paying yearly a pension of 10s. to the abbey; subject to which stipulation the grant was confirmed by Hugh (Wells) bishop of Lincoln[q]. Thomas de Lichebarewe, son and heir of Sampson, in the time of abbot Adam Gilly, ratified his grandfather's donation [r]; and still further to strengthen the title, in 30 Hen. 3 (1266) levied a fine of the advowson to abbot John and his successors [s].

After the dissolution, the advowson of "Lychbarowe" was in 34 Hen. 8 (1542) included in an extensive grant to sir Edmund Knightley [t] of FAWSLEY, whose nephew sir Richard Knightley in 33 Eliz. (1591) suffered a recovery, and settled it (int. al.) on his son and heir Valentine Knightley, esq. (afterwards knighted) in fee tail [u], on whose decease in 1618 [x] it descended to his three daughters and coheiresses or their representatives, who alternately presented. In 1691 Knightley Purefoy, esq. heir to Mary daughter of sir Valentine, sold one-third of the advowson to Thomas Wodhull, esq. [y] by whom it was alienated in 1701 to the rev. George Butler, the rector, who in 1713 purchased another third, of Nicholas Luke, esq. heir to Elizabeth daughter of sir Valentine; and in 1723, the remaining third, of John Chetwode, esq. heir to Anne daughter of sir Valentine. In 1725 he sold the entire advowson to William Addington of St. Mary Aldermanbury, London, gent. from whom it descended to his son the rev. Charles Addington, the rector, whose son sir William Addington, by will 23 Feb. 1803, devised it to his nephew William Joshua Wendy Taylor, of Bath, gent. father of the rev. William Addington Taylor, the present patron and rector.

THE RECTORY is in the deanry of Daventry. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3) [z], and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) [a], it is rated at 12 marks (£8) per ann. At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) the farm of the rectory, including 10s. for the glebe land, as demised to John Mariet, was returned at £18. 0s. 2d. per ann. deducting an annual pension of 20s. to the abbey of St. James near Northampton, and 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton [b]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage worth £60 per ann. in the patronage of the coheirs of sir Valentine Knightley, and that Mr. John Butler was incumbent [c]. On the inclosure of Rodmore field in 1647 a quantity of land, proportionable to the glebe and tithe pieces in that field, was set out for the rector, but the land inclosed was not exonerated from tithes. On the inclosure of Windmill and Highcross fields and the heath in 1711, an allotment of 153a. 2r. exclusive of 2a. 2r. for roads, was made to the rector for his glebe in those fields, and in lieu of the tithes of those fields, and of such inclosed land in Rodmore field as then belonged to persons possessing land in Windmill and Highcross fields. The rectorial land consists of 166a. 1r. 10p. and the rector is entitled to the tithes of about 250a. in Rodmore field, and receives an annual payment of 6s. 8d. for the portion of Foxley which is within this parish.

The rectory-house stands east of the church, adjoining the church-yard.

RECTORS. Hugh de St. Edward, by the abbot and convent of St. James near Northampton, between 1209 and 1223, on the nomination of Kai le Poher.

John de Bannebir, clerk, 4 July 1223.

John Grossetest, subdeacon, probably a relation of bishop Grosseteste, or Grosthead, who collated him 6 Apr. 1231. Either he, or a contemporary of both names, was rector of Whissendene in Rutlandshire, and died in 1245 [c].

Robert de Hecham, or Higham, subdeacon, 1264.

Sir William Hutton, priest, 20 Oct. 1490.

John Chauntrell, 18 Sept. 1512. He was also rector of Quinton in 1535. On his decease,

Lawrence Harwarde, LL.B. was instituted 17 June 1547, on the presentation of William Pawlett lord St. John, by grant from the executors of Edward Watson, to whom the abbot of St. James had demised this term. He resigned, and Thomas Perceval was presented by Thomas Wood, gent. and others, by grant p. h. v. from Ursula widow of sir Edmund Knightley, and inst. 9 Sept. 1550.

Christopher Saunderson was presented by sir Richard Knightley, and accounted for the first fruits 21 Nov. 1598 [d]. He was buried here 29 Jan. 1631-2 [e], and Samuel Male, A.M. was inst. 9 Mar. 1631-2, on the presentation of sir Samuel Luke.

James Thompson, inst. 22 Dec. 1643, on the presentation of the king by lapse or simonaical contract [x].

John Butler occurs in the parliamentary survey 1655. In 1671 appeared, Christiologia, or a brief but true account of the certain Year, Month, Day, and Minute of the Birth of Jesus Christ. By John Butler, B.D. chaplain to his grace James, duke of Ormond, &c. and rector of Litchborough in the diocese of Peterborough. 8vo. It was re-printed in 1675. Being of the same surname, and chaplain to the duke of Ormond, it is not improbable that he was related to that noble family. Besides the above, he published, A Kalender, Scriptural and Astronomical, for five years during and after Christ's Ministry. 1671. 8vo. After a hearing before the bishop of St. Asaph, and a quare impedit brought, Mr. Chetwode declined his title, and 29 May 1691

George Butler, A.B. was inst. on the presentation of Knightley Purefoy, esq. On his decease,

Charles Addington of Corpus Christi Coll. Camb. A.M. was presented by John Addington and Matthew Rogers, and inst. 18 May 1727. In 1748 he obtained the Crown moiety of the vicarage of Pateshull, which he continued to hold with this rectory. He was buried here 2 Nov. 1781[1], and

William Peters of Exeter coll. Oxf. was inst. 28 May 1782, on the presentation of William Addington, esq. (afterwards knighted.) He was about this time elected a royal academician, but afterwards resigned that honor, and pursued painting only as an amusement. Few amateur artists have attained equal eminence. His pictures of the resurrection of a family, and of the spirit of a child, have been engraved, and are amongst the most popular productions of modern art. He was appointed chaplain to the royal academy in 1784; to the prince of Wales in 1786; and painter to his royal highness in the year following. In 1786 he published, "for "the benefit of the poor of Towcester and Litchbo- "rough," a sermon preached at Towcester 1 Oct. 1786, for the Sunday school established in that place, and which he entitled "An exhortation to that greatest of "charities, rescuing the infant poor from sin, and edu- "cating them in the principles of Virtue and Religion." It reached a second edition. He resigned this rectory in 1787 for the vicarage of Scalford in Leicestershire, which he also vacated in 1789. He proceeded LL.B. in 1788, and the same year was instituted to the rectories of Knipton in Leicestershire and Woolsthorp in Lincolnshire; and in 1793 to the vicarage of Eaton in the former county, which, with a prebend in Lincoln cathedral, he retained till his death, 20 Mar. 1814, at Brasted Place in Kent. He married a niece of the late Dr. Turton, the bulk of whose large fortune descended to his second son. His resignation introduced that distinguished antiquary

James Douglas of Peterhouse, Camb. F.S.A. 1780, who was presented by the same patron, and inst. 17 Nov. 1787. His first destination was the army, in which he obtained a commission, but entered into holy orders in 1780. He commenced his literary career with the translation of a work connected with his original profession—An Essay on Tactics from the French of Guibert. 1781. 2 vols. 8vo. This was soon followed by, Travelling Anecdotes through various parts of Europe. 1782. 8vo.; published anonymously, and announcing another volume. He prefixed his name to a 2nd edition in 1785, and in the preface urged the more serious avocations of his clerical engagements as an apology for withholding the promised second volume. The same year he published "A dissertation on the theory and antiquity of "the Earth," read at the royal society May 1785. 4to.; and two dissertations on the brass instruments called Celts, and other arms used by the ancients, found in this island, with two fine aquatinta engravings, forming No. XXXIII. of the Bibl. Top. Brit. In 1786 he projected an interesting work, to be delivered in parts, under the title of "Nenia Britannica; or a Sepulchral "History of Great Britain from the earliest Period to "its general conversion to Christianity. Including a com- "plete series of the British, Roman, and Saxon Sepul- "chral Rites and Ceremonies, with the contents of several "hundred Burial Places opened under a careful inspec- "tion of the Author; tending to illustrate the early part "of, and to fix on a more unquestionable criterion for, "the study of Antiquity: To which are added some "observations on the Celtic, British, Roman, and "Danish barrows discovered in Great Britain." In the interim before its completion he published "A Dis- "sertation on the Urbs Rutupiæ of Ptolemy." 1787. 4to. and "Twelve Discourses on the influence of the "Christian Religion on Civil Society." 1791. 8vo. The concluding part of his "Nenia Britannica" appeared in 1793, the whole forming a handsome folio volume, dedicated to the prince of Wales, who had previously appointed him one of his chaplains; and embellished with numerous plates illustrative of the contents of tumuli, &c. drawn and aquatinted by himself.

He resigned Litchborough in 1799, probably on obtaining, through the patronage of the earl of Egremont, the rectory of Middleton in Sussex, and died at Preston in that county 5 Nov. 1819. He married in 1780 Margaret, daughter of John Oldershaw, esq. of Rochester, by whom he left three sons and a daughter. On his cession,

John Rees of Lincoln coll. Oxf. A.B. was presented by sir William Addington, and inst. 18 Sept. 1799. He soon after adopted the name of Mogg; and resigning this benefice was succeeded by

Miles Walker, master of the free grammar school at Courteenhall, who was presented by William Joshua Wendy Taylor of Bath, gent. and inst. 4 May 1814; on whose resignation

William Addington Taylor of Exeter coll. A.B. was inst. 5 June 1821, on the presentation of Robert Clarke of Bath, gent.

THE REGISTERS in the time of Bridges commenced in 1538; but now the earliest entry of burials is in 1727, of baptisms in 1732, and of marriages in 1754.

THE CHURCH, dedicated to St. Martin, stands slightly elevated near the middle of the village, and consists of a tower containing three bells, nave, south aisle, and porch, and chancel. The windows of the nave and south aisle are of the 15th century, various, but none interesting; those of the chancel are of the preceding century. The interior is well paved and neatly pewed with oak. The tower is 12 ft. 7 in. long, by 8 ft. 6 in. wide; the nave and south aisle, 55 ft. 9 in. long, the nave 16 ft. 4 in. and the south aisle 13 ft. 9 in. wide; and the chancel 29 ft. 4 in.

long, by 19 ft. wide. The nave is divided from the aisle by four pointed arches on octangular pillars with capitals of plain mouldings. The font is attached to a pillar in the aisle. The windows, both on the north side of the nave, and the aisle, have slight remains of painted glass: in one of them is a curious emblematical representation of the Trinity. Mr. Grant has recently placed the arms of Grant and Ives in the east window of the aisle. In the south wall of the chancel are a stone seat and piscina; and in the north wall a square locker.

Monumental Inscriptions.

Nave. I. At the east end of the north wall is both a mural monument and an altar tomb for sir John Nedham. The former is of free-stone painted. Above the entablature in the centre are the arms and crest of Nedham, impaling Ar. on a chevron Az. between three martlets S. as many crescents O. Watson; on the dexter side Nedham, and on the sinister Watson. Between two small corinthian pillars is inscribed

A CHANTRY at "Lichebarowe" is valued amongst the spiritualities of the abbey of St. James at 20s. yearly[t]; but no mention is made of it in the roll on the dissolution of chantries.

BENEFACTIONS (p. 240). BIDFORD CHARITY. Lady Alicia Dudley, by indenture dated 24 July 1655, appointed that certain trustees therein named should, within ten years after her decease, settle and convey her manor and farms at Marclive and Barton in the parish of Bidford in Warwickshire, so that the rents and profits might be paid yearly for ever to the following uses, viz. to the poor of the almshouses at Stoneley in Warwickshire £10; to the other poor of the same parish £10; to the poor of Kenilworth and Bidford in the same county £10 each; to the poor of Ashow and Leek Wotton in the same county £5 each; to the poor of Litchborough, Blakesley, and Pateshull, in Northamptonshire, £6. 13s. 4d. each; also £100 yearly for the redeeming poor English Christian slaves from the Turkish slavery. If the rents should be insufficient for all these purposes, a proportionable abatement to be made; and in case they should exceed, the overplus to be divided between the said poor and the captives. By deed poll, 24 Apr. 1657, the said lady Alicia, then duchess Dudley, reciting the foregoing, directed that so long as the £100, through the want of claimants or any other obstruction, could not be applied to the redemption of poor English christian slaves from Turkish slavery, £15 yearly should be paid to the minister of Bidford; £15 yearly to the minister of Blakesley; and the remaining £70 yearly to the poor of the several parishes aforesaid, in the same proportion as their original shares. The preceding deeds were further confirmed by the will of the duchess, dated 2 Nov. 1668. The Bidford estate consists of 356 acres, and was let in 1820 at £548 per ann. but has lately been reduced to £422. The rent is divided, after deducting land tax and other small expences, into seventeen parts, seven of which are distributed amongst the aforesaid parishes in their due proportions, and the other ten parts are paid into chancery, where there is now a very large accumulation awaiting the direction of the court. The sum received by the parish of Litchborough, being a third of two seventeenths, has amounted for several years past to about £20, which is given away annually in clothing.

LADY KATHERINE LEVESON, daughter of the duchess Dudley, by a codicil to her will dated 21 Feb. 1670-1, devised the whole manor or lordship of FOXLEY, containing about 483 acres, in the several parishes of Blakesley, Pateshull, and Litchborough, to charitable uses, which will be particularly detailed in the account of that manor. The estate was let at Lady Day 1819 at £710 per ann. prior to which the rent was £520 per ann. The parish of Litchborough receives annually £40 as directed by the will, and also a third of the surplus rents after payment of the several sums specifically applied; which share of the surplus has lately amounted to £70 per ann. part of which applied to the support of a school, in which the children of the poor are taught free, and the remainder is given to the poor annually in coats, gowns, blankets, sheeting, linen, or flannel.

CHURCH LANDS. On the inclosure of Rodmore field in 1647 it was agreed that 4 a. 3 r. 1 p. in a place called Gosse should be inclosed for the use of the church and other charitable uses, and held in severalty in lieu of the land thereto belonging. It is not now known what were the "other charitable uses" above referred to. The land is let by the churchwarden, and the rent, now £9 per ann. carried to the church rate, and applied to the repairs of the church.

There are also two other closes, one now called Town close, formerly Cottager's close, and the Gore close; the rents of which are applied for the repair of the church. All that is now known of the history of these closes is derived from the deed of inclosure in 1711, whereby it is agreed, that in lieu of the Town lands lying in the two fields called Windmill and High cross fields, the churchwardens shall hereafter receive the rents and profits of the close called Cottager's close, and a piece of ground in Gore close, and pay thereout 30s. yearly to the clerk of the parish in lieu of one sheaf of rye which heretofore was paid to him for every yard-land, and the residue thereof to be employed for the repairing of the church yearly, and the overplus, if any, to be disposed of for the support of the poor of the parish yearly, in such manner as the churchwardens shall think fit. The Town close contains about 18 acres. It is let yearly by auction for the herbage, and generally produces only £3 or £4, being covered with bushes which the poor of Litchborough have long been in the habit of cutting for fuel. The bushes are of little value, and it is to be regretted that the land, which is now a mere waste, is not brought into cultivation, and the rent divided between the repairs of the church and the poor. Gore close contains about 4 acres, and is let at two guineas per ann.

SIR WILLIAM ADDINGTON, son of the rev. Charles Addington, rector of this parish, was born here in 1728. He was educated at Corpus Christi college, Cambridge, where he took his degree of B. A. in 1749. His first destination was the church, and it appears from the parish register that he occasionally officiated at his native village. He afterwards entered the army as a cornet in general Burgoyne's regiment of light horse, in which he remained till his marriage, when he resigned his commission; but being fond of an active life, procured an appointment in Bow-street office under sir John Fielding, and ultimately became chief magistrate of the police in London. In the exercise of his magisterial authority during the riots of 1780 and 1795 he signalized himself by his intrepid zeal and activity, and had the honor of knighthood conferred on him for his public services. In the memorable case of Hadfield, the poor lunatic who attempted to shoot the late king at Drury Lane theatre in 1800, sir William acted with a firmness unshaken by popular clamour; and the result evinced his penetration and discernment. His judgment at the time was severely arraigned; yet its correctness was sanctioned on the trial of the unfortunate man by a verdict of insanity under the able direction of lord Kenyon. He withdrew from his official situation; but the treatment he received in this affair tended to disquiet his remaining days. He retired to Bath, where he died April 7th 1811, at the advanced age of 83 years. Liberality of sentiment and generosity of disposition were in him united with the accomplishments characteristic of the gentleman and the scholar. He was author of an useful and elaborate compilation, remarkable for its lucid arrangement, entitled "An Abridgment of Penal "Statutes, which exhibits at one view, the offences, and the punishments and penalties in consequence of those "offences, the mode of recovering, and application of the penalties, the number of witnesses, and the jurisdiction "necessary to the several convictions, and the chapters and sections of the enacting statutes." This work was first published in an octavo volume in 1775. All the subsequent impressions have been in quarto, and the original plan progressively improved. The fourth edition, "with large additions and annotations, to which are subjoined, "a great variety of adjudged cases," appeared in 1795. Two fine portraits of sir William Addington have been engraved. 1. In his uniform as major of the Westminster light horse volunteers. W. Peters, R.A. del. J. R. Smith, sc. fol. oval. 2. NORTON,

In domesday "Northon," is composed of the saxon nopð, north, and tone, a town; denoting its relative position to some other place not now known. This parish includes THORP, and part of MUSCOTE—an account of which has been already given under Brockhole, p. 119.

The lordship, exclusive of its hamlets, comprehends about 1650 acres. The open fields, containing about 1070 acres, were inclosed by act of parliament 27 and 28 Geo. 2 (1755). The principal proprietors are, Beriah Botfield, esq. a minor, lord of the manor, who has about 940 acres (exclusive of about 85 acres in Thorp); the vicar, in right of his church, about 50 acres; John Michael Severne, esq. of Thenford, about 440 acres; Mr. Richard Claridge about 100 acres; and Mr. William Brooks nearly 100 acres. It is bounded on the north by Long Buckby and Watford in Guilsborough hundred; east by Whilton in Newbottle Grove hundred, from which it is divided for a considerable distance by the Watling street road; south east by Brockhole in the same hundred; south by Dodford; south west by Newnham; west by Daventry; and north west by Welton.

The soil of this lordship on the Dodford side is clay or deep loam; towards Thorp grounds light red loam; and in some parts of the field gravelly. The following scarce plants have been found here. Schænus Mariscus, long-rooted Rush grass, near Muscote mill*. Dipsacus pilosus, small Teasel, lane side to Whilton opposite Norton park wall, plentifully†. Eryngium Campestre, common Eryngo, in the Watling street road*. Sambucus Ebulus, dwarf Elder, in the Watling street road*. Parnassia palustris, grass of Parnassus, near the rill crossing from Norton to Dodford†. Saxifraga tridactylites, Rue-leaved Saxifrage, on old walls and gravel walks, copiously†. Saxifraga granuluta, white Saxifrage, lane sides and meadows†. Sedum Fosteri, on a wall†. Pyrus tormenalis, wild Service Tree, in Norton lane†. Verbena officinalis, road side*. Norton wood formerly skirted Borough hill to the east; but has been brought into cultivation several years.

MANORIAL HISTORY. MELLENT OR WARWICK FEE. "Nortone" was the saxon freehold of Agemond[h], who was dispossessed at the norman conquest; but either he, or a contemporary of the same name, obtained a small portion of Grafton (Underwood) as sub-tenant to Eustace[i] [Lovetot]‡. The earl of Mellent held "Nortone" at the domesday survey. There were two hides and a half, and the fifth part of half a hide. The arable was seven carucates. In demesne were two carucates and one hide of land. Twenty-three villeins, with a priest, nine bordars, and a servant, had six carucates; making an excess of one carucate, unless the word "caï" be here rendered ploughs, instead of carucates. There was a mill worth 10s. yearly, and 25 acres of meadow—an unusual quantity. The whole had been heretofore valued at £6 yearly, but was then rated at £8[h].

Robert de Bellomonte earl of Mellent, a distant relation of William the conqueror, attended him on his expedition to England, and commanding the right wing of his army was the first who broke the line at the memorable battle of Hastings. His services were rewarded with nearly a hundred manors in Warwickshire, Leicestershire, Wiltshire, Glocestershire, and Norton in this county. "Berchewell" and "Witacre" are also placed under his possessions in Northamptonshire[h], probably through the negligence or ignorance of the scribe, as they are doubtless intended for Berkeswell and Whitacre in Warwickshire. According to Henry of Huntingdon, this earl

"was in worldly affairs the wisest of all men betwixt England and Jerusalem." He was the chief counsellor or prime minister of Henry 1st, who created him earl of Leicester. He appears to have assigned this manor with many others in Warwickshire, but when, or how, cannot now be traced, to his younger brother

Henry de Bellomont, surnamed de Newburgh, from the place of his birth in Normandy, and who, it may be presumed, did not migrate from thence till after the partition and survey of this kingdom by the conqueror, as his name nowhere occurs in domesday. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 "Norton" was returned to contain two hides and a half, and two small virgates of the fee of Warwick[x]; and in the Testa de Nevill about 27 Hen. 3 (1242), Nicholas de Nodar' or Nowers, and Roger de Whelton were certified to hold one fee, and Roger Golafre half a fee in Norton, of the fees which late belonged to Thomas earl of Warwick (recently deceased) of the honor of Warwick[1]. The paramouncy of both the Nowers and Golafre manors continued in this earldom; and the line of descent is subjoined down to Beauchamp and Nevill earls of Warwick, who had manorial property in this county, and whose pedigree will be given under POTTERS PERY.

NOWERS OR CORNWALL MANOR. The first feoffee of this manor from the earls of Warwick was probably Richard de Vernon, under whom it was held by Henry de Chaundri, whose daughter and heiress Juliana occurs in 3 Ric. 1 (1191)[m], and afterwards became the wife of Henry de Nuiers or Nowers[m]. Elizabeth, the daughter and heiress of their son Nicholas de Nowers, married

Roger de Whelton of WHILTON*, and in the Testa de Nevill about 27 Hen. 3 (1242) Nicholas and his son in law were found to hold one fee here of the honor of Warwick[1]. In another part of that record, between 31 and 40 Hen. 3, the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented that Nicholas de Nowers was one of the lords of Norton, but that he did not appear, being prevented by the palsy[n]. Sir Roger de Whelton, grandson and heir of sir Roger and Elizabeth, alienated this manor, subject to the dower of Margaret [de Haynton] his grandfather's widow, to

Sir William la Zouch, by whom it was given in free marriage with Jocosa or Joyce, his daughter and heiress, to

Sir Robert de Mortimer of Ricard's castle in Herefordshire, who, jointly with his wife, assigned to the said Margaret the manor of "Ambreden" (Amerden in Essex) for life, in exchange for her dower in Norton[o]. On the death of sir Robert in 15 Edw. 1 (1287) the manor of Norton was not included in the inquisition post mortem[p], but the escheator took possession of it for the king—till the heir, I presume, had paid his relief—which Joyce his widow resisted, on the ground, probably, of her being co-feoffee; and with her consent Reginald de Hotot was appointed custos of it till St. Michael following; and the same year, her statement being proved by inquisition before Mast. Henry de Bray the escheator within Trent, he was directed to deliver the manor to her[q].

In 19 Edw. 1 (1290-1) Hugh de Mortimer had livery (int. al.) of Norton manor, as son and heir of sir Robert[r], and was summoned to parliament 25 and 27 Edw. 1[s]. In 26 Edw. 1 (1297) he obtained licence to enfeof

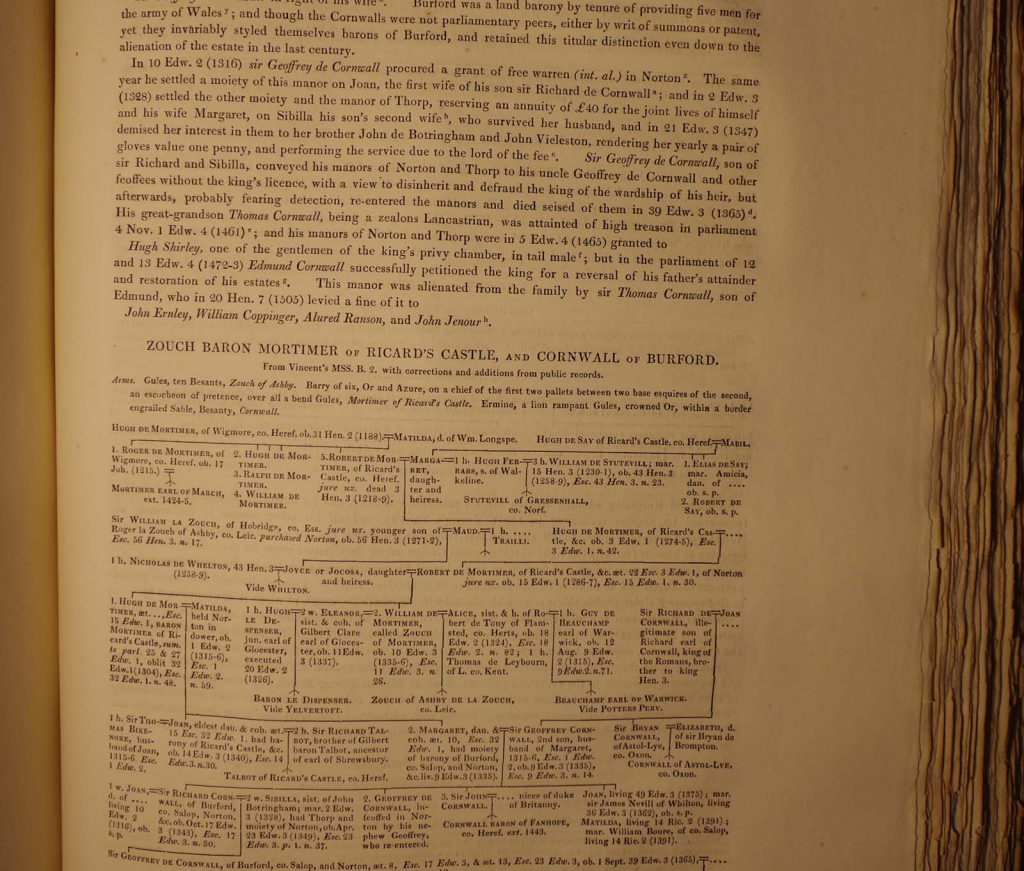
William (de Marchia) bishop of Bath and Wells in this manor (int. al.), in trust to re-enfeoff him and his wife Maud for life, with remainder to his heirs[s]. He died in 32 Edw. 1 (1304), when his manor of Norton was found by inquisition to be held of Guy (Beauchamp) earl of Warwick by one fee and a half[t]—thus incorrectly including the service of the Golafre manor—but in 1 Edw. 2 (1315-6), on the death of his widow Maud, or Matilda, as she is indifferently called, the service was correctly stated at one fee[u]. On the partition of the family estates in the counties of Salop, Hereford, Worcester, Devon, Essex, Hants, Northampton, and in Wales, between his two daughters and coheiresses, Joan then wife of sir Richard Talbot, and Margaret wife of sir Geoffrey de Cornwall, in 3 Edw. 2 (1318), Norton with other manors, and a moiety of the barony of Burford in Shropshire, with its appendages, including (int. al.) the paramouncy of Litchborough, was assigned to

Sir Geoffrey de Cornwall in right of his wife[x]. Burford was a land barony by tenure of providing five men for the army of Wales[y]; and though the Cornwalls were not parliamentary peers, either by writ of summons or patent, yet they invariably styled themselves barons of Burford, and retained this titular distinction even down to the alienation of the estate in the last century.

In 10 Edw. 2 (1316) sir Geoffrey de Cornwall procured a grant of free warren (int. al.) in Norton[z]. The same year he settled a moiety of this manor on Joan, the first wife of his son sir Richard de Cornwall[a]; and in 2 Edw. 3 (1328) settled the other moiety and the manor of Thorp, reserving an annuity of £40 for the joint lives of himself and his wife Margaret, on Sibilla his son's second wife[b], who survived her husband, and in 21 Edw. 3 (1347) demised her interest in them to her brother John de Botringham and John Vieleston, rendering her yearly a pair of gloves value one penny, and performing the service due to the lord of the fee[c]. Sir Geoffrey de Cornwall, son of sir Richard and Sibilla, conveyed his manors of Norton and Thorp to his uncle Geoffrey de Cornwall and other feoffees without the king's licence, with a view to disinherit and defraud the king of the wardship of his heir, but afterwards, probably fearing detection, re-entered the manors and died seised of them in 39 Edw. 3 (1365)[d]. His great-grandson Thomas Cornwall, being a zealous Lancastrian, was attainted of high treason in parliament 4 Nov. 1 Edw. 4 (1461)[e]; and his manors of Norton and Thorp were in 5 Edw. 4 (1465) granted to



Hugh Shirley, one of the gentlemen of the king's privy chamber, in tail male[f]; but in the parliament of 12 and 13 Edw. 4 (1472-3) Edmund Cornwall successfully petitioned the king for a reversal of his father's attainder and restoration of his estates[g]. This manor was alienated from the family by sir Thomas Cornwall, son of Edmund, who in 20 Hen. 7 (1505) levied a fine of it to

John Ernley, William Coppinger, Alured Ranson, and John Jenour[h].

In 3 and 4 Eliz. (1561) Thomas Throckmorton, esq. and Margaret his wife levied a fine of a moiety of the manor of Norton to

William Gent, gent.[i] who died in 6 Eliz. (1564) seised of this moiety of Cornwall's manor, held of whom unknown, Mauntell's manor, held of the queen in capite, and another manor here, parcel of king Henry the eighth's late college, Oxford, held of the queen by fealty, leaving Richard Gent his son and heir aged 30 years[k]. He died soon after s. p. and in 11 Eliz. (1568) his brother and heir William Gent, esq. acquiring the other moiety of Cornwall's manor from Thomas Whorwood, esq. and his wife[l], became possessed of the entirety of the three manors, which, prior to 31 Eliz. (1588), he sold to sir Richard Knightley of Fawsley.

Sir Richard Knightley adopted Norton for his principal residence, and by indenture 30 Jan. 31 Eliz. 1588-9, (superseded by another settlement in 1591), demised Fawsley and all his other manors in the county of Northampton, except Norton, to his son and heir Valentine Knightley, esq. for a term of years at a certain rent, reserving to himself (int. al.) the right of taking great timber out of the demised estate for the building, repairing, or amending of the manor house of Norton, or any other of his manors, and charging the demised estate with the payment of £2700 and an annuity for life of £300 to William Gent, esq.[m] From sir Richard this manor passed to sir Seymour Knightley[m], his eldest son by his second wife Elizabeth Seymour, of whom it was purchased by Nicholas Breton, esq. son of capt. John Breton of Tamworth in Staffordshire[n], who died, according to his epitaph, 22 June 1624[n], but according to the inquisition post mortem 21 July 1625, seised of Cornwall, Mauntell, and College manors, and impropriate rectory of Norton, leaving John Breton his son and heir aged 26 years[k].

From this time the three manors were blended together under the general designation of the manor of Norton, and descended, agreeably to the subjoined pedigree, down to Michael Harvey Breton, esq. who died in 1798, having in 1794 vested his Northamptonshire estates in trustees, for sale, comprising the manors of Norton and Long Buckby "supposed to extend over 7000 acres," Norton hall, with about 1320 acres (including the allotment for the impropriate rectory), and the advowson of the vicarage of Norton; and about 200 acres in Long Buckby.

Thomas Botfield, esq. of Shropshire, who devised them to his third son Beriah Botfield, esq. He married Charlotte daughter of William Withering, M.D. F.R.S. and dying in 1813 was succeeded by his only child Beriah Botfield, esq. a minor.

Golafre or Mauntel Manor. A mandate was directed to the sheriff of this county in 17 Joh. (1215-6) to give full seisin to Richard Chaplain of Berkhampsted, of one carucate in "Norton" belonging to Roger Golafre, who was with the king's enemies [p]. In the Testa de Nevill about 27 Hen. 3 (1242), Roger Golafre, probably son of the above, was certified to hold half a fee in Norton of the honor of Warwick [q]; and in another part of the same record, between 31 and 40 Hen. 3, the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented, that he was co-lord of Norton with Nicholas de Nowers, and that he was then in Scotland on the king's service [r]. His son William de Golafre was appointed deputy chamberlain of the exchequer, in 1 or 2 Edw. 1, by William (de Beauchamp) earl of Worcester [s]. His son Mast. John de Golafre afterwards executed the same office on the nomination of Guy de Beauchamp earl of Warwick, chamberlain in fee, and retained it till his death; for in 9 Edw. 2 (1315-6) John de Aston, clerk of John de Golafre, deceased, surrendered two great keys and twenty-three lesser keys of the doors of the treasury and coffers of the exchequer, which were the same day delivered to Mast. William de Malden, the new chamberlain [t]. The male line of Golafre terminated in, or at least cannot be traced further than John de Golafre, son of the last named, who occurs in 14 Edw. 3 (1340) [u], and 20 Edw. 3 (1346) [x].

John de Golafre, of Norton, occurs 14 Edw. 3 (1340) and 20 Edw. 3 (1346).

The probable descent of the Golafre estate to the Mauntells has been noticed at Upper Heyford *. In 18 Hen. 7 (1503) John Mauntell, esq. died seised (int. al.) of a manor in Norton, held of the king in capite as an escheat of the earldom of Warwick, by the service of half a fee [y]. From him this manor descended, conformably with the pedigree at Heyford †, to his great-grandson Walter Mauntell, esq. who, engaging in sir Thomas Wyatt's insurrection against queen Mary, was executed and attainted in Feb. 1553-4 [z]; and this manor, part of his forfeited estate, was granted in 3 and 4 Phil. and Mar. (1557) to

William Gent, gent. [a]

Daventry Priory or College Manor. By deed without date Matilda daughter of Ivo Waleran gave seven acres and a half of her demesne in "Norton" and a capital messuage there, and a virgate of land, to the prior and convent of Daventry, which Stephen de Mora her heir assured to them by fine in 12 Hen. 3 (1227) [b].

Towards the close of the same reign, Richard, son of sir William de Daventre, gave one virgate of land, and John his brother half a virgate in "Norton" to the prior and convent of Daventry; both which grants were confirmed by their brother sir Philip de Daventre, who subsequently added another virgate[b]; and still further to strengthen the title, sir William de Whelton confirmed to the priory all the lands of his fee granted by sir Philip de Daventre or his brothers[c]. These lands, with other minor donations[d], constituted the manor in "Norton," with court baron, valued at £6 per ann. at the survey of the priory made for cardinal Wolsey in 16 Hen. 8 (1524-5)[e]. With the other possessions of the priory it was successively settled on the cardinal's college at Oxford in 17 Hen. 8 (1525-6)[f], and on St. Frideswide or king Henry the eighth's college at Oxford in 24 Hen. 8 (1532)[g]; on the dissolution of which latter establishment in 37 Hen. 8 (1545) it reverted to the crown; and in 3 and 4 Phil. and Mar. (1557) was granted, under the name of the manor of Norton, parcel of king Henry the eighth's college, Oxford, and late of Daventry priory, to

A court baron is occasionally held for the manor or manors of Norton.

Manor House. The loose and capricious valuations in the inquisitions post mortem are strikingly exemplified in the two returns of the manor house here, after the deaths of Hugh de Mortimer, and Matilda his widow. By the former inquisition[i], the capital messuage, with the garden and other inclosures, was worth 4s. yearly; and in the latter[k], the capital messuage, with fruit and herbage of the garden, was worth 16s. yearly. The present house is, I presume, the remains of the one built or repaired by sir Richard Knightley, and has been greatly improved and modernized by the late proprietor.

The Village is about two miles from Daventry. In the time of Bridges it consisted of 'forty-one houses, 'including three which were set apart for the use of the poor[l].' By the census of 1801 Norton (including Muscote and Thorp) contained 52 houses and 362 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 71 houses and 397 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 95 houses and 474 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £183. 16s. 4d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £5045. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £498. 10s. at 5s. in the £. The wake is kept on the Sunday after All Saints day.

Advowson. Juliana de Chandri in 3 Ric. (1191) sold the advowson of the church of "Norton" to the prior and convent of Daventry for 16 marks of silver (£10. 13s. 4d.)[m]. After her marriage with Henry de Nowers she joined with him in a confirmatory charter[m], which was ratified by Richard de Vernon, the [intermediate] lord of the fee[n] between them and the earl of Warwick; and still further confirmed by their son Nicholas de Nowers[m]; and again in 42 Hen. 3 (1257-8) by his heir sir William de Whelton[o].

By a concord or fine in 36 Hen. 3 (1252), before the king himself, Roger de Golafre, by William his son and heir, released to the prior and convent of Daventry any right he might have in a moiety of the advowson of "Norton," for which they engaged to receive him and his heirs into the prayers of their church for ever[n]; and by a deed in the time of prior Nicholas, Roger declared the use of the said fine to be for the convent to hold his moiety of the advowson in frank almoign, in consideration of which the prior remitted to him and his heirs, the tithes of his hay and of his windmill in Norton on "Gosehou[n]" (Gooseshill). William de Golafre confirmed his father's grant[n]. The successive grants of the possessions of Daventry priory to cardinal Wolsey's college, and to St. Frideswide, or king Henry the eighth's college, Oxford, have been anticipated under the Priory or College Manor.

From the dissolution of king Henry the eighth's college in 1545 the impropriate rectory and vicarage of Norton remained in the crown till 6 Jac. (1608), when the impropriate rectory of Norton, with all tithes thereto belonging, and the tithes of Thorpe in the parish of Norton, and the advowson of the vicarage of Norton, were (int. al.) granted to Francis Philips and Richard More, gents. in fee[p]; by whom they were sold, 27 June 8 Jac. (1611), to sir Seymour Knightley of Norton, who afterwards granted them to Nicholas Breton, esq.; from which time the impropriate rectory has uninterruptedly attended the inheritance of the manor; but the advowson of the vicarage was at the sale of the Breton estate purchased by the rev. John Hebden, the late vicar; since whose decease it has been sold to the trustees of B. Botfield, esq. and thus become re-united in ownership to the manor and impropriate rectory.

The Rectory was rated in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[q] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[r] at 16 marks (£10. 13s. 4d.) per ann. deducting a yearly pension of 12s. to the priory of Warmington. At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) the rectory and vicarage were both impropriate to St. Frideswide or king Henry the eighth's college, and let to farm at £21. 6s. 8d. per ann.[s] The commissioners of inclosure allotted 184 a. 0r. 35 p. to Eliab Breton, esq. in lieu of the tithes of corn and grain, and of a modus of 2s. 6d. per ann. for the tithes of hay and grass of the open fields of Norton. The rectorial tithes of lord Spencer and Mr. Thornton's estates in Muscote, were exonerated by exchanges under the Whilton inclosure act.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Daventry. It was ordained in the time of Hugh (Wells) bishop of Lincoln[t], between 11 Joh. (1209) and 19 Hen. 3 (1254); and by the ordinations, or rather confirmations, of bishop John D'Alderby, 25 July 1301 (29 Edw. 1)[x], and of bishop Henry Burghersh, 5 Nov. 1321 (15 Edw. 2)[y], endowed with all the altarage and small tithes belonging to the church, and the tithes of corn of Ivo de Waleran in Norton, and of the fee of Sampson Northt. (or Gerveys) in Muscote. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[z], and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[a], this vicarage was rated at 10 marks (£6. 13s. 4d.) per ann. In Sept. 1451 (30 Hen. 6), at the petition of the prior and convent of Daventry, pleading the inadequacy of their funds, and their suit being seconded and sanctioned by letters from the king, pope Nicholas 5th issued his bull annulling the perpetual vicarages of the Holy Cross of Daventre, All Saints of Norton, St. Mary of Staverton, and All Saints of West Haddon, and decreeing that in future the prior and convent should support the charges of the cures and episcopal dues, pay 2s. yearly (to the archdeacon) for each church, and provide one of their monks or secular priests to officiate in each church, to be appointed and removed at their pleasure, as yearly vicars, without the leave of the ordinary. In the survey of the possessions of the late priory of Daventry, taken in the interval between the dissolution of cardinal Wolsey's college in 1530, and the grant to Henry the eighth's or St. Frideswide's college in 1532*, it is certified under "Norton juxta Daventr'" that "Thomas Strangwyche squire holdeth at will the psonage & Vicarage, to the which belongeth pte of the Tythe of the Town of Muscote w^t^ all m̃a̅ of tythes oblac'ons & other pfitts belongyng to the seid psonage & Vicarage & paieth yerlie for the same, xvi^li^ x^s^.

"The chauncelle there is covered w^t^ Leyd & the repac̃ons theroff in the charge of the College.

"Muscote pcell of the psonage there belongeth to the Church & Tythe of Norton.

"The seid Town of Muscote w^t^ the Feld belongyng to the same, is the moost pte enclosed & kept in sev̅altie, and the custume was when it lay hole in tillage, that the late Monast'ie of Daventr' & the pson of Brokhole, the oon to take oon sheif & the other an other, & so it is used of that that now lieth in Tillage.

"The tythe of the Wa̅ Miln is holie to the Church of Norton which is in the tenure of Thomas Strangwiche Squier[b]."

Accordingly, in the general ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), the impropriate rectory and vicarage of Norton are blended together, and so continued whilst in the hands of St. Frideswide's college, and subsequently of the crown; but the advowson only of the vicarage passed to the lay grantees in 1608, and not the impropriate vicarage.

The institution of W. Ward to the vicarage in 1615 (13 Jac.), on the presentation of the king by lapse, evidently originated in the patron appropriating to himself the vicarial tithes, and neglecting or refusing to present; for the new vicar lost no time in claiming his rights, and in the following year (14 Jac.) an action for trover and conversion of two lambs was brought by Nicholas Breton, the impropriator, against the vicar. On the trial at the Spring assizes, 1616-7 (14 Jac.), at Northampton, the defendant was found not guilty for one of the lambs, and for the other, the jury found a special verdict as to the facts, reserving the points of law. Pending the hearing in the king's bench the vicar filed his bill in the exchequer, against Breton and others, to ascertain the extent of the term "altaragium" in the endowment, and obtained a decree in Michaelmas term 15 Jac. (1617), for all the small tithes and offerings of the parish till recovered against him by due course of law, in which case he was bound to abide the order of the court as to restitution. After the special verdict the case was argued four several times in the king's bench, and in Michaelmas term 16 Jac. (1618) judgment was given for the plaintiff, thus establishing the validity of the papal dissolution of the vicarage. This judgment is said to have been afterwards reversed in the court of exchequer on a writ of error, though the reversal is not indorsed on the roll. Be this as it may, succeeding vicars instituted successful suits for their tithes; and the parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified Norton to be a vicarage worth £55 per ann. in the patronage of Nicholas Breton, esq. and that Mr. Robert Allen was the incumbent[c]. In Nov. 1699 a cause came on in the exchequer, between the vicar of Norton and the tenants of Christ Church college, Oxford, for the vicarial tithes of Thrupp grounds, when the defendants claimed exemption from tithes for their lands, as part of the possessions of the greater abbeys; but finding this ground untenable, the college did not deny the revival of the vicarage, but suffered a decree to pass for the vicar by consent. An allotment of 46a. 3r. 8p. was awarded to the vicar in 1756 by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the vicarial tithes of the open fields of Norton, the old inclosures remaining titheable; and in Michaelmas term 1805 the late vicar Hebden filed a bill in the exchequer against Samuel Freeman and others, owners and occupiers of lands in Muscote, to account for their tithes, who pleaded that the vicarage having been dissolved by the pope when his ecclesiastical jurisdiction in the kingdom was supreme, the endowment was thereby annulled; and that the yearly sum of 8 marks (£5. 6s. 8d.), which they acknowledged the said lands had for a considerable time paid to the vicar, had no reference to vicarial tithes. In Easter term 1810 the cause was heard in the court of exchequer, and a decree pronounced for the plaintiff without directing an issue.

There is no vicarage house; indeed the continued necessity for one would obviously cease after the church was supplied by the monks of Daventry.

VICARS. William, by prior and convent of Daventry, between 1258 and 1263.

Geoffrey, priest, 2 June 1263.

John de Uppingham, between 1320 and 1340. He was rector of Stoke Albany from 1312 to 1321, in which year he was presented to the rectory of Eston Neston.

Roger de Saltiel, priest, 18 June 1345.

John de Creke, May 1349.

Peter de Longdon, priest, 14 Aug. 1361, already noticed as vicar of Daventry.

John Aleyn, 1397.

John Freeman, 31 Mar. 1399.

John Malesores.

John Busshop, chaplain, 25 June 1400.

Sir John Andrewe, 1420.

Nicholas Bateman, priest, 11 Nov. 1421.

Sir John Chilton, between 1435 and 1443.

William Loudon or London, priest, 26 Apr. 1443, who has previously occurred as vicar of Fawsley.

From the annullation of the vicarage in 1451 there are no institutions to this vicarage in the episcopal registers of Lincoln, nor in those of Peterborough, till 9 Oct. 1615, when

William Ward, A.B. was instituted on the presentation of the king by lapse. Either he, or a contemporary of both names, had the rectory of Peakirk cum Glinton from 1618 to 1636. On his decease, Joseph Bernard was presented by John Breton, esq. and inst. 11 Nov. 1642.

Robert Allen was vicar in 1655[d]. During the commonwealth he was one of the lecturers at Daventry, and being a popular preacher the church was crowded from the neighbourhood. He was ejected by the act of uniformity in 1662, when he removed to Adston, where he was hospitably received by Edward Harby, esq. and died there a few years after[e]. On his deprivation,

Richard Bowles, A.M. was inst. 16 Feb. 1662-3, on the presentation of Elizabeth Breton, widow, by wardship of her son John Breton, esq. On his decease, Samuel Withers of St. Mary hall, Oxf. A.M. was presented by John Verney, esq. (in trust), and inst. 4 Apr. 1690.

Charles Henchman of Christ Ch. coll. Oxf. A.M. was presented by Elizabeth Breton, wid. of Robert B. esq. and inst. 22 Aug. 1700, on the decease of the last incumbent. He resigned, and the same patron presented

Thomas Henchman, who was inst. 18 Mar. 1701-2; on whose resignation,

Benjamin Frauncis was inst. 2 Apr. 1706, on the presentation of the same patron. On his cession,

Thomas Duncomb of Hart hall, Oxf. A.M. was presented by Mary Breton, wid. and inst. 27 Nov. 1729. He also resigned, and was succeeded by Thomas Phillimore Shepheard of Linc. coll. Oxf. A.M. who was inst. 14 Oct. 1746, on the presentation of Benjamin Shepheard, gent. p. h. v. He was buried at Preston Capes 4 Apr. 1800, and

John Hebden of Hertford coll. Oxf. A.M. was inst. 12 July following, on the presentation of Welbore Agar viscount Clifden, and George Martin, esq. trustees of Michael Harvey Breton, esq. deceased, and William Breton, esq. his son and heir. He was buried here 9 Sept. 1820, when James Pinnock of Oriel coll. Oxf. A.M. rector of Husband's Bosworth in Leicestershire, was presented by Robert Hebden of Goadhurst in Kent, esq. and inst. 14 Dec. 1820.

The Communion Plate consists of a silver chalice, given in 1706 by Mrs. Mary Werden, wife of John Werden, esq.; and a silver paten and flagon dated 1745.

The Registers commence in 1678.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, stands at the south west extremity of the village, and consists of a tower containing five bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. It is a motley building. In the south aisle are two uniform windows of the decorated style, and three perpendicular ones. The north aisle has three uniform perpendicular windows, and a decorated one at each end. The east chancel window is perpendicular. The tower is 13 ft. 9 in. long, by 8 ft. 7 in. wide; the nave and aisles 68 ft. 3 in. long, the nave 20 ft. 6 in. the north aisle 12 ft. and the south aisle 12 ft. 2 in. wide; and the chancel 17 ft. 2 in. long, by 15 ft. 2 in. wide. The interior is neatly paved and pewed, and at the west end is a gallery for the choir and charity children, erected in 1810. In the middle of the nave, in a line with the north and south doors, is a modern font elevated on three large circular steps. The old font was circular with a square shaft. The nave is divided from each aisle by six pointed arches connected by dripstones, those on the north side supported by octagonal pillars, and those on the south side by pillars of four semicircular shafts; both ranges of pillars having plain square bases, and capitals composed of sets of plain mouldings. There are four clerestory windows on the north, and six on the south side. At the east end of the north aisle is a piscina. The chancel is separated from the nave by a neat wooden screen.

VI. Against the south wall, within the altar rails, is a large monument of black and white marble resting on the ground. On a high base are two corinthian pillars supporting an entablature surmounted by a circular pediment. Between the pillars, on a black inscribed tablet, are placed busts of Mr. and Mrs. Breton. Over their heads are festoons of flowers connected with the mantling of a shield bearing Breton, impaling Ar. a chief three lions rampant, Knight.

The Benefactions to this parish are omitted in the returns to the house of commons in 1787-8. Bridges says, 'there is given to this church one head-land, which is generally let for 12s. a year; as also a quartern of land 'of the yearly value of forty or fifty shillings[a].' The Church Charity estate at Norton "for the amendment "and repair of the church bells, clock, church-ways, bridges, the relief of the poor, and all other good and "charitable uses and deeds of most need on behalf of the parishioners of Norton," consists of about sixteen acres of land let for £40 per ann. and seven cottages let for £10. 10s. per ann.

There is a school-room adjoining the church-yard, in which 24 boys and 26 girls are taught and partly clothed by voluntary contributions.

The Roman Watling-Street passes through this lordship, and the present road from it into the village appears to follow the line of the vicinal road to the station of Benaventa or Isannavaria, noticed under the account of Borough hill (p. 340).

In a field called Great Shawney, near the footpath to Whilton, a labourer, in March 1813, discovered a skeleton with the face downwards: the head lying over, or near the edge of the brook. At the side were several Roman coins of Constantine the Great, Constantine, junior, "Urbs Roma," reverse, Romulus and Remus with the wolf; and "Constantinopolis," reverse, "Victory."

THORP,

Or Thrupp Grounds, as it is now usually called, forms the northern division of this parish, and contains about 830 acres, of which about 745 acres belong to the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, and the remainder to Beriah Botfield, esq. of Norton. The principal lessees under the dean and chapter are John Plomer Clarke, esq. who has about 250 acres, and Mr. John Bliss and Mr. John Radborn, who have about 210 acres each. The soil varies from a black sand to a light gravel.

Manorial History. This vill was originally divided into four petty estates, which, after the norman conquest, were severally held of different fees.

Moreton Fee*. Honor of Berkhampsted†. The saxon freehold of Azor son of Lefsi in "Torp" was rated at 5s. yearly, but was quadrupled in value at the domesday survey, when it was held by Alured under the earl of Moreton for two parts of a hide. The arable land was two carucates in the occupation of five villeins and three bordars[b].

The earl of Cornwall (afterwards king of the Romans) had two virgates here between 31 and 40 Hen. 3^c; and by the inq. p. m. of his son Edmund earl of Cornwall in 28 Edw. 1 (1299-1300), it was found that lands in "Welton" and "Throp" were parcel of his honor of Berkhampsted of the barony of (Middleton) Chenduit[d]. The name of Thorp near Daventry occurs twice in Chauncey's list of places within the honor of Berkhampsted[e], and correctly so; one entry referring to these lands of Alured, and the other to the lands of JUDITH FEE held by Leuric in "Weleton" and "Torp[f]," the account of which will be more appropriately placed under the former village.

GRENTEMAISNIL FEE*. HONOR OF LEICESTER†. Alwin held of Baldwin, prior to the norman conquest, a part of "Torp," then rated at only 12d. yearly, but which at the domesday survey had increased in value to 10s. and was held by Osbern under Hugh de Grentemaisnil. It contained four parts of half a hide. The arable land was one carucate in demesne, with one bordar who had also two acres of meadow[g]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 four small virgates in "Thorp" were certified to belong to William de Novo Foro[h], who had also the lands in Welton and Staverton which belonged to Osbern. In the Testa de Nevill about 27 Hen. 3 (1242), Robert All, the heirs of William All, and Simon de Trop, were returned to hold the fifth part of a fee in Welton, Staverton, and "Trop," of the fees of Simon de Montfort of the honor of Leicester[i]; and in another part of the same record, which may be placed between 31 and 40 Hen. 3, the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented that the vill of "Torp" paid 9d. yearly to the king; that (int. al.) the earl of Leicester had four virgates here; and that Stephen de Branfield in Torp gave the hospital of Jerusalem 2s. yearly for the office of advocate of the hospital, and held his lands here of the fee of Leicester[k].

CHOKES FEE, OR HONOR‡. Gunfrid de "Croches," or Chokes, obtained from the norman conqueror all the possessions of Swain‡, a considerable saxon freeholder in this county, and in the domesday survey of them, after "Torp" [Rothers Thorp] in "Colentreu" [now Wimersley] hundred, immediately follows "Westorp" in Gravesend [now Fawsley] hundred; an adjunct evidently introduced in contradistinction to the preceding vill of the same name. Gunfrid had here half a hide and the fifth part of half a hide. The arable land was one carucate occupied by two bordars. It had been rated at 2s. yearly, but was then tripled in value[l]. In the Testa de Nevill about 27 Hen. 3 (1242), Simon de Thorp and his parceners were certified to hold half a fee in "Thorp jux' Daventr'" of the honor of Chokes, then in the hands of Robert de Gynes[m], by feoffment from Robert, advocate of Bethun, as appears from an inquisition taken in 31 Hen. 3 (1246-7), which establishes the fact, but leaves the date uncertain[n].

MANOR. By a very early subinfeudation this manor was acquired by a family who adopted the local surname. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 Stephen de "Turs" was returned to hold half a hide in "Thorp[o]." Warner de Thorp, father and son, occur in early undated grants to Daventry priory[p]. Simon de Thorp, the feudatory tenant of Chokes in the Testa de Nevill, in another part of the same record, between 31 and 40 Hen. 3, was presented to be lord of the vill of "Torp[q]." He married Mary, sixth daughter and coheiress of sir Robert de Salceto[r] of HARPOLE, in which pedigree this family has been incorporated§, and brought down to sir Simon de Thorp, who in the succeeding reign alienated Harpole, and probably this manor also; for in 21 Edw. 1 (1293) it had passed to

Sir Philip de Montgomery of WHILTON, who attempted to prove that the feudal services were due to the king, and not to the honor of Chokes. The king, desirous therefore of ascertaining what fees or parts of fees were held of him in "Throp jux' Daventr'," and what fees of William de Fyens, as lord of the honor of Chokes, and what fees of other persons, and who held them, issued his mandate to the escheator to enquire by jury before the sheriff of Northamptonshire; by which inquisition it was found that nothing was held of the king in capite in that vill, but that half a fee was held there in capite of the honor of Chokes, of William de Fyens, who deposed that one Philip de Montgomery held it of him, and by a delusive suggestion had done homage to the king, by which he had been disinherited, and thereupon prayed that right might be done him. The said Philip being present in court, and asked if he were in the homage of the king, said he was, and that his feoffor declared that he held the said half fee of the king and of none other; but greater credit being given to the inquisition than to his mere word, and no evidence being adduced of either his feoffor or any of his predecessors doing suit to the king or his ancestor, the said homage was annulled, and Philip and his heirs adjudged to remain in the homage of the honor of Chokes[s]. He died two years after this decision[t], and Thorp did not long continue with his posterity, but passed to the Cornwalls of NORTON, and was settled, as already stated there, by sir Geoffrey de Cornwall on his son Richard's second marriage in 2 Edw. 3 (1328)[u]; on whose decease in 17 Edw. 3 (1343) this manor was found to be held of the honor of Chokes[x]. It is first omitted in the inquisitions of this family on the death of sir Edmund Cornwall in 5 Hen. 7 (1489)[y], who may therefore be presumed to have sold it, though no further notice of it can be traced till 3 Hen. 8 (1511), when

Sir Richard Knightley of FAWSLEY obtained licence to alienate in mortmain the manor of Thorp near Daventry, with pertinences and 10s. annual rent in Thorp, Buckby, and Welton, to Daventry priory, to be held of the duchy of Lancaster[z], to which the paramouncy of this manor was probably annexed after the honor of Chokes became vested in the crown. Other portions of Thorp were early possessed by the priory, as will be shewn under WELTON; and by deed without date Margery widow of sir Simon de Thorp released her right of dower in the common fields of Thorp, and in a piece of land where the grange of the convent stood [a].

This lordship, since the dissolution of the priory, has accompanied the demesne lands in Daventry and Drayton, and in like manner is demised by the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, on beneficial leases renewable every seven years.

CHAPEL. In 1257 (41 Hen. 3) an agreement was entered into, under the seal of the bishop of Lincoln, between prior Nicholas and the convent of Daventry, and sir Simon de Thorp, concerning the presentation of a chaplain in the chapel of St. John Baptist of Thorp to celebrate divine service there for ever; whereby the prior and convent granted to sir Simon and his heirs the privilege of nominating a secular chaplain to the chapel, whom they covenanted to admit on being presented to them, and to assign him certain quantities of wheat and two marks of silver (£1. 6s. 8d.) annually, with a house on the east side of the chapel for his residence, on condition that the said chaplain should be placed under the jurisdiction of the bishop of Lincoln and the archdeacon of Northampton, and swear fealty to the mother church before the ordinary of the place [b]. By another agreement, about 21 Edw. 1 (1293), John Golafre of Norton renounced to sir Philip de Montgomery all right to the nomination of the chaplain of Thorp [c]. In the survey of the possessions of the late priory of Daventry referred to (p. 316), under "Throp belonging to the Mano' of Daventr' [priory] which sūtyme was a Town & in tillage, & "now conv̄ted into pasture," it is certified that "there is a Chapell of Seynt John which cont' in length liiij Fote "and in brede xxi Fote which Chapell is cov̄d with .... & sūwhat ruinows as well in glasyng as in .... xxvi li. xiij s.

This inventory was probably taken preparatory to the desecration of the chapel. The house now in the occupation of Mr. Edmunds was built on its site, as was evident from arches in the walls which have been destroyed within memory.

Bridges says Thorp 'hath only one house upon it [d];' but there are now three dispersed farm-houses and a cottage. From its situation, fronting the north end of Borough hill, it is not improbable that this spot might have had some connection with that station. In the fields surrounding the house of Mr. Edmunds, for the space of upwards of thirty acres, thick foundation walls and fragments of ancient pottery are frequently turned up. On visiting this spot a few weeks ago we found protruding in Mr. Rudburn's pit, about a yard below the surface, considerable portions of a large cinerary urn inverted. By connecting the fragments we ascertained the diameter of the mouth to be 9 inches, and of the widest swell 15 inches, but were unable to judge of the height.

PRESTON CAPES,

In domesday " Prestetone," presents an obvious etymology—Priest's-town—subsequently softened down to Preston, with the adjunct of Capes from its early lords, to distinguish it from Preston Deanry near Northampton. The parish includes Great Preston, West Preston or Preston on the hill, and Little Preston or Wood Preston. Great Preston was inclosed by private agreement in 1659, confirmed by a decree of chancery in 1669, and contains about 1744 acres, the whole of which is the property of sir Charles Knightley, bart. of Fawsley, except the vicarial estate of about 165 acres. It is bounded on the north by Fawsley; north-east by Snoscomb in Everdon; east by Farthingston; south-east by Maidford in Norton hundred; south by Canons Ashby in the same hundred; south-west by Woodford in Wardon hundred; and west by Charwelton. The soil varies in different parts of the lordship, but is principally a deep loam, and nearly the whole is in permanent pasture.

The following scarce plants have been found here. Scandix odorata, sweet Cicely, in the street*. Adoxa Moschatellina, tuberous Moschatel, in the lane*. Sedum Telephium, Orpine or Live-Long, in the woods†. Hypericum Sursutum, hairy St. John's wort, in the lane*. Picris Echioides, common Ox-tongue, in the lane*. Sonchus palustris, marsh Sowthistle, in the lane*. Tassilago Petasites, Butterbur, in the lane by the side of the brook*.

MANORIAL HISTORY. WODHULL FEE‡. At the domesday survey Hugh held of Walter Flandrensis an hide and a half, and the fifth of half a hide in " Gravesend " hundred. The arable land was four carucates; two in demesne with two servants, and the other two in the occupation of eight villeins and three bordars. There were two acres of thorny ground. The whole had been, and was still, valued at 40s. yearly[e]. The name of the vill where this estate was situated is omitted, perhaps inadvertently, but the subsequent tenure admits no hesitation in applying it to Preston. The descent of the barons Wahull or Wodhull will be deduced from Walter Flandrensis under PATESHULL. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, for " Graveshende Falewesle " hundred, there was certified to be three hides wanting two small virgates in " Preston " of the fee of Wahull[f]; and in the Testa de Nevill about 16 and 19 Hen. 3, William Fitz Warin, then baron Wahull, in right of his wife Agnes Wahull §, paid scutage (int. al.) for half a fee in Preston Capes of the fee of Wahull[g].

CAPES MANOR. Hugh, the domesday mesne lord, was, I apprehend, the Hugh de Leycestre or Vicecomes who, after founding a priory adjoining his castle here, removed it to DAVENTRY, as already stated (p. 310). His descendants were liberal benefactors to the monasteries of Daventry and Pipwell, and are traced in the subjoined pedigree down to the reign of Henry 3rd, when they became extinct or ceased to be connected with this county.

LEYCESTRE AND POHER.

From cartularies of Daventry priory and Pipwell abbey.

HUGH DE LEYCESTRE, called Vicecomes, Seneschall of Matilda de St. Liz, founded a priory at Preston and removed it to Daventry about 3 Will. 2 (1090), and endowed it (int. al.) with churches of Preston, Eltington, and Thorp (Mundeville), living 18 Hen. 1 (1117). = MATILDA.

JOHN POHER, confirmed the churches of Haddon, Cold Ashby, Eltington, and Thorp (Mundeville), to Daventry priory, of the gift of his great-grandfather Hugh de Leycestre and his father Hugh Poher, oc. 9 Joh. (1208), and 18 Hen. 3 (1233). = EUSTACHIA, d. of Henry de Pinkeney, ob. s. p. = 2 h. ELIAS DE CHENDUIT.

Hugh Russell, the grantee of FAWSLEY, purchased this manor[h], probably from John Poher, and dying 19 Hen. 3 (1325)[i], was succeeded both here and at Fawsley by his great nephew Hugh Capes, whose son Thomas Capes sold this manor in the reign of Edw. 1 to John Hylberd of Fawsley[h].

From him it passed within a few years to the family of Lyons of WARKWORTH; for on the death of Thomas baron Wahull, 32 Edw. 1 (1304), John de Lyons was found to hold half a fee of him in Preston Capes[k], whose widow Margery de Lyons, and Richard Francis de Atthill, were in 9 Edw. 2 (1315) lords of the two Prestons[l]. Sir John de Lyons, son of the above, in 9 Edw. 3 (1335), obtained a grant of free warren (int. al.) in Warkworth and Preston Capes[m]; and in 20 Edw. 3 (1346) he, and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of this manor[n], ' which,' says Bridges, ' they appear to have soon after conveyed to Thomas de Beauchamp earl of Warwick, who was ' evidently in possession of it in the thirty fifth year of this reign[o].' But the Preston of which the earl levied a fine that year was in Rutlandshire[p]; and the first notice of this manor in connection with the Beauchamps is in 21 Ric. 2 (1397), when on the attainder in parliament of Thomas Beauchamp earl of Warwick[q], son of the above, his manors of Cosgrave and Preston in this county were (int. al.) granted to sir Henry Green[r] of DRAYTON. 1 Hen. 4 (1399) the earl was restored to his titles and estates by parliament[x]; and this manor attended the succession of the earldom* down to Richard Nevill the great earl of Warwick and Salisbury, who, with his wife Anne Beauchamp, in 9 Edw. 4 (1469) had licence to settle it on the dean and chapter of the collegiate church of the blessed Mary in Warwick[t], by whom a fine was levied of it the same year[u]. On the dissolution of this collegiate establishment in 37 Hen. 8 (1545), the manor of Preston Capes was granted to George Tresham and Edward Twyncho[v], who, in consideration of a debt remitted, conveyed it immediately after to

William Butler, esq. in fee[y]. He died 1 Oct. 1558, seised of the manor of Preston Capes, parcel of the late collegiate church of Warwick, another manor, parcel of the abbey of Bittlesden, and a messuage and lands, parcel of the late priory of Canons Ashby, leaving Richard Butler, esq. his son and heir aged 36 years[z]. William Butler, esq. son of Richard, in Jan. 37 Eliz. (1594-5) sold the manor of Great Preston or Preston Capes, with Yerle's (Earl's) wood, capital messuage, and certain lands, to Thomas Smyth of London, gent. who the following year transferred his purchase to Edward Knightley, esq. second son of sir Richard Knightley of Fawsley.

About 450 acres of the Butler estate descended conformably to the subjoined pedigree to the extinction of the male line, when it was sold by the Nicolls and Vowes, the heirs general and devisees, to the Knightleys; and the whole lordship of Great Preston, except the vicarial estate, is now vested in sir Charles Knightley, bart. of Fawsley.

Moreton Fee †. Honor of Berkhampsted ‡. The saxon freehold of Sawata in "Prestetone," worth 10s. yearly, was quadrupled in value at the domesday survey, and held by Ralph under the earl of Moreton. It consisted of four parts of a hide. There were three caracates of arable land in the occupation of three servants, four villeins, and two bordars; and half a plough, or half a plough's work, in demesne[a].

After the confiscation incurred by the second earl of Moreton, the paramouncy of this estate became parcel of the honor of Berkhampsted, under which the family of Avrenches or Abrincis §, by a subinfeudation, enjoyed an intermediate seignory. In the hundred roll 4 Edw. 1 (1275-6) it is presented that the earl of Cornwall, lord of the honor of Berkhampsted, had for eighteen years past withheld suit twice a year, and 40d. yearly for sheriffs, due from seven virgates of land in Preston[b].

Chenduit or Bittlesden Abbey Manor. Ralph, the domesday mesne lord, I presume to be the same individual who has been conjecturally considered under Charwelton (p. 297), as the ancestor of the Chenduits. In the Testa de Nevill about 25 Hen. 3 (1230) the abbot of Bittlesden is certified to hold half a small fee in Preston of Ralph de Chenduit[c]; and in other parts of the same record the abbot accounted for the scutage of this half fee, as of the fee of Avrenches, of the small fees of Moreton[d]. welton and Preston were confirmed in 52 Hen. 3 (1267-8), by an inquisition ad quod damnum, when the jury presented that they were not geldable, and that the king had no interest in them except by the death of the king of Almaine (earl of Cornwall), Stephen de Chenduit, and Adam de Cokefield, through whose ancestors the abbot and convent had ingress before the king's coronation[e]. At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) the possessions of the abbey of Bittlesden at Preston Capes were rated at £7. 14s. 1d. per ann.[f]

In 36 Hen. 8 (1544) the manor and lands in Preston, parcel of the dissolved abbey of Bittlesden, and messuage and land, parcel of the dissolved priory of Canons Ashby, were granted (int. al.) to Thomas Palmer and Lawrence Grey[g]; of whom they were purchased by William Butler, esq. who it has been already shewn died seised of them in 1558.

Daventry Priory was originally founded by Hugh de Leycestre at Preston near his castle, but subsequently removed by him as already stated. Besides the church, the priory had here, of the founder's endowment, five virgates of land[h], which attended the several grants of the rectory and advowson after the suppression of the priory.

Canons Ashby Priory had a messuage and eight acres of land here, valued at the ecclesiastical survey at 4s. per ann.[i]

The Castle of Hugh de Leycestre stood on the hill to the left of the entrance from Fawsley. Bridges says 'the porter's ward still remains entire[k].' Every vestige of building has now disappeared; but the keep forms a prominent elevation. Nearly contiguous to it was the mansion of the more modern lords, now degenerated into a common farm house.

The Village is approached by a steep hill, and stands about five miles from Daventry. In the time of Bridges Great Preston consisted 'of forty-six houses, and Little Preston of twelve, all inhabited;' by the census of 1801 they contained 75 houses and 380 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 81 houses and 416 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 82 houses and 441 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £202. 7s. 4d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815 amounted to £3160. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £365. 10s. 6d. at 4s. in the £. The wake follows the feast of St. Peter.

The Advowson was granted to Daventry priory by Hugh de Leycestre or Vicecomes[l]. The Chenduits, the mesne lords of the Moreton fee, appear however to have been co-founders of this parish, and to have assigned their interest also to the prior and convent of Daventry, to whom William Chenduit, by deed s. d. gave the church of "Preston," with all its appendages, customs, and services, except two virgates of land that owed service to the sheriff's aid[m]; which donation was confirmed by Ralph Chenduit in pure and perpetual alms[m]. The rectory of Great and Little Preston and advowson of the vicarage, and certain lands as parcel of the suppressed priory of Daventry, were consigned in 17 Hen. 8 (1525-6)[n], to cardinal Wolsey, towards the endowment of his college at Oxford, and in 24 Hen. 8 (1532), after the attainder of the cardinal, were transferred to the foundation of St. Frideswide or king Henry the eighth's college there[o]; but on its dissolution were resumed by the crown.

"The rectory and church of Preston, alias Preston Magna, and Preston Parva, alias Preston Capes," with all tithes thereto belonging, and certain lands in Preston, were granted 9 Feb. 7 Edw. 6 (1552-3) to Thomas Cecill and John Bell, of London[p], who three days following conveyed them in fee to Thomas Andrew of Charwelton, esq.[q] afterwards knighted. His son and heir Thomas Andrew, esq. in Nov. 19 Eliz. (1576) settled them (except the rectory of Little Preston, sold to Flamsted) on Simon Andrew, Richard Andrew, and Thomas Andrew, sons of his father by Mary Heneage his second wife successively, in fee tail; and in 38 Eliz. (1579) Richard Andrew of White Ladies Aston in Worcestershire, gent. sold the rectory of "Preston Capes, alias Preston Magna, alias Preston on the "hill," and the advowson of the vicarage, to Edward Knightley of Preston Capes, esq.[r] His son and heir Richard Knightley, esq. of Fawsley, annexed the impropriate rectory of Great Preston to the vicarage[s]; but the impropriate rectory of Little Preston and the advowson have descended, by the same title with Fawsley, to sir Charles Knightley, bart.

The Rectory is valued in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[t] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[u] at 9 marks (£6) per ann. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) this rectory is returned as held at farm for £8. 6s. 8d. per ann. of the impropriators, the master and fellows of St. Frideswide's college, Oxford[v]. Richard Knightley, esq. the patron, in 1630 vested the rectory and parsonage of "Preston Capes, alias Great Preston, alias Preston on the "Hill," and all tithes thereto belonging, in trust for the augmentation of the vicarage[w].

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Daventry. The prior and convent of Daventry obtained an appropriation of this church from Hugh (Wells) bishop of Lincoln[x] between 1209 and 1235, which was specially confirmed by pope Gregory 9 in the ninth year of his pontificate[y] (1235), and a vicarage was endowed, ordaining the vicar to have all the altarage, the tithes of seven virgates of land particularly specified, or 23s. (in lieu of the tithes) common belonging to one virgate of land, and the manse which was William Hendekyght's; the monks to bear the expence of the archdeacon at his visitation, and the vicar to pay synodals[z]. This vicarage is omitted in the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3) and in the printed copy of pope Nicholas's taxation 1291 (20 Edw. 1), but in the MS copy in the British Museum is rated at 60s. per ann.[y]; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at £8. 0s. 4d. per ann.[z] In the survey of the possessions of the late priory of Daventry, referred to p. 316, the vicarage is stated to be in the gift of the lord (of the rectory), of whom, sir Richard Leycester, the vicar, held at will the tithes of the parsonage of Great Preston at a yearly rent of £5. 6s. 8d.[a] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified "Preston" to be a vicarage worth £45 per ann. in the patronage of Richard Knightley, esq. and that J. Tomson was incumbent, and enjoyed the impropriation settled on trustees by Richard Knightley, esq. formerly of Preston[b]. On the inclosure of Great Preston in 1659 an allotment of 110 acres was made to the vicar in lieu of the vicarial tithes and rights, and another of 54 acres in lieu of the tithes belonging to the rectory or parsonage impropriate.

The vicarage-house is a genteel residence adjoining the east end of the church yard.

Vicars. Henry, chaplain, by the prior and convent of Daventre, appointed the first vicar on the ordination of the vicarage, between 1209 and 1235[c].

Alexander, between 1300 and 1313.

Geoffrey de Boudon, deacon, 16 June 1313.

Walter de Haselbeck of Grendon, priest, 9 June 1361. He was also rector of Staverton.

John Braunfeld, priest, 7 Nov. 1361.

John Friday, chaplain, 8 Dec. 1400.

Robert Yarburgh, between 1420 and 1423.

Brother John Asheby, a monk of Daventry priory, 6 Apr. 1424.

John Werney, between 1435 and 1440.

William Ulger, priest, 9 Feb. 1440-1.

Sir John Greyve, 19 Jan. 1454-5, exchanged for the vicarage of Massworth in Buckinghamshire with Sir John Clunne, priest, 14 Nov. 1458[d].

Sir John Staunford, between 1459 and 1470.

Sir Richard Baxter, priest, 27 Dec. 1470.

Sir Richard Barlewyke, between 1480 and 1492.

William Knight, priest, 13 Aug. 1492.

Sir Richard Leycester, priest, 25 June 1507, and occurs in 1535.

Henry Napton, vicar, occurs 1561[e]. On his decease

Edward Sharpe was presented by sir Robert Lane and Mary his wife, and instituted 15 Oct. 1580. He retained it but a short time,

John Elliston being inst. 28 Feb. 1581-2, on the collation of the bishop by lapse. He appears to have resigned it for the rectory of Slapton, when

Robert Smart was presented by sir Robert Lane, and inst. 30 June 1585.

George Webb, A.B. was presented by sir Robert Bevill, K.B. and inst. 4 July 1605, on the deprivation of John (probably a clerical error for Robert) Smart. He was buried here 22 Apr. 1637[f], and David Ensigne, A.M. was inst. 4 May 1637, on the presentation of Edward Farmer, gent. and rev. Thomas Hill.

John Tompson occurs about 1643, and was buried here 27 June 1667[f].

Humphrey Vernon was inst. 25 Oct. following, on the presentation of lord Crewe and others, in trust for Essex Knightley, esq. He was buried here under the description of "Vicar and Rector" 30 June 1677[f], when

William West resigned the rectory of Slapton, and was inst. 21 Nov. 1677, on the presentation of the same patrons. He was buried here 17 Jan. 1698-9[f], and

Edward Richardson, already noticed under Fawsley, was presented by sir John Crewe, and Robert Harley, Thomas Foley, and John Scrope, esquires, in trust for Lucy Knightley, esq. and inst. 18 Mar. 1698-9. He died 27 Dec. and was buried here 30 Dec. 1719[f], when

Thomas Danby, A.B. resigned the vicarage of Fawsley, and was inst. 29 Apr. 1720, on the presentation of the same trustees, Robert Harley being then earl of Oxford. He was buried here 4 Feb. 1723-4[f], and

Knightley Adams of Hart hall, Oxf. A.M. was presented by the same trustees, with the addition of Francis (Gastrell) bishop of Chester, and inst. 4 Mar. following. He died 12 Nov. and was buried here 16 Nov. 1769[f], when

Fitzherbert Adams of Lincoln coll. Oxf. A.M. was presented by sir John Dryden, bart. John Robinson, Charles Alicock, and Thomas Lee Thornton, esquires, in trust for Lucy Knightley, esq. and inst. 1 Jan. 1770. He was lord of the Bittlesden manor in Charwelton, where a pedigree of the family has been introduced; and resigning this benefice for the rectory of Ulcomb in Kent,

Charles Knightley of Trinity coll. Oxf. LL.B. who had been previously instituted to the vicarage of Fawsley, was inst. 23 July 1778, on the presentation of John Robinson, T. L. Thornton, George Wrighte, and Henry Watkin Dashwood, esquires, in trust for his elder brother Lucy Knightley, esq. He resided here, but died in London 28 June, and was buried at Fawsley 6 July, 1787. His successor

Henry Holyoake of University coll. Oxf. A.M. was presented by the same trustees, and inst. 21 Aug. following. He is also vicar of Bidford and of Salford in Warwickshire.

The Registers commence in 1614.

The Church, dedicated to St. Peter, is principally of the perpendicular style of the fourteenth or beginning of the fifteenth century, but from the lancet window on the north side of the chancel, now built up, may be presumed to have been altered from, or built on the site of an earlier edifice. It consists of a tower containing five bells, nave, north and south aisles, extended parallel with the west end of the tower, south porch, and chancel. The interior is paved with stone, and partly pewed. The tower is 11 ft. 7 in. long, by 11 ft. 10 in. wide; the nave 36 ft. by 18 ft. 8 in.; the north aisle 54 ft. 9 in. by 10 ft. 7 in.; the south aisle (exclusive of a small vestry at the west end) 40 ft. 6 in. by 10 ft. 5 in.; and the chancel 33 ft. 7 in. by 15 ft. 3 in. The nave is divided from the north aisle by two octangular pillars with plain capitals supporting equilateral arches, and from the south aisle by two circular pillars with circular bases, and capitals of plain octangular mouldings and round astragals, supporting arches more depressed and obtuse than on the opposite side. Attached to the western pillar of the south aisle is a multangular font having arched compartments.

Ancient Chapel. Prior Nicholas and the convent of Daventry, patrons of the church of "Preston," between 1231 and 1264 granted to their dear and special lord Hugh de Capes and his heirs licence to erect a free chapel on his manor of "Preston," with permission for a chaplain to celebrate divine service there on condition of faithfully rendering all the great and small tithes, oblations, and other obventions and customs, to the mother church and vicar of Preston[f].

Benefactions (p. 240). The £12 per ann. distributed to the poor arises from £300 placed on security at 4 per cent.

School. Bridges states that 'some years ago a free-school was founded here by one of Mr. Knightley's 'ancestors for the teaching of Latin. The master is required to be a clergyman, and to have been brought up in 'the university of Oxford, and hath a salary of xxx[l] a year, which is constantly paid by Mr. Knightley of 'Fawesley[g].' It is now a common village school for reading and writing, at present containing between 20 and 30 boys. The master has a salary of £24 per ann. being the interest of £600, at 4 per cent.

The Roman Road from Benaventa or Isannavaria to Brinavis, it has been already intimated, passed through Preston Capes*. The point where it entered the village cannot now be ascertained, but it must have crossed it near the hill south of the church, where are vestiges of a deep foss and intrenchment. The modern castellated farm-house appears to have been erected on the line of the road which skirted the north side of the camp, and on reaching the western end, bore away to the west, where its course is still evident along a ridge thrown up on the brow of the hill for a considerable distance to the barn or hovel against which two modern roads branch off to Woodford and Charwelton. Here all trace of it has been obliterated by cultivation, but Bridges has unconsciously borne testimony of its having taken the direction of the former village, by stating that 'Part of the highway 'leading from Woodford to Preston is called Port-way, and a furlong adjoining Port-way furlong[h];' indeed the name of Port-way is still retained in the third field from Woodford in the road to Preston.

John Nicoll, a learned divine and schoolmaster, son of the rev. John Nicoll and Mary Butler his wife, was baptized here 16 Nov. 1683. He was elected from a Westminster scholarship to Christ Church college, Oxford, in 1704, and took his master's degree in 1710. He was appointed second master of Westminster school in 1713, and head master in 1733, when he was created D.D. in convocation. He obtained the rectory of Mean Stoke, Hants, in 1728; one of the prebendal stalls of Westminster in 1740; and a canonry of Christ Church, Oxford, in 1757. In 1753 he resigned Westminster school, and was succeeded by Dr. Markham, afterwards archbishop of York. He died 19 Sept. 1765, and was buried in the north transept of Christ Church cathedral, where a long complimentary Latin inscription is placed to his memory. His widow survived him several years.

Two portraits have been engraved of him. 1. In his canonicals, with his cap and gloves in his hand, inscribed "Johannes Nicoll, D.D. Ecclesiæ Westmonasteriensis Prebendarius, Scholæ per annos xx Archididascalus, Ædes "Christi Canonicus A.D. 1755. æt 71." R. Taylor, pinx. J. M'Ardell, fec. large fol. mez. 2. WOOD PRESTON, or LITTLE PRESTON, Forms the eastern division of the parish of Preston Capes, and contains about 1080 acres, of which dame Elizabeth Dryden of Canons Ashby has about 605 acres, and Mr. John Charles Barrett about 300 acres. The lordship is all old inclosure, and about one-fifth arable. At the partition of the Bevill estate in 1701 there were nearly 170 acres of wood; but it is now reduced to about 120 acres on the Dryden estate. The water mill has been recently destroyed.

Manorial History. Moreton Fee†. Honor of Aquila. The saxon freehold of Fregis at "Pres-"tetone" was held at the domesday survey under the earl of Moreton by Nigel, and contained one hide and half a virgate. The arable land was three carucates; in demesne were two carucates and two servants; and a priest with three villeins had the other. There was one acre of wood. The whole had been rated at 6s. but was then raised to 40s. yearly[i].

Alured held of the earl one virgate and a half in "Prestetone." The arable land was one carucate, but it lay waste[j].

The earl of Moreton was paramount lord of estates in both Prestons; and, presuming the above to have constituted Little Preston, the paramouncy on the forfeiture of that earldom was annexed to the honor of Aquila, or the Eagle. Gilbert de Aquila having gone into Normandy without licence, king Henry 3rd is said to have claimed his lands as an escheat. In 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1) the honor of Aquila, with Pevensey castle in Sussex, the head of the barony, was granted during pleasure[k], and in 30 Hen. 3 (1245-6) in fee, to Peter de Sabaudia (Savoy), the queen's uncle[l], who in the Testa de Nevill under Sussex, is returned to hold it of the king in capite by the service of two fees and a half, and that the heirs of John de Montacute held fifteen fees of that honor, of which two [three] fees were in Northamptonshire[m]. Peter de Savoy afterwards surrendered this honor; for in 53 Hen. 3 (1268-9) it was given to prince Edward and his heirs, kings of England, so that it never should be severed from the crown[n].

Manor. John de Montacute in 7 Hen. 3 (1222-3) owed 10 marks (£6. 13s. 4d.) for his bailiff Roger de Nonacourt, who had committed waste in the new wood at Preston[o]; 'and in the eleventh year of this reign he 'paid a fine of forty marks for leave to inclose a park in Little-Preston.' In 12 Hen. 3 (1227-8) Robert de Cokefield remitted by fine all right which he had or might have in Little Preston to John de Montacute[p]. 'In 'the fourteenth year of this reign[r], Lucy the widow of John de Montacute laid claim to a third part of Little-Preston, 'as due to her in part of her dower. But the cause was decided in favor of William de Montacute, who produced a 'deed, whereby it appeared that John de Montacute his brother had conveyed to him the said William de Montacute

'all his lands and possessions in Little-Preston, to be held by him and his heirs for ever.' In the Testa de Nevill between 16 and 19 Hen. 3, sir William de Montacute accounted for 26s. 9d. for scutage of three fees of the honor of Aquila and small fees of Morton, viz. half a fee in Little Preston, one fee in Fortho, one fee in Tiffield, and half a fee in Cosgrave[s]. He was succeeded by his two daughters and coheiresses,

Margery wife of William de Echingham, and Isabella successively wife of Robert de la Hay and Thomas de Audeham or Aldham. In 53 Hen. 3 (1268-9) William de Echingham obtained a grant of free warren (int. al.) in his demesne lands of Preston[t]. By deed s. d. Margery formerly wife of William de Echingham and daughter of William de Montacute, gave to Canons Ashby priory for the support of a priest there for her soul and the souls of her ancestors and successors, 100s. annual rent, to be paid by her (half) brother sir Robert le Poher out of tenements which he held of her[u]; and which by another deed he made payable out of his lands at Witham[u] in Essex. On the death of Margaret s. p. her sister became her heir; and in 4 Edw. 1 (1276)

Thomas de Audeham or Aldham died seised (int. al.) of the manor of "Preston Parva" of the inheritance of Isabella his wife, held of the honor of Aquila by service of half a fee and 40d. to the castle guard of Pevensey, leaving Baldwin his son and heir aged 15 years[x]; whose son Francis de Aldham died seised in 1 Edw. 3 (1327), and John Seyncler or St. Clere (son of his aunt Joan) was found to be his cousin and next heir, aged 26 years[y]. In 3 Edw. 3 (1339) he and his wife Alice were summoned by writ of quo warranto to shew why they claimed free warren in their demesne lands of "Wode Preston in Preston," when they pleaded prescription, and had their plea allowed[z]. The male line terminated in Thomas St. Clere, esq. the fourth in lineal descent from this John, who died in 13 Hen. 6 (1434), leaving three daughters and coheiresses, Elizabeth, Eleanor, and Edith[a], between whom, conjointly with their respective husbands, the extensive patrimonial estates in the counties of Kent, Sussex, Surrey, Northampton, Buckingham, Oxford, Leicester, Cambridge, and Suffolk, were divided by deed 8 July, 24 Hen. 6 (1445)[b], and the manors (int. al.) of Wood Preston and Heyford (probably Tudenham) allotted to

William Lovell, esq. and Elizabeth his wife. From their son Henry Lovell, esq. this manor descended in moieties to his two daughters and coheiresses

Elizabeth wife of sir Anthony Windsor, and Agnes wife of John Empson, esq.[c]

Henry Windsor, esq. and Eleanor his wife, in 1 Edw. 6 (1547) levied a fine of a moiety of the manor of Wood Preston or Little Preston to Edmonde Forde, esq.[d] of Harting in Sussex, who in 3 Edw. 6 (1549) conveyed it to Peter Coles of Preston Capes, gent. and Richard Coles his son and heir, in fee[d]. But a commission of lunacy issued against Henry Windsor the vendor two years after[e]; and by an inquisition post mortem in 1 Mar. (1553) he was found to have died seised of this moiety of the manor, leaving Constance wife of Thomas Rythe, gent. his sister and heiress[f]; by whom, however, in consideration of £50, it was released, and the sale confirmed in 5 and 6 Ph. and Mar. (1558)[d].

John Empson of Easton (Neston), esq. and Agnes his wife, by deed 15 June, 15 Hen. 8 (1523), covenanted to sell their moiety of the manor of Wood Preston or Little Preston to John Baldwin, gent.[d] who by deed 23 Aug. following, conveyed all his interest in it to Thomas Chipsey of Northampton, merchant[d].

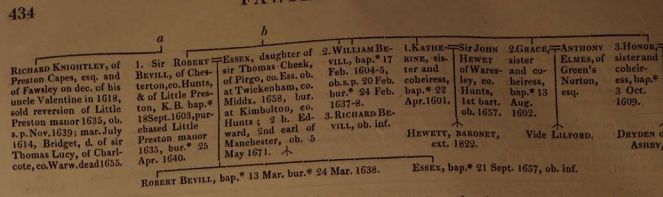
Thomas Chiprey of Northampton, merchant, in 17 Hen. 8 (1525), sold the Empson moiety of the manor of Little Preston to sir Andrews Windsor[e] (afterwards created lord Windsor), whose son William 2nd lord Windsor in Feb. 4 Edw. 6 (1549-50) alienated it to Thomas Andrew of Charwelton, esq. (afterwards knighted) and Katherine his wife in fee[f], who conveyed it the following year to Peter and Richard Coles, gents.[g]; by which purchase, having previously acquired the other moiety, the entire manor became vested in them. Peter Coles, esq. son and successor of Richard, died in 19 Eliz. (1577), leaving an only daughter and heiress Mary, successively the wife of Edward Knightley, esq. and sir Robert Bevill, K.B. whose son and heir Richard Knightley, esq. in 11 Car. (1635) sold the reversion in fee of this manor for £1000, subject to the lives of himself and his wife Bridget, to his uterine brother sir Robert Bevill, K.B.[h]; on whose decease in 1640, without issue, his three sisters and coheiresses became jointly entitled, but the estate remained undivided till Nov. 1701, when, by a deed of partition, one-third share, comprising 346 a. including 56 a. of wood, was allotted to sir John Hewett, bart. as son and heir of sir John Hewett, bart. son and heir of sir John Hewett, bart. and Catherine his wife, sister and coheiress of sir Robert Bevill; one-third share, comprising 360 a. including 56 a. of wood, to the rev. John Woodford, the rev. Richard Woodford, the rev. Thomas Palmer, the rev. George Butler, and Robert South, gent. who purchased from Elmes Steward, esq. of Cotterstock, son and heir of Nicholas Steward, esq. and Susanna his wife, and Catherine Walter of Piercefield in Monmouthshire, which Susanna and Catherine were sisters and coheiresses of William Elmes, esq. of Cotterstock, brother and heir of sir Thomas Elmes of Lelford, son and heir of Anthony Elmes, esq. and Grace his wife, another sister and coheiress of sir Robert Bevill; and the other third share, comprising 358 a. including 36 a. of wood, to Erasmus and William Dryden, the devisees of their father sir Robert Dryden, bart. son and heir of sir John Dryden, bart. and Honor his wife, the other sister and coheiress of sir Robert Bevill, from whom it has passed by descent, with the greatest part of the Hewett share subsequently acquired, to their lineal representative dame Elizabeth Dryden of Canons Ashby. Mr. Barrett's property is partly inherited from the Woodfords, and partly by purchase.



COLES, BEVILL, &c. of WOOD PRESTON or LITTLE PRESTON.

From Knightley evidences, and the parish register of Chesterton, co. Hunts *.

Arms. Coles: Gules, on a chevron Argent between three lions' heads erased Or, two bars gemelles of the field between nine pellets.
Bevill: Gules, a chevron Or between three besants.

[e] Knightley evidences.

The Manor House stood on the hill north-east of the village, where the site may still be traced.

The Village now consists of but 11 houses, and is included under Preston Capes in the population reports.

Advowson, Impropriate Tithes, &c. Though Little Preston is, and has long been, incorporated in the parish of Great Preston, yet at an early period the tithes were separately appropriated; and the following agreement between William de Montacute and the prior and convent of Daventry leads to the inference that the fee of Little Preston was not primarily included in the endowment or foundation of the parish.

In 19 Hen. 3 (1234-5), William de Montacute for the health of his soul and of his wife Agnes, gave to the prior and convent all the tithes of corn of his demesne lands in Little Preston and all the small tithes which the church had or ought to have, four acres and one rood of land in the inlands (inclosures), a rood of land in the west side of his garden, the pasturage of two cows with his own herd, and commons for twenty sheep in the pastures without his park, and pannage for five hogs in the park when it afforded any: in consideration of which, the prior and convent agreed to find a chaplain to officiate daily in the chapel of Little Preston whenever he or his family were resident there; the chaplain and his clerk to be boarded in the family during such residence, and whenever the chaplain was prevented from attending by sickness, his provisions to be sent to him; the said William and his heirs to repair the body of the chapel, and the prior and convent the chancel [h].

King Edward 2nd, in an exemplification charter in 1316 confirming the various donations to the abbey of Grestein in Normandy, recites (int. al.) a grant from John de Montacute of the manor and advowson of Marsh in Buckinghamshire, which was confirmed by Baldwin, son of Thomas de Haldeham [Aldham] and Isabella de Montacute, together with the tithes of his fee in Ickford (in the same county) and of the chapel of his manor of "Parva "Preston.[i]" The tithes reverted again to Daventry priory, but when, or how, is not now known. Under the head of "Little Preston," in the survey of the possessions of the late priory between 1530 and 1532*, it is certified that "there is a close wherein sumtyme stode the Tythe barn cont' oon rode, which close butts on the north side "on the King's High Wey & on th'est side on the Ground of sir Andrews Wyndsore & on the south side on a pece "of Ground called Monk leys, cont' iiij acr' & di' & let to the Colege, which ground with the tythe of the said "Town oon Sir Ric' Leycestr' vicar of Preston holdeth at will & paieth yerlie for the same iij li. vj s. viij d.

"M d. that there haith ben paied as is seid owt of the seid Church of Preston to the pson of Marsh in Oxford-"shire [Marsh in Buckinghamshire] in the name of a pension xxxiij s. iiij d." [k]

The descent of the rectory and advowson has been given under Great Preston (p. 428) down to Thomas Andrew, esq. afterwards knighted, who in Sept. 1 Mary (1553) conveyed to William Flamstede of Preston Capes, in fee, certain lands in Great Preston, and all the tithes, &c. in "Preston Parva" to the rectory and church of Preston belonging [l]. His son John Flamsted of Rushton, gent. in Jan. 26 Eliz. (1593-4), in consideration of £580, sold lands in Great Preston, and "the rectory and parsonage of Wood Preston, alias Little Preston," with "the tithes "of corn, grain, and hay, and all other tithes whatsoever, as well great as small, oblations, obventions, mortuaries, "glebe lands," &c. thereto belonging in "Wood Preston alias Little Preston," to Edward Knightley of Wood Preston alias Little Preston, esq.[l]; from whom they have descended to sir Charles Knightley, bart. of Fawsley.

The Chapel, "with the fote ground [footpath] round about it," occurs in a deed in 1522[l]. It has long since been completely desecrated, but is supposed to have stood in a close called Graves Piece.

STAVERTON,

Usually pronounced Stareton, has not varied in orthography since domesday, except that in early deeds it is frequently contracted to Stav'ton. As there is a long and steep descent from the village to the river Leam, which divides this county from Warwickshire, it is not improbable but the name may have been derived from the saxon ræg or rear, the apex or summit of a hill, combined with tone, a town. The lordship was inclosed by act of parliament in 14 Geo. 3 (1774), when it was estimated at about 2400 acres, but by actual survey contained only about 2130 acres. The principal proprietors are, Mrs. Daniel of Warwick, who has about 400 acres; the vicar, in right of his church, about 350 acres; Mr. Joseph Goodman about 180 acres; Mr. William Head of Drayton about 145 acres; Miss Lydia Anne Downes about 105 acres; and Mr. William Hands about 100 acres. It is bounded on the north by Braunston; east by Drayton in Daventry parish; south-east by Badby; south by Catesby and Newbold; and west by Shuckburgh and Flecknoe in Warwickshire.

Studbury hill in this parish has been considered 'the highest spot of ground in all England,' from the circumstance of the rain water which descends on it flowing to three different points of the compass, eastward to the Nen, westward to the Leam, and southward to the Charwell[a]; but though it has no pretensions to rank in elevation with the mountainous tracts of the northern counties, it is one of the loftiest eminences in this part of the kingdom.

About four-fifths of the lordship is in permanent pasture. The soil varies from strong clay to loam, on a substratum of shelly rock.

The principal river of the county, THE NEN, or at least the western branch of it, has its source at Hartwell spring in this parish, bordering on Badby. The honor has been claimed for Fawsley, Badby, and other places, but Morton observes that "Staverton has indeed the fairest Title; because their Hartwell Spring not far from the "Foot of Studbury Hill in the South East part of the Lordship, and the Oozings about Hartwell in the same "Valley, are upon as high, if not the highest Ground, and remotest from the River's Out-let; and because the "Course of its Water is in a more direct Tract or Canal than the rest to the main Current which commences at "Northampton[b]," at the confluence of the northern and western branches, from which point it is now navigable to the German Ocean.

MANORIAL HISTORY. MORETON FEE*. MOWBRAY OR STUTEVILL BARONY. Saulf, Edric, and Alwin were the saxon freeholders of an estate in "Staverton," then rated at 40s. yearly, but which at the domesday survey was raised to 60s. and held by Alan under the earl of Moreton. It contained three hides, of which one hide and a half lay within the soke or jurisdiction of Fawsley. The arable land was eight carucates and a half; two were in demesne; and six villeins and twelve bordars had four; leaving two and a half waste or unaccounted for[c].

Both the paramouncy and intermediate seignory of this manor were immemorially associated with, and have been fully detailed under WHILTON †.

MANOR. Alan, the domesday mesne lord, was ancestor of the local family of Welton or Whelton; and in the hydarium of Hen. 2 Stephen de Welton was certified to hold three hides in "Stavton" of the fee of Roger Mowbray[d]. The descent of this manor was identified with WHILTON, and is embodied in the pedigree introduced there of the Wheltons and their representatives down to the Beaufoys ‡. Great part of the demesne lands of this manor appears to have been granted out subject to certain rents of assize and services; for in 1625, on the valuation of Whilton prior to its sale by Thomas Beaufoy, esq. it is added "the manor of Sta'rton with pertinences in chief "rents and for one cottage £3. 17s. yearly, a cock and a hen, a pound of pepper, a pound of almonds, two single "gloves, a needle and a thread, and divers peppercorns, with suit of court, &c. may be worth to be bought and "sold £100*." Henry Beaufoy, esq. son of Thomas, levied a fine in 1656 of the manors of Whilton and Staverton*, both of which were sold a few years afterwards.

Samuel Theed, gent. in 1692 settled the manor of Staverton, which he had lately purchased of Simon Wyrley, gent. on the marriage of his son and heir Thomas Theed with Elizabeth Arnold, whose son and heir Thomas Theed of Daventry, M.D. or his immediate representative alienated it.

In 1760 this manor belonged to William Daniel, esq. of Southam in Warwickshire, on whose decease in 1774 it descended to his only child the rev. William Daniel of Warwick, who died in 1817, having devised it to his wife Mrs. Sarah Daniel, the present proprietor.

GRENTEMAISNIL FEE*. HONOR OF LEICESTER†. In the saxon era Leuric‡ held of Baldwin a small freehold in "Stavertone" rated at 15s. yearly, which at the domesday survey was raised to 20s. and held by Osbern‡ of Hugh Grentemaisnil. It contained one hide. Of the two carucates and a half of arable land two carucates were in the occupation of a villein and five bordars[f].

MANOR. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 one hide in "Stavton" of the fee of Leicester, was returned to belong to William de Novo-Foro[g] [Newmarch]‡, who was the successor also of Osbern at Thorp in Norton and Welton. In the Testa de Nevill between 31 and 40 Hen. 3 the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented that the sheriff took ½ mark of William Hodinet; and that there were three hides of the fee of Stutevill, and a fourth hide of the fee of Leicester in "Stavton," and that Roger de Welton and William Hodinet were lords of the vill[h]. Thomas de Boltesham died in 33 Edw. 1 (1304-5) seised (int. al.) of £14. 10s. 9d. yearly rents of assize in "Staverton," held of John de Daventre by service of one fee, and which he had enjoyed for life by the courtesy of England, of the inheritance of Semele his wife, deceased; which Semele had four daughters—1. Sibilla, deceased, leaving Nicholas de Covesgrove her son and heir then of full age; 2. Agnes, deceased, who sold her right to Robert Kynne; 3. Isabella, deceased, leaving two daughters, Agnes and Matilda, of full age; and 4. Alicia (by the said Thomas de Boltesham), deceased, leaving a son and heir Thomas de Boketon aged 12 years, grandson and heir of his grandfather[i], and coheir of his grandmother. A mandate was directed to the escheator the same year to make legal partition between these co-parceners[k]; and '[l] in the aid which was collected in the twentieth year of 'Edward III. on making the King's son a Knight, a third and a sixth part of a Knight's fee in Staverton were 'accounted for by Thomas de Boketon, Nicholas de Burneby, Petronil de Cosegrave, and John Richard, as held of the 'fee of Leicester.'

The family of Burnaby of WATFORD retained their interest here as late as the sixteenth century[m]. The purparties of the other coheirs cannot now be traced; but the Staverton manor held of John Longueville, which was included (int. al.) in the special livery of the estates of

Sir John Spencer of ALTHORP in 37 Hen. 8 (1545)[n], could not apply to the manor then in possession of the Beaufoys, and was probably grounded on a claim arising from a consolidation of the whole or greater part of these shares. Neither prior nor subsequent notice of this manor occurs in the evidences or inquisitions of this family; nor can it be connected by proof—though there is little doubt of its identity—with the manor which descended from Thomas Smith, gent. to his four daughters and coheiresses, two of whom Joan and Agnes, by deed 2 Apr. 3 Jac. (1605), in consideration of a competent sum of money, convey in fee to Richard Harris the elder, gent. one of his majesty's ushers and quarterly waiters, Dorothy his wife (mother of said Joan and Agnes), and Richard Harris the younger, his son and heir apparent, their two parts and portions in four parts to be divided, of the manor of Sta'rton and messuages and lands there[o].

DAVENTRY PRIORY MANOR was formed of various small grants[p], the largest of which was one virgate of the gift of William Fonte[q]. On the grant of the priory to cardinal Wolsey in 16 Hen. 8 (1524-5) the manor of "Ste'rton" with court baron was surveyed at £2. 3s. 8d. per ann.[r] It passed successively with the other possessions of the priory to the cardinal's college in 17 Hen. 8 (1525-6)[s], and to St. Frideswide's or king Henry the eighth's college in 24 Hen. 8 (1532)[t]; and on the dissolution of the latter, reverting to the crown, was granted in 5 and 6 Phil. and Mar. (1558) to Gregory Isham, esq.[u] of BRAUNSTON, but in the inquisition after his death is not described as a manor[x].

CATESBY PRIORY had possessions at Stav'tone, which in the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) were valued in land at 12s. yearly, and in profits of the earth and of animals at £1. 5s. yearly[y]. Orabilla prioress of Catesby in 28 Edw. 3 (1354) demised a croft called Cote Croft in Staverton to William Freynsse for eleven years, if he should so long live[z]. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) the temporalities of the priory at Staverton were rated at £9. 10s. 4d. per ann.[a]; and in the minister's accompts on the dissolution at 2s. 11d. and £6. 18s. 8d. per ann.[a] They were granted in 37 Hen. 8[b] to Richard Andrew, esq. of Harleston.

HENWOOD PRIORY in Warwickshire had also possessions at Staverton; for in 5 and 6 Ph. and Mar. (1558) William Butler of PRESTON CAPES, and in 29 Eliz. (1587) Richard Butler, died seised of lands and rents here, held as of the manor [or late priory] of Henwood[c].

THE MANOR HOUSE of the Beaufoys and Theeds is now reduced to a mean farm house.

THE VILLAGE stands two miles from Daventry on the turnpike road to Southam and Warwick. In 1720 there was a destructive fire at the south end of the village, which in about three hours burnt 22 dwelling houses, besides out-offices, barns, and ricks, and destroyed property to the amount of nearly £3000. In the time of Bridges there were 'ninety-three houses, three of which were set apart for the use of the poor[a].' By the census of 1801 it contained 97 houses and 437 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 100 houses and 448 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 104 houses and 474 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this lordship is £126. 14s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £3818. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £423. 7s. at 4s. 6d. in the £. The wake follows the assumption of the Virgin Mary, 5 Aug.

The Advowson, with a virgate of land, was given to the prior and convent of Daventry by Stephen de Welton (of Whilton) in 1161 (7 Hen. 2)[d]. His grandson Roger de Welton, son of William, confirmed to the convent the church of St. Mary of Staverton; and sir William de Welton, son of Roger, in 1257 (42 Hen. 3) confirmed the church of Staverton with one virgate, and the church of Norton with two virgates of land[d]. This church was included in the confirmations of the spiritualities of the priory by Richard (Wethershed), Boniface (of Savoy), and Robert (Kilwarby), archbishops of Canterbury[e]. After the surrender of the priory the impropriate rectory [and vicarage] of Staverton accompanied its other possessions, till the dissolution of St. Frideswide's or king Henry the eighth's college in 1545, when they reverted to the crown, and were granted in 6 Eliz. (1564) to Edward Downinge, esq.[f] of whom they were purchased by Edward Onley, esq. of Catesby, who by will dated 4 June, 24 Eliz. (1582), settled them on his sons Edward and Richard successively in tail male, with remainder to his brother Thomas in tail male, in whose line they became vested in 1664-5, on decease of Edward Onley, esq. grandson of the testator, without male issue. The rev. Dr. Nicholas Onley annexed the impropriate rectory to the vicarage, and by will devised the advowson to his only child, a daughter, and the reversion in fee, on her demise without issue, to the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, on condition of their presenting a student of that college elected from Westminster. The doctor's father is said to have attended as a porter to a tavern in the Strand; and a gentleman of the name of Onley wanting a porter, and old Onley being called, the gentleman was struck with the similarity of their names, and his inquiries respecting the porter's family connexions and situation proving satisfactory, he adopted Nicholas his only son, sent him to Westminster school, and left him his fortune, part of which was the impropriate rectory and advowson of Staverton. The doctor was elected from the foundation of Westminster school to Christ Church college, Oxford, in 1658; was master of the Savoy, and prebendary of Westminster; and died in 1724.

The Rectory was valued in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[g] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[h] at 13 marks (£8. 13s. 4d.) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) the rectory and vicarage were both impropriate to St. Frideswide's or king Henry the eighth's college, and let to farm at £22 per ann.[i]

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Daventry. It was ordained by Hugh [Wells] bishop of Lincoln[k] between 11 Joh. (1209) and 19 Hen. 3 (1234), and endowed with all the altarage of the church and a manse; the monks to support hospitality to the archdeacon, and the vicar to pay synodals[l]. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[m] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[h], it was rated at 6½ marks (£4. 6s. 8d.) per ann. In 1451 the vicarage was annulled by the bull of pope Nicholas 5th, on the petition of the prior and convent of Daventry, as stated under Norton (p. 419), and accordingly in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it was blended with the rectory[i]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a vicarage worth £35 per ann.; that Edward Onley, esq. was patron, and Mr. Samuel Adams incumbent; and they humbly conceived it convenient to have an augmentation[n]. It is a discharged living, being returned under the act 5 Anne (1707) to be only of the clear yearly value of £30. The benefice now consists of 276a. 0r. 6p. allotted to the vicar by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the rectorial and vicarial tithes, and 74a. 1r. 37p. in lieu of the glebe lands and Arbury piece.

The rectory house, some distance west of the church, has been the residence of the vicar ever since the restitution of the great tithes to the vicarage. It was rebuilt about the time of the inclosure, and is, with its offices, in good repair and condition. The ancient vicarage house is no better than a poor cottage in the church-yard, but has a good garden, and is in tolerable repair.

Vicars. Richard de Staverton, chaplain, presented by the prior and convent of Daventry, and admitted vicar on the ordination of the vicarage between 1209 and 1235[l].

Henry de Belegrave, chaplain, by the bishop of Lincoln, on whom this presentation devolved, the prior of Daventre being at that time under sentence of excommunication, 29 Dec. 1306. He was also vicar of St. Peter's, Brackley.

Nicholas Andrew de Allerwais, priest, 1 Apr. 1349.

Roger de Boresworth, by the prior and convent of Daventry, between 1353 and 1357.

Simon de Bloston, 6 Aug. 1357.

Walter de Heselbech, 6 Oct. 1361; noticed in Preston Capes.

Walter de Grendon, 1365. He was vicar of Wollaston 1274 to 1301.

John Yonge of Staverton, priest, 6 Mar. 1391-2.

The prior and convent of Daventry appropriated this vicarage by papal bull in 1451, one of their monks supplying the cure; and after the dissolution no vicar occurs in the episcopal registers till 20 Apr. 1603, when

Henry Warner, A.B. was instituted on the presentation of Edward Onley of Catesby, esq. vice the last incumbent, deceased.

Ellis Jones, A.M. was inst. 26 Apr. following. He was buried here 21 Sept. 1784 [q], and William Chase, B.D. was inst. 18 Dec. 1784. He had the rectory of Old Church, Birmingham, a few months, but resigned from a conscientious scruple of retaining so populous a parish, and returned without preferment to his studentship at Christ Church, Oxford. He held a prebend in Wells with this vicarage, and was buried here 13 Jan. 1815. His successor

Samuel Slade, A.M. 1796, D.D. ....., was inst. 11 Apr. 1815. He is also dean of Chichester, and rector of Hartfield in Sussex. ob. Dec. 29. 1829.

The Registers commence in 1564, but are imperfect in several of the years prior to 1661; since which time they appear to be regular.

The Church, situated at the southern extremity of the village, is dedicated to the Holy Virgin, and consists of a tower containing five bells, nave, north aisle, and chapel, north and south porches, and chancel. On the south side the nave is a handsome square-headed perpendicular window with a double line of tracery in the head: the dripstone has an unusually long return, and extends half way down the side. The tower is 16 ft. 1 in. long, by 9 ft. 11 in. wide; the nave 53 ft. 5 in. long, by 17 ft. 5 in. wide; the north aisle 78 ft. 4 in. long, by 15 ft. 6 in. wide; the north chapel 12 ft. 5 in. long, by 13 ft. 6 in. wide; and the chancel 34 ft. 11 in. long, by 15 ft. 5 in. wide. The interior has been recently paved and pewed. The font is modern. The nave is divided from the north aisle by seven low pointed arches connected with dripstones and varying rather in height, resting on short octagonal pillars with capitals of plain mouldings. A range of three nearly similar arches, but without dripstones, is continued to the termination of the aisle, and separates it from the chancel, which is entered from the nave under an open arch. The north chapel is elevated by a slight step. In the south wall is a seat under a trefoil-headed ogee arch with crocket and finial, flanked by two upright pinnacles and finials: attached to it at the east end is a piscina under a cinquefoil-headed arch, with straight sided crocketted pediment and finial: and at the west end is a transverse aperture in the wall to admit a view of the principal altar in the chancel. The east window is of the decorated style with flowing quatrefoils in the head; and on the north side of it is a foliated bracket for a statue, above which is an extremely rich canopy with crockets and finials.

Benefactions (p. 240). The land allotted by the commissioners of inclosure, consisting of 11 a. 3 r. 27 p. is now let for £33 per ann. which is distributed in coals to the poor.

Free School. Mrs. Elizabeth Darby by will devised half a yard-land for teaching 20 poor children of the parish English and writing, in trust to the rev. Francis Baker, then vicar, who by deed 5 Feb. 1767 appointed the vicar and churchwardens ex officio trustees, and conveyed the land to them, which was then open field, but now consists of 27 a. 2 r. 27 p. allotted by the commissioners of inclosure, and is let on lease (nearly expired) at £44 per ann.

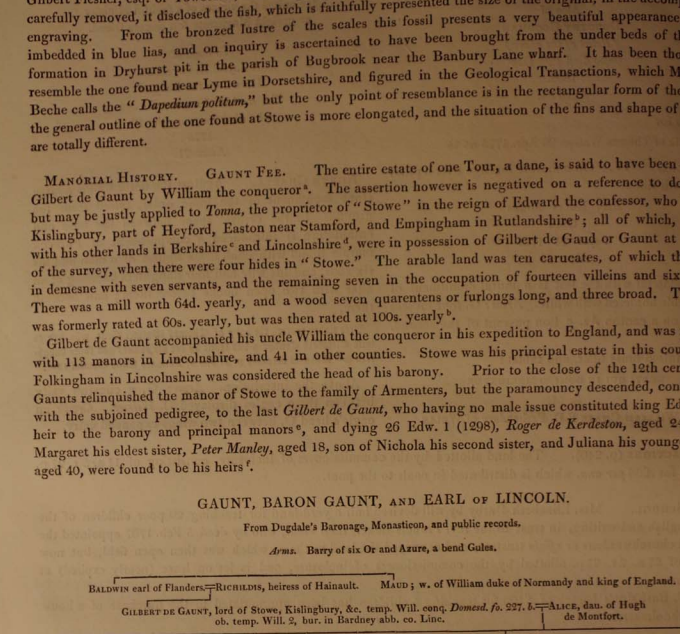
Miss C. Burbidge's legacy of £100 for teaching 5 children has been appropriated to the purchase of a house for the schoolmaster.

STOWE

Retains without variation its primeval saxon denomination Stop, denoting simply a place, or residence. According to the inquisition after the death of dame Katherine Dudley in the reign of Henry 7th, there were nine advowsons appendant to this manor, and hence it has been usually called "Stow Nine Churches;" but Heyford and Kislingbury are the only churches which could have been subordinate to it, nor is there any evidence of its lords having ever enjoyed that extent of patronage in this county. This lordship was inclosed by private agreement the beginning of the last century, and by a survey in 1773 contains 1830 acres, the whole of which belongs to the corporation for the benefit of the sons of the clergy, except about 10 acres, and the glebe lands of the rector, in right of his church, consisting of about 90 acres. It is bounded on the north by a brook which, after dividing it from Wedon, runs into the Nen in Heyford field; on the east by Heyford, and south-east by Bugbrook, both in Newbottle Grove hundred; on the south a brook which rises in Farthingstone and flows into the Nen in Horestone meadow in Nether Heyford separates it from Litchborough, and from Grimscote in Cold Higham parish and Towcester hundred; and on the west it is united to Farthingston.

About four-fifths of the lordship is in tillage. The soil is principally a light loam; in some parts of a gravelly substratum. Stowe wood was formerly more extensive, but consists now of about 120 acres.

Amongst the stone deposited a few years since for the repair of the Chester road through this parish, was one which attracted attention from its shape resembling a fish, in which state it found its way into the collection of Gilbert Flesher, esq. of Towcester, who obligingly presented it to me, and the superincumbent stone having been carefully removed, it disclosed the fish, which is faithfully represented the size of the original, in the accompanying engraving. From the bronzed lustre of the scales this fossil presents a very beautiful appearance. It is imbedded in blue lias, and on inquiry is ascertained to have been brought from the under beds of the oolite formation in Dryhurst pit in the parish of Bugbrook near the Banbury Lane wharf. It has been thought to resemble the one found near Lyme in Dorsetshire, and figured in the Geological Transactions, which Mr. De la Beche calls the "Dapedium politum," but the only point of resemblance is in the rectangular form of the scales; the general outline of the one found at Stowe is more elongated, and the situation of the fins and shape of the gills are totally different.



MANORIAL HISTORY. GAUNT FEE. The entire estate of one Tour, a dane, is said to have been given to Gilbert de Gaunt by William the conqueror[a]. The assertion however is negatived on a reference to domesday, but may be justly applied to Tonna, the proprietor of "Stowe" in the reign of Edward the confessor, who had also Kislingbury, part of Heyford, Easton near Stamford, and Empingham in Rutlandshire[b]; all of which, together with his other lands in Berkshire[c] and Lincolnshire[d], were in possession of Gilbert de Gaud or Gaunt at the time of the survey, when there were four hides in "Stowe." The arable land was ten caruccates, of which three were in demesne with seven servants, and the remaining seven in the occupation of fourteen villeins and six bordars. There was a mill worth 64d. yearly, and a wood seven quarentens or furlongs long, and three broad. The whole was formerly rated at 60s. yearly, but was then rated at 100s. yearly[b].

Gilbert de Gaunt accompanied his uncle William the conqueror in his expedition to England, and was rewarded with 113 manors in Lincolnshire, and 41 in other counties. Stowe was his principal estate in this county, but Folkingham in Lincolnshire was considered the head of his barony. Prior to the close of the 12th century the Gaunts relinquished the manor of Stowe to the family of Armenters, but the paramouncy descended, conformably with the subjoined pedigree, to the last Gilbert de Gaunt, who having no male issue constituted king Edward 1st heir to the barony and principal manors[e], and dying 26 Edw. 1 (1298), Roger de Kerdeston, aged 24, son of Margaret his eldest sister, Peter Manley, aged 18, son of Nichola his second sister, and Juliana his youngest sister, aged 40, were found to be his heirs[f].

GAUNT, BARON GAUNT, AND EARL OF LINCOLN.

From Dugdale's Baronage, Monasticon, and public records.

Arms. Barry of six Or and Azure, a bend Gules.

In 1 Edw. 2 (1307) the king granted Folkingham, &c. and the knight's fees of the barony of Gaunt to Henry de Bellomont or Beaumont, usually styled "Consanguineus Regis," ancestor of the viscounts Beaumont, who became extinct in the reign of Henry 7th, and of the families of that name seated in Leicestershire[g]. In the inquisition after his death, though sixty-three fees and a third, of the fees of Gaunt, are enumerated, none of the Northamptonshire fees are included[h]. In the inquisitions after the deaths of the Lisles[i] the manor of Stowe is found to be held of the Kerdestons; but in the subsequent ones for lord Berkeley[k] and the earl of Warwick[l], it is found to be held of lord Beaumont.

The Manor was early acquired by the family of Armenters, the probable descendants from Geoffrey, the mesne lord of Kislingbury under Gilbert de Gaunt at the domesday survey. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 John de Armenters was certified to hold four hides in Stowe of the fee of Gilbert de Gant[m]. He was succeeded by his brother Henry de Armenters, whose grandson of the same names appears to have incurred a forfeiture of his lands, which, to the amount of £20 yearly, were granted in 17 Joh. (1216) to William de Ferrers[n]. They were, however, speedily restored, for in 8 Hen. 3 (1224) Geoffrey de Armenters, son of Henry, rendered an account of £100 for seisin of the manor of "Stowe," which he had mortgaged to Roger de Nevill for sixteen years[o]; and in the following year a mandate issued to the barons of the exchequer, directing them, if he paid 50 marks (£33. 6s. 8d.) of the above fine, to remit the remaining 100 marks (£66. 13s. 4d.), and give him possession of the said manor which he had mortgaged to Roger de Nevill, who had demised it to Walter de Boveby and others, who had demised it to Fulk de Breant, and he to Ralph de Bray[p]. In 12 Hen. 3 (1228) Geoffrey paid £100 for the king's charter to free him and his heirs from being summoned on any jury of assize or recognizance[q]. He, and sir Gilbert de Preson, occur soon after in the Testa de Nevill as collectors of scutage for this county[r], and in the same record about 27 Hen. 3 (1242) he was certified to hold two fees in Stowe of the honor of Gaunt[s]. In another part of that record between 31 and 40 Hen. 3, the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented that there were four hides here of the fee of Gaunt; that John de Armenters was lord of the vill and had free warren; that it owed suit and service to the hundred court, and paid to the king 23s. yearly[t]. On a writ of dower brought by Alice his widow, then wife of Thomas Malecake, in 21 Edw. 1 (1292-3), the manor of Stowe Magna and Parva was (int. al.) assigned to her for life, with reversion to Alice de Lisle, who was declared to be cousin (half sister) and heir to John de Armenters[u].

Sir Gerard de Insula or Lisle, husband of Alice, was younger brother of sir Robert de Lisle of Harewood in Yorkshire*. Prior to 32 Edw. 1 (1304) his widow married Nicholas lord Segrave, in which year, on an inquisition of the knight's fees belonging to the late Gilbert de Gaunt, he was found to hold two fees in Stowe and Kislingbury, with the advowsons of both churches[x]. In the following year Nicholas attended the king in his expedition against Scotland, and a controversy arising between him and John lord Crumbwell he challenged his opponent to decide their cause in the court of the king of France. For this purpose he withdrew himself and his retainers from the army, hastened to Dover, and endeavouring to embark without the king's licence, was arrested, but effected his escape; and the barons of the cinque ports, for their negligence or treachery, were banished from Dover for four months, and sentenced to provide a ship for the king's use during the time at their own expence[y]. Orders were issued for securing him at Dover on his return from the continent; but he landed at another port, and a writ was directed to the sheriff of Northamptonshire to take with him four discreet knights, and in their presence summon him to appear before the parliament at Westminster to hear the royal pleasure. Accordingly, the sheriff, accompanied by sir Thomas Wale (of Eydon), sir Walter Fitz Robert de Daventre, sir Robert de Bray of Wolaston, and sir Ralph de Normanvill (of Catesby), repaired to Stowe and served the notice on him; in obedience to which he surrendered himself to the parliament on Sunday after the feast of St. Matthias. The charges preferred against him were, that, he being a liege man of the king and bound to him by homage and fealty, did, whilst with the king's army in Scotland, maliciously stir up strife and disunion with John de Crumbwell, and both parties forsaking the army to pursue their quarrel, exposed the king to danger in an enemy's country; and that having challenged Crumbwell to justify himself before the king of France, he left the realm contrary to his allegiance, in violation of the royal command and of his own promise. In presence of the king and parliament he pleaded guilty; and the parliament after three days deliberation adjudged him to have forfeited his life, but in consideration of his having been actuated by private revenge rather than by disloyalty, recommending him to mercy, the king remitted the judgment of life and members, and liberated him from the Tower, on his providing seven good and sufficient manucaptors to be surety for him, body for body, that he should render himself to prison when, and where commanded, and to answer to the king for the profits of his lands which he then held, or might hereafter obtain. The bail was committed to writing, and the record delivered to John de Bansted to be kept in the king's wardrobe; and the recognizances were not discharged till the first year of the succeeding reign[z]. Matthew of Westminster styles Segrave one of the most worthy knights of the realm, and gives a different version of the above affair, making Crumbwell the aggressor in accusing him of treason, and that on his trial divers of the nobility interceding for him, thirty of his peers, girt with swords, offered to be bound for him; but both these assertions are at variance with the record[a]. So complete was his restoration to favor, that in 1 Edw. 2 (1308) he was constituted governor of Northampton castle[b] and marshall of England[c]. In 8 Edw. 2 (1315) he had licence to settle Pesenhale in Suffolk on his daughter, but retained (int. al.) Stowe, worth in its issues £100 yearly[d]. He died in 14 Edw. 2 (1321), leaving Matilda wife of Edmund Bohun his daughter and heir to his paternal estates, but Stowe descended to

Sir Warine de Lisle, son of Alice Armenters by her first husband. The following year he joined the barons under the earl of Lancaster, and being taken prisoner at the battle of Boroughbridge in Yorkshire 16 Mar. 15 Edw. 2 (1321-2), was a few days after drawn and hanged at Pomfret[e]; and his estates escheating to the crown the manor of Stowe was in 19 Edw. 2 (1325) granted to Gilbert de Middleton, archdeacon of Northampton, for life, at an annual rent of £24. 12s. 7½d.[f]

Sir Gerard de Lisle, son and heir of sir Warine, was restored to his father's possessions in 1 Edw. 3 (1327)[h]; and in plea to a quo warranto in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), proved his right to free warren in his demesne lands of Stowe and

Kislingbury by grant of Hen. 3 to Geoffrey de Armenters[i], as already noticed under the latter place (p. 211). His son and successor Warine lord Lisle died in 6 Ric. 2 (1382), leaving Margaret wife of Thomas lord Berkeley daughter and heir to his extensive possessions in Northamptonshire, Buckinghamshire, Berkshire, Oxfordshire, Wiltshire, Devonshire, and Cornwall[k]. She was contracted to sir Thomas Berkeley in 41 Edw. 3 (1367), when only seven years of age, and it was agreed that she should continue with her father four years; but the increasing illness of Maurice lord Berkeley, father of Thomas, expedited the match, and they were married at lord Lisle's house at Wingrave in the November following[l]. Her brother Gerard was then living, but dying afterwards without issue, the representation of the family devolved on her, and her husband covenanted with her father that their heirs should always bear and use the arms of Lisle[m].

Elizabeth, their daughter and heiress, was the first wife of Richard Beauchamp earl of Warwick, by whom she had three daughters and coheiresses of her inheritance. On the division of their patrimony the Northamptonshire estates were assigned to the youngest sister

Elizabeth, wife of George Nevill lord Latimer of Corby. By her will dated 20 Sept. 1480 (20 Edw. 4) she thus disposes of Stowe: "and forasmuch as my daughter Dame Katherine (Dudley) hath no livelode nor other sustenance to find her meat, drink, and clothes, nor other necessaries during my life, I will succour, help, and find her as I may, and as I am naturally bound to do, and will that after my decease she have the lordships and manors of Stowe in Northamptonshire, the manor of Tetcote with Puke, Holywell and Lurkbere in the county of Devon, the lands and tenements in Bruggewart (Bridgwater) in the county of Somerset, and will and charge that in any wise and without delay, or as hastily and soon as it is goodly, that there be made a good and lawful estates thereof by my feoffees, so that I may see and know that she be surely purveyed for in my life, if may conveniently so soon be done, or else that such estate be made to my said daughter, or to her use immediately after my decease; also I bequeath my said daughter towards her finding, £100 of the lawful money of England; to the church and parishioners of Stow £100 in recompence of tithes and oblations forgotten and not paid," &c.[n]

Dame Katherine, widow of Oliver Dudley, died in 8 Hen. 7 (1493) seised (int. al.) of this manor, and advowson of nine churches appendant to it, which descended to her (nephew and) heir

Richard lord Latimer[o], grandson and heir of the testator. His son John lord Latimer was succeeded by a son of the same name, but whether by his first wife Dorothy Vere, or his second wife Catherine Parr, afterwards queen to Henry 8th, has been controverted by genealogists. Bridges[p], quoting Dugdale, attributes him to the latter, but the circumstance of his representatives being coparceners of Vere[q] is decisive proof of his being son of the former. The male line of this branch of the noble family of Nevill terminated with this John lord Latimer, who died in 19 Eliz. (1577), leaving four daughters and coheiresses, Katherine countess of Northumberland, Dorothy wife of sir Thomas Cecil (afterwards earl of Exeter), Lucy wife of sir William Cornwallis, and Elizabeth wife of sir John Danvers[r].

Between these coheirs a partition was made by act of parliament in 23 Eliz. (1581), and the manors and advowsons of Stowe and Kislingbury formed part of the purparty of the youngest daughter. Her eldest son sir Charles Danvers engaging in the insurrection of the earl of Essex, was attainted in parliament and beheaded in 43 Eliz. (1601)[s]. She survived till 1630, when her estates descended to her eldest surviving son sir Henry Danvers, who had been restored in blood as heir to his father, notwithstanding the attainder of his brother, by a special act of parliament in 3 Jac. (1605). By James 1st he was created baron Danvers of Dantzey, and by Charles 1st elevated to the earldom of Danby in Yorkshire, one of the manors which he inherited from the Latimers. The university of Oxford owe the Physic Garden to his munificence; and he purposed endowing a professorship, but death prevented the fulfilment of his intention. He died unmarried in January 1643-4, having by will in 1640 devised the greater part of his estates to his favorite sister lady Gargrave; but Stowe passed to his brother and heir

Sir John Danvers. The civil contentions of that eventful period did not elicit a more striking contrast of principle than these two brothers presented. The earl, grateful for the honors conferred by his sovereign, was a zealous loyalist; whilst sir John, though a gentleman of the privy chamber to the king, became a violent republican, and signed the death warrant of his royal master. Relying on the influence of party to enable him to recover the property of which he had been disinherited, he introduced his brother's will to the consideration of parliament in 1646[t]; and being appointed one of the council of state after the execution of the king, he again brought his case forward, and in May following (1649) the house voted the will to be void, and referred it to a committee, which resolved that "sir John Danvers was deprived of that estate by the will of the earl his brother, for his affection, and adhering to the parliament[t]." In June 1652 he conveyed (int. al.) the manor of Stowe to trustees for the payment of debts, &c. His son and heir apparent Henry Danvers, by deed poll 17 Nov. 1654 gave the surplus of the said estates unsold, and the balance in hand of the trustees, to his sister dame Anne Lee and her heirs. By will dated the day following he constituted her his sole executrix, and afterwards died unmarried in his father's life-time.

Sir John was saved an ignominious death as a regicide by dying prior to the restoration of Charles 2nd; but, though dead, his name was excepted out of the bill of indemnity (29 Aug. 1660), and by a subsequent act (12 July 1661) he was attainted and his property confiscated. Conceiving that Stowe and the other manors included in the conveyance of 1652 might be considered forfeited by this attainder, a grant was obtained of them from the crown, 13 Dec. 1661[u], to Henry lord Cornbury (afterwards earl of Clarendon) and others, who by deed the same day declared the said grant to be in trust to the uses of Henry Danvers's deed poll of Nov. 1654. dame Anne Lee, sister and devisee of Henry Danvers, by the name of Anne countess dowager of Rochester, settled (int. al.) a moiety of this manor on her daughter

Ann, in marriage with the honorable Thomas Wharton, son and heir apparent of Philip lord Wharton; and in 1680 Henry earl of Clarendon and the other trustees, in pursuance of a decree of chancery 15 Dec. 1679, arising out of several cross causes, conveyed and confirmed (int. al.) the moiety of this manor to the said Anne Wharton in fee. Eleanor, wife of James Bertie lord Norris (afterwards earl of Abingdon), the other daughter and coheiress of Anne countess dowager of Rochester by her first husband sir Henry Lee, bart. by a deed of partition in May 1681, to which the countess dowager and the trustees were parties, conveyed and released her share of the manor and advowson of Stowe, and certain manors and lands in the counties of Wilts, Somerset, and Middlesex, to her sister Anne Wharton in tail general, remainder to her appointment whether married or sole.

In March 1698-9 Thomas then lord Wharton, reciting the limitations to him by his wife in 1685 conveyed the manors of Stowe Magna, Stowe Parva, and Stowe Nine Churches, with the advowson of the same, for £14,000 to Edward Harley of Lincoln's Inn, esq.; by whom they were sold in 1716 to the executors of the late rev. Dr. Thomas Turner, president of Corpus Christi college, Oxford, for £15,500, part of the residue of his property bequeathed in trust for the purchase of lands for

The Park originated in a licence granted to Henry de Armenters in 6 Ric. 1 (1194), for which he paid 40 marks[x] (£26. 13s. 4d.). 'In the Earl of Danby's time there were two parks, contiguous to each other, well 'stored with deer, which upon the complaint of the tenants have been since converted to another use[y].'

A Manor House here may be presumed to be at least coeval with the park. Nicholas lord Segrave received the summons at his house at Stowe to appear before the king, in the reign of Edward 1st, and it is not improbable but all the succeeding lords occasionally resided here, down to the earl of Danby, who was the last resident proprietor. The mansion occupied by him stood on the north-east side of the church-yard, and has now degenerated into a respectable farm-house.

The Village is a short distance west of the great turnpike road to Chester, and about six miles from Daventry. When the manor was granted to Gilbert de Middleton for life in 19 Edw. 2 (1325), an inquisition was taken of the state of the vill, &c. and the jurors presented that in the time of Nicholas Segrave a fire burnt down a grange to the damage of £40, an ox-house 100s. a chamber 30s. and houses to the damage of £4; that five messuages of natives were destroyed, who in consequence fled from the place, to the damage of £10; that whilst in the king's hands a mill was set on fire by robbers, worth 6 marks (£4); and also a kitchen, dovecote, and houses lay waste, to the damage of 4 marks[z] (£2. 13s. 4d.)

Bridges says 'Church-Stowe is a village of 12 houses and Far-Stowe [or Little Stowe] of thirty[a].' By the census of 1801 Stowe contained 65 houses and 311 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 75 houses and 361 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 76 houses and 395 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £160 at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815 amounted to £3103. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £376. 10s. 11d. at 3s. 9d. in the £. The wake follows St. Michael.

THE ADVOWSON was never severed from the manor till Mar. 1717-8, when the executors of the rev. Dr. Turner, and the governors of the corporation of the sons of the clergy, sold it for £1055 to John Lloyd of London, esq. father of the rev. John Lloyd, D.D. rector of this parish and of Heyford; from whom it has passed with Heyford advowson to the rev. John Lloyd Crawley, the present patron *.

ST. ANDREW'S PRIORY TITHES. Geoffrey de Armenters gave two parts or two-thirds of the tithes of his demesne in Kislingbury and Stowe to the abbot and convent of St. Project, of Vermandois in Normandy, who, by agreement in 1178 (24-5 Hen. 2), farmed them to the priory of St. Andrew, Northampton, at the yearly rent of one mark [b], as already stated under the former place, where also the confirmatory grants, and further proceedings relative to these portions of tithes will be found †. After the dissolution of St. Andrew's priory, these impropriate tithes were (int. al.) granted in 32 Eliz. (1590) to John Wells and John Williams [c], who conveyed them in Nov. the following year to Thomas Newman, and he to Thomas and George Atkins. In 1630 Thomas Atkins, grandson of Thomas, sold them to Daniel Reading, gent. who in 1634 conveyed them to Henry earl of Danby, from which time they have accompanied the manor down to the corporation of the sons of the clergy [d].

By an arbitration award in 1802 between the corporation and the present rector, the demesne lands of Stowe are distinctly specified, and contain 684 acres, whereof two-thirds of the tithes are adjudged to the corporation, and the other third to the rector.

THE RECTORY is in the deanry of Daventry. In the taxations of 1254 * (38 Hen. 3), and of 1291 [f] (20 Edw. 1), it was valued at 18 marks (£12) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at £19. 12s. 7d. including 30s. for the glebe land, and deducting 20s. for pension to the priory of St. Andrew, 2s. for rent resolute to the lord for the glebe lands, and 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations [g]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage presentative worth £104. 10s. yearly, and that Mr. ..... was incumbent, presented by the lord protector in the name of Mr. Yates [h]. The pension of 20s. to the prior of St. Andrew remained in the crown till 1795, when it was purchased by the rector for £20. 16s. The rectory now consists of about 90 a. of glebe land, one-third of the tithes of the demesne lands, the whole tithes of the remainder of the lordship, and the right of cutting brake and furze on 12 a. of the heath. Besides which, the rector has 3 a. 2 r. 19 p. of land, and two several annuities of £55. 16s. 8d. and £5. 11s. 8d. allotted under the Nether Heyford inclosure act in 23 Geo. 2 (1749). The rectory house is a genteel residence south-west of the church, and commands a fine view of Northampton, and the country beyond to the borders of Bedfordshire.

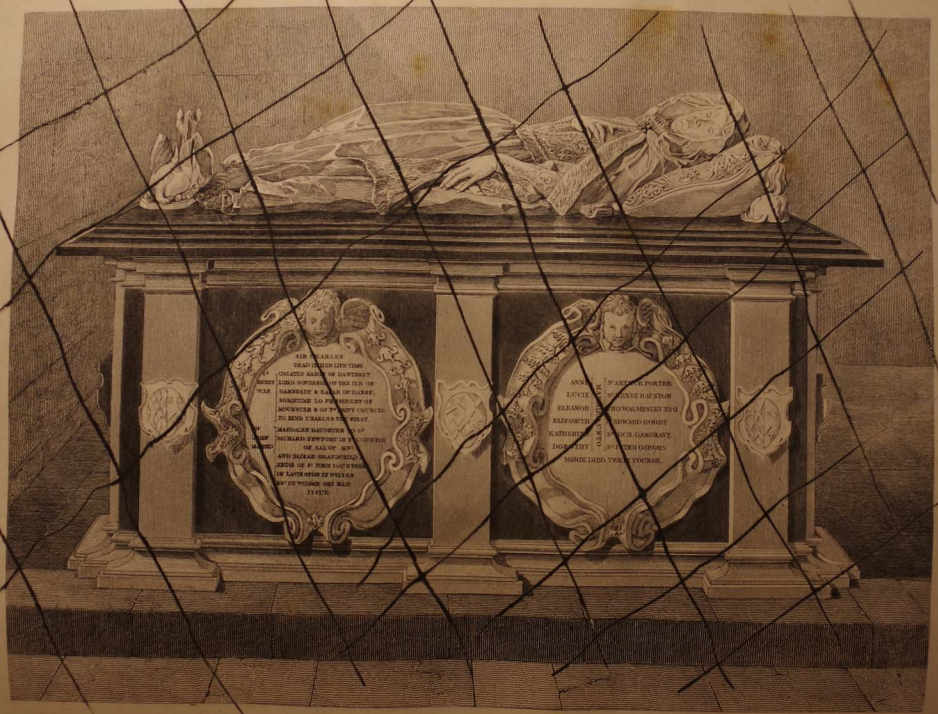
The Communion Plate consists of a chalice and flagon presented by the honorable Thomas Wharton, afterwards marquis of Wharton.

The Registers commence in 1560.



The Church, dedicated to St. Michael, stands on the brow of a steep declivity, and consists of a tower containing four bells, nave, north and south aisles, and chapel, south porch, and chancel. The windows are all of the same character, square headed with plain mullions, and were doubtless introduced in 1639, when the building was repaired "by the pious bounty" of the earl of Danby. The interior is paved and pewed. At the west end of the south aisle is a large plain font. The tower is 11 ft. 2 in. long, by 9 ft. 6 in. wide; the nave 38 ft. 8 in. by 13 ft. 8 in.; the north aisle 38 ft. 5 in. by 11 ft.; the south aisle 49 ft. 5 in. by 11 ft. 3 in.; the chancel 23 ft. 5 in. by 13 ft. 4 in.; the north chapel 21 ft. 10 in. by 11 ft. 3 in.; and the south chapel 23 ft. 8 in. by 11 ft. 8 in. The door entering the tower from the nave is a curious relic of the original Norman edifice: the arch is semicircular, but without mouldings, and springs from rude imposts, through which pass the terminations of the dripstone, which is simply a broad flat face quite detached from the architrave. The nave is divided from the north aisle by two pointed arches of a much later period than the pillars supporting them, which are low and circular, with slightly voluted capitals. The south aisle extends parallel to the west end of the tower, and is separated from the nave by similar arches to those in the north aisle, but resting on octangular pillars with capitals of plain mouldings. The eastern termination of the nave has three open arches communicating with the chancel and the two chapels. The middle arch seems the natural boundary between the chancel and the nave, but the part appropriated to the chancel begins at the east end of the third arch from the west, where is a neat wooden screen with circular columns supporting an entablature, in the centre of which the pulpit is now placed.

Monumental Inscriptions.

South Aisle. I. On the west side of the chancel door is a large mural monument with an inscribed black tablet between two fluted pilasters. In the centre of a scroll pediment: Arms—G. two flaunches Erm. on a chief Az. three suns in meridian O. Daye, impaling Erm. a lion rampant S.

In a Vault under the Chancel, are deposited the Remains of John Daye Esqr
Citizen of London, and, for many Years
Comptroller of the General Foreign Post Office.
He was no less distinguished in his publick
Character, by his zealous Loyalty to the King constant Attention to the Interests of the community, and unblemished Fidelity in the several departments in which he was engaged for the Service of both than he was in his private capacity, for that tenderness of Affection, Benevolence of Heart, and Ingenuity of Manners, which endeared him to all with whom he was more nearly connected

NEAR THIS PLACE ARE DEPOSITED THE REMAINS OF MARY, WIFE OF CHARLES CRAWLEY, RECTOR OF THIS PARISH, BY WHOM THIS MONUMENT IS MOST AFFECTIONATELY DEDICATED TO HER MEMORY;
SHE WAS BORN JAN. 2. A D. 1759, AND DIED OCT. 31. A D. 1819.

Her ways were ways of Pleasantness, and all her paths were Peace. Prov. iii. 17.
The heart of her husband did safely trust in her, she did him good & not evil all the days of her life.
She stretched out her hand to the Poor;—yea she reached out her hands to the needy.—
She shall rejoice in time to come.—She opened her mouth with wisdom, & in her tongue was the law of kindness.—She looked well to the ways of her household, & ate not the bread of idleness.—
Her Children arise up and call her blessed; her Husband also, and he praiseth her.—
Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all.—Prov. xxxi.
The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away;—Blessed be the name of the Lord.—Job. i. 21.

On two collateral square tablets against the west wall:

Childhood, and youth in single state
Attended are by death's grim fate,
Both prayr's and tears, for mee did plead,
But could not for mee intercede:
From grief and pain I am set free,
Parents, pray weep no more for mee,
All nature's debts I've paid, my score,
That wound, O death, I fear no more.

For it is appointed for all once to dye,
Death ta'ne me Away in my virginity,
No arte, no skill for mee would sarve,
No cordial helps could mee preserve
At last, weak nature did decay
My beauties flower past away;
Friends do lament my unripe fall,
Earlie or late death takes us all.

Chancel. V. Under the eastern arch on the south side is an altar monument for Elizabeth, fourth daughter and coheiress of John lord Latimer, and successively wife of sir John Danvers, and sir Edmund Carey. An entry in the parish register states that "the following article is literally transcribed from a book "in the possession of Mr. Vertue, containing memo-"randums of several considerable works done by Mr. "Nicholas Stone, sen. (master mason to king James 1st "and king Charles the 1st, and statuary or stone carver), "in several parts of this kingdom, which are set down "with his own hand. 'The 16th of March 1617 I un-"dertoke to mak a tombe for my Lady, mother to my
"'Lord D'avers which was all of whit marbell and touch,
"'and I set it up at Stow of the nine chirches in North-
"'ampton some 2 year after, one allter tomb for the wich
"'I had £220[n].'" Her interment is thus recorded:
"The Hon[ble] the lady Elizabeth Carie was buried the
"24th of June Caroli Sexto-Christi 1630[n]." Consequently this memorial to her memory was erected ten years prior to her decease.

Without subscribing to the extravagant encomium of Pennant, who styles it "the most elegant tomb which "this or any other kingdom can boast of," it may fairly be pronounced, both in point of design and execution, one of the finest pieces of sculpture of the age. The figure is of white marble, recumbent on a mantle lined with ermine and fastened round the neck with rich jewels. The attitude is expressive of tranquil sleep, the right hand placed on her breast, the left falling carelessly by her side; and the tout ensemble would have exhibited a model of grace and elegance had not the sculptor, in conformity to the fashion of the times, introduced the stiff embroidered stomacher. The head, enveloped in a loose hood, reposes on a flowered cushion, behind which are two griffins supporting a shield, quarterly, 1. (G.) on a saltire (Ar.) an annulet (S.), Nevill lord Latimer; 2. (O.) fretty (G.) on a canton (Ar.) a ship (S.), Nevill ancient; 3. (G.) a fess between six cross-crosslets (O.), Beauchamp; 4. Quarterly (G. & O.) in the first quarter a mullet (Ar.), Vere. At the feet is a griffin sejant holding arms of Nevill.

The tomb is of white marble, except the slab and pannels on the sides, which are of touch or black marble. Each end and side are decorated with three shields. At the east end: I. (G.) a chevron between three mullets of six points (O.), Danvers, impaling Nevill. II. (S.) a bend lozengy (Ar.), Baynton, impaling Danvers. III. Danvers. At the west end, IV. VI. Opposite to the last, on the north side of the altar, is a large and costly mural cenotaph of variegated marble by Stayner, in commemoration of Dr. Turner. On the dexter side is a full sized statue of the doctor standing on a terrestrial globe in his master of arts gown, holding in his left hand a book in which is written ΤΗΝ ΠΡΑΚΑΤΑΘΗΚΗΝΦΥΛΑΞΟΝ. On the sinister side is Religion personified by a female, standing on a celestial globe contemplating a cross inscribed INRI elevated in her left hand, and holding in her right, a small temple inscribed ΘΡΗΣΚΕΙΑ ΚΑΤΘΑΡΑ ΚΑΙ ΑΜΙΑΝΤΟΣ ΠΑΡΑ ΤΩ ΘΕΩ. Between the figures, in the centre, is a large canopied mantle flanked by two fluted corinthian pilasters surmounted by a circular pediment, in which is a radiated eye in clouds, emblematic of the omniscience of the Supreme Being. Below the figures in the centre of the base are two shields; on the first, a lion rampant between three crosses flory within a circle circumscribed CLERUS ANGLICANUS HERES MEUS ESTO; on the second, per fess, in chief a cross patée, in base, an open book, within a circle circumscribed FILII CLERICORUM ECCLESIÆQUE ANGLICANÆ.

On the bell of the base:

This monument sacred to the church of England and to the memory of Dr Thomas Turner President of Corpus Christi College in Oxford, was erected in this place, on occasion of the Mannor and Estate of Stow being purchased by the Exe-cutors of that pious publick benefactor: to be settled as his will directs, on the Governours of the charity for relief of poor widows and children of Clergymen, in the year of our Lord MDCCXV.

There is a large folio engraving of this monument by J. Sturt, but I suspect it to be from the original design, which was subsequently altered, as the principal figures are transposed and some of the ornaments omitted.

North Chapel. VII. On a plain altar-tomb with the arms of Lisle on the front, is exhibited the effigy of a cross-legged knight in a hooded hauberk and chausses of rings set edgewise, over which appear chaussons or skirts. On the forehead is a broad plain fillet; the upper part of the sleeves is loose, and the fingers not divided. The surcoat is without sleeves, and is confined round the waist with a studded belt or girdle buckled and the end pendant. His heater shield is suspended by a studded guige or belt crossing over the right shoulder, and strapped to the left arm. Each spur is fastened by a single leather fastened on the instep.

1. On a marble slab:

St. Alnoth, the bailiff of St. Werburgh at Wedon, led an eremetical life in the neighbourhood after her decease, till murdered by robbers. His relics were preserved with veneration in the church of Stowe; and his festival is placed on the 27th of February in Wilson's first edition of the English Martyrology; but in the second, on the 25th of November.

Benefactions (p. 240). Arnold's charity now produces £20 per ann.
Lady Matthews' bequest being a rent-charge on leasehold property, ceased a few years since on the expiration and non-renewal of the lease.
The corporation of the sons of the clergy pay £1 per ann. for what is termed church land.

WEDON

Has not varied in orthography since domesday, except dropping the final e, but its derivation is nevertheless involved in obscurity. Morton, presuming this place to have been the residence of the Mercian king Peada, or Weada as the name was sometimes spelt by confounding the saxon letters p and p, observes, "that probably "Wedon is a contraction of Weadaton, i. e. Weada's Town[a];" but if this be admitted, it may be asked, what then is the etymology of Wedon in Greens Norton hundred, in distinction to which, this village, from its situation on the Watling street road, has been called Wedon on the street, and from the early lords of the manor, Wedon Bec? The lordship was inclosed by act of parliament 16 Geo. 3 (1776), and contains about 1800 acres; of which Miss Bletsoe of Harrold in Bedfordshire (the lessee of the provost and fellows of Eton college, lords of the manor,) has about 290 acres; T. R. Thornton of Brockhall, esq. the lay impropriator, about 250 acres; the vicar, in right of his church, about 70 acres; Mr. Thomas Kirby of More End in Potters Pury about 170 acres; and the Board of Ordnance about 150 acres. It is bounded on the north by the Chester road, which divides it from Dodford, east and south-east by a rivulet which separates it from Flore and Heyford in Newbottle Grove hundred; south by Stowe, from which it is divided by Stowe brook; south-west by Farthingston; and west by the Nen and the Fawsley water, which separates it from Everdon. There are several hills distinguished by names: one called White-well hill, which has much the appearance of a long barrow, 'affords a view of twenty spire steeples at once, and in a clear day extends the prospect to Higham Ferrers[b].' The soil of the lower ground is principally clay, and of the hills, a light loam, with some red land. The lordship is about equally divided between arable and pasture. The following scarce plants have been found here. Veronica spicata, spiked Speedwell. Campanula Rapunculus, Rampion. Hypochæris maculata, spotted Cats-ear. Wedon wood, mentioned by Bridges, was grubbed up a few years since. In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) the abbot of Bec was adjudged to repair Wedon bridge on the Watling street road[c], by which is doubtless meant the bridge at the end of Church Wedon leading towards the Ordnance buildings. The two small water-mills noticed in domesday, stood on the rivulet called the Fawsley water; one, near Upper Wedon, and the other in the mill-butts under the Royal Depot. They were taken down about the time of the inclosure.

The Grand Junction canal passes through this lordship, and is carried across the valley to Stowe hill by a raised embankment of earth about half a mile long and 30 feet high, being nearly parallel with the bells in the church steeple.

MANORIAL HISTORY. GRENTEMAISNIL FEE * and MORETON FEE †. HONOR OF LEICESTER ‡. Prior to the Norman conquest the principal estate in "Wedone" was valued at 40s. yearly, but at the domesday survey was rated at 50s. yearly, and was one of the demesne manors of Hugh de Grentemaisnil, who obtained it by exchange for Watford, but with whom the arrangement was effected is not stated. It contained three hides and a half. The arable land was eight carucates and a half; one and a half in demesne; half a carucate in the hands of two villeins with a priest and three bordars; four and a half in the occupation of three soldiers with six villeins and three bordars; and the remaining two, waste or unaccounted for. There were seventeen acres of meadow, twelve acres of wood, and a mill worth 40d. yearly[d].

Besides the above, there was a smaller estate in "Wedone" valued only at 40d. yearly in the saxon era, but raised to 10s. yearly at the domesday survey, when it was held by Alan (or Allelme) under the earl of Moreton. It consisted of half a hide. The arable land was one carucate and a half; of which one villein and four bordars had one carucate; and there were six acres of meadow, two acres of underwood, and a mill worth 40d. yearly[e].

In that portion of the Testa de Nevill which may be placed between 31 and 40 Hen. 3, the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented that "Wedon" was of the honor of Leicester, and that the abbot of Bec was lord of the town, and had view of frank pledge and free warren there[f].

Henry earl of Leicester, in plea to a quo warranto 3 Edw. 3 (1329), claimed certain privileges in places within the honor of Leicester, as detailed under DODFORD §, and (int. al.) view of frank pledge twice a year in "Wedon," the profits of which were enjoyed by the abbot of Bec in Normandy, or his locum tenens the prior of Wedon, who was bound to entertain the earl's bailiff whenever he came to hold the court[g].

MANOR OR CELL OF BEC ABBEY. Roger de Thebovill, anterior to the reign of Henry 2nd, who (int. al.) confirmed the grant, gave a moiety of the manor of "Wedone" to the abbey of Bec in Normandy[h], founded in 1034 by Harlewin, son of Angor and Hillors, descended from the Danes. He placed it first at Burneville in the diocese of Lisieux, but subsequently removed it to a more eligible situation in the valley of Bec, and became its first abbot[i]. Before the close of the reign of Hen. 2 the whole of "Wedon" was acquired by the abbot and monks of Bec; for in the hydarium of that reign it was certified that they had four hides there, including both domesday estates, of the fee of Leicester[k]. In 5 Joh. (1203) they were charged with 100 marks (£66. 13s. 4d.)

for a fine which they made with the justiciar of England, for having 48 acres of new assarts by the king's perch, and 2 acres of old assarts in the manor of "Wedon;" and for a charter from the king, exempting their tenants at Wedon from attendance at the swainmote or forest court for ever; which sum the justiciar declared had been received by Hugh de Nevill, who ought therefore to answer for it[l]. These privileges were confirmed in 11 Hen. 3 (1226-7)[m], with the addition in 37 Hen. 3 (1252-3) of a grant of free warren[n]. By the hundred roll 4 Edw. 1 (1276) it appears that the abbot of Bec had gallows, view of frank pledge, and warren here[o]. In 30 Edw. 1 (1302) John de Brochull of Wedon was found by jury to be a villein of the abbot of Bec Herlewin, and taxable in every way at pleasure; and being rebellious, William Grafton, seneschall of the abbot, took him and set him in the stocks[p].

In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) the abbot of Bec Harlewyn, in plea to a quo warranto, substantiated his claims in Wedon to sac and soc, tol and theam, infangtheof, and the chattels of all his men who fled for any crime, or were outlawed or adjudged to suffer death, or lose a member, either in the king's courts or any other, in the same manner as the king would have them; the amerciaments of all his men who were amerced for any trangressions in the courts of king's bench, the exchequer, or the common pleas, or before the justices in eyre, of assize, or gaol delivery, or before any other justices, sheriffs, or bailiffs whatsoever; acquittance for himself and his men from suit and service to the county and hundred courts; from pleas of murder and of wapentake; and from scutage, geld, danegeld, and hidage; from repairs of castles, bridges, vivaries, ditches, and trenches; from sherdwyt, hengwyt, and flemeneswyt; from warpenny and averpenny; from bloodwyt and fletwyt; from hundred penny and thedyng penny (tithing penny); from all toll, passage, pontage, lastage, and stallage; and all secular service, servile works, and exactions; together with the privilege of judgment in cases of murder, homicide, and maiming, and blood, water, and fire, and all other liberties and customs, wayfs and strays, and free warren in all his demesne lands there[q].

In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[r] and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[s] the temporalities of the priory of Okeburn (the principal cell to the abbey of Bec) at Wedon were rated in lands, rents, meadow, pannage, and profits of court, at £16. 2s. 8d. and in fruits of the earth and of animals at £2. 10s. 10d.; total £18. 13. 6d.

On the final suppression of the alien priories by parliament in 2 Hen. 5 (1414) Wedon, with the other possessions of the abbey of Bec, escheated to the crown[t]. In 16 Hen. 6 (1437-8) the manor of Wedon, parcel of the late alien priory of Okeburn, was granted for life to

Humphrey earl of Stafford[u], afterwards duke of Buckingham*. He was slain at the battle of Northampton in 38 Hen. 6 (1460), when this manor came into the possession of

The provost and fellows of Eton college near Windsor, to whom the reversion had been granted in 22 Hen. 6 (1443) in augmentation of their endowment[x].

The whole lordship is copyhold, except the impropriate rectory and vicarage estates, and the land purchased for the Board of Ordnance in 1803, the subsequent purchases being copyhold. The demesne lands of the manor are demised by the provost and fellows of Eton on beneficial leases renewable every seven years.

The Customs are regulated by a "copy of all the customs of the copyhold called ancient demesne used in the "towns of Over and Nether Weedonbec, which customs were renewed and written in the 23rd year of king Henry "the seventh, after the custom book made and written in the 3rd year of king Henry the second." The first article is, "the king's grace findeth a steward to keep the law day in Wedon bec twice in the year, which law day "hath been always holden by the king's steward of his duchy of Lancaster, the Thursday after Hock Tuesday, "and the Thursday next after St. Martin's day, and the steward is not to take any fees of the lord or his officers, "but man's meat and horse meat for that day there being, and all the issues and profits of the same court to "grow to the lord's advantage;" which is in exact conformity to the earl of Lancaster's plea to the quo warranto in 3 Edw. 3.

The tenure is copyhold of inheritance, heriotable, and fine uncertain. Besides the customs incident to copyholds in general, the following may be considered, at least in a certain degree, special. 2. The lord is bound to keep for the tenants a steward to keep his court from three weeks to three weeks, and at the same court to hold pleas of land by writ of right, and the title to be discussed and determined, as well by verdict given by homage sworn upon issue, as by matter in law. 11. If any tenant by custom die seised of any land held after custom of the manor, his next heir shall come or be brought to the court, and there shall be admitted, "be it man or woman, and of what "age soever they be." 14. If any tenant die seised of customary lands, his widow shall be endowed, on petition to the court, in one half of the same lands for life, "and over that, if her husband was once seised during the "espousals," i. e. of all other lands of which he had been seised at any time during their marriage. 17. If any custom holders be jointly seised of customary lands, none of them shall pay an heriot, except he that last dies, and all the remnant to be discharged; and also of feoffees, the last seised shall pay an heriot. 22. If any customary tenant die seised, and his heir be admitted in court, he shall pay for his relief as much as his [quit] rent is by the year. 26. Every customary tenant who dies seised of a messuage and yard land shall pay an heriot, but if he have more messuages and yard lands he shall pay but one heriot. 27. If any customary tenant have issue three or four sons, and one go out of the country, and the father dies, and all the other brothers die, then, if the heir come not after proclamation shall be made at the three succeeding courts, the land shall be seised into the lord's hands, but if the heir come afterwards he shall be admitted, but he shall not be restored to the rents or profits which have been received for the lord during his absence. 33. Every customary tenant seised in fee simple or

The spot where the criminals were executed when the privilege of infangtheof was exercised, is pointed out by the name of Gallows-furlong, near Dodford mill.

A court leet is held occasionally, and a court baron annually.

A Town or Court house was built by subscription in 1637, and the first meeting held at it in 1639; but it has long since been disused for public purposes, and is now occupied by the poor.

PRIORY. Ethelred king of Mercia converted the royal palace of his brother and predecessor Wulphere at Wedon into a monastery, under the superintendance of his niece Werburgh[y]. She had in her infancy vowed to devote her life to religion, but was prevented from professing herself by Wulphere her father. Relieved from this obstacle by his death, she and her mother took the veil in the abbey of Ely, but at the earnest entreaty of her uncle Ethelred she returned into Mercia, and from the fame of her piety was selected to preside over the four nunneries of Trentham and Hanbury in Staffordshire, Repton in Derbyshire, and Wedon in Northamptonshire. She spent much of her time at Wedon, and it was here that the miracle recorded of her in Cresy's church history was performed. The corn in the neighbourhood having suffered much from the inroads of wild geese, she remonstrated with, and forbade them ever to re-visit her demesnes; to which command they paid implicit obedience, and Bridges says, 'the vulgar superstition now observes that no Wild Geese are ever seen to settle and graze in 'Wedon Field[z].' She died at Trentham towards the close of the seventh century on the 3rd of February, on which day her festival was celebrated. She was buried at Hanbury, from whence her body was translated in 875 to the abbey of Chester, which was dedicated to her as its patron saint, and where, in the cathedral, formerly the abbey church, her shrine now serves for the base of the episcopal throne. St. Werburghe's nunnery at Wedon was standing when the venerable Bede wrote his history, but was destroyed by the Danes in the ninth century. So late as the time of Leland there was "a faire chapel dedicate to St. Werburge," a little from the south side of the church yard[a]; and Bridges states that 'by digging in the upper part of the ground called the Ash-yards to the 'south of the church, the foundations of old buildings have at some times been discovered, and large wall stones 'taken up. These, in all probability, were the ruins of St. Werburge's monastery, or it may be of king Wulphere's 'palace[z].'

CELL TO BEC ABBEY. 'Sir William Dugdale, and after him Dr. Tanner, the late learned Bishop of St. Asaph, 'have made Wedon a cell to the convent of Bec. Upon what authority they have done so,' adds Bridges, 'I cannot 'learn; for I no where find that there was any monastery here since the conquest, or that the monks of Bec had in 'England any other cell, except the priory of Okeburn in Wiltshire[b].' It has been seen, however, that in the earl of Lancaster's plea to a quo warranto in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), express mention is made of "the prior of Wedon;" but he was undoubtedly subordinate to the priory of Okeburn, in the same way as the prior of Everdon was to that of Creting.

ROYAL MILITARY DEPOT. In 1803 an act of parliament passed for the purchase of about 53 acres in Wedon, to be vested in trustees "for erecting Buildings thereon for the service of His Majesty's Ordnance;" and by vote of parliament £100,000 was annually appropriated to the works till completed. Subsequent purchases have increased the estate to about 150 acres. The accompanying engraving exhibits a general view of the "Royal "Military Depot," as it is usually styled, rising from the valley, and stretching above the village of Lower Wedon. The residences of the governor and principal officers form a handsome centre, with two detached wings; and on the summit of the hill, contiguous to the Chester road, are barracks for 500 men, where a regiment of the line is generally quartered for the protection of the place. At the bottom of the lawn, south of the governor's house, are eight store-houses and four magazines, capable of stowing 200,000 stand of small arms, with a proportion of field ordnance and ammunition; and a cut having been made between the two rows of buildings into the Grand Junction canal, which forms the eastern boundary of the government estate, a ready communication is effected for transporting the stores to every part of the kingdom. An hospital for 40 patients, and workshops for the necessary artificers, are attached to the establishment.

THE VILLAGE. "Wedon," says Leland, "is a praty thorough fare, sette on a playne ground, and much "celebrated by cariars; bycause it stondeth hard by the famose Way there communely caullid of the People "Watheling Strete. And upon this the tounclet is caullid Wedon on the Streate. The tounlet of itself is very meane "and hath no Market. And the Paroche Chirch is as meane[a]." It is divided into Church Wedon or Lower Wedon, and a few furlongs to the west, Upper Wedon. Part of Lower Wedon lies on the great Chester road, at the point of Junction with the turnpike road from Northampton to Daventry, and distant from the latter place four miles. The number of houses in the time of Bridges in Church Wedon was 'eighty-eight[z]', and in Upper Wedon 'thirty-nine[z].' By the census of 1801, Wedon contained 148 houses and 750 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 212 houses and 976 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 247 houses and 1178 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £118. 15s. 6d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £3521. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £1274, at 4s. in the £. The wake follows the feast of St. Peter and St. Paul, 29th June.

The Advowson appears to have passed with the manor to the abbot and convent of Bec; and the impropriate rectory and advowson were granted by their procurator the prior of Okeburn to Thomas bishop of Durham, John, third son of king Henry 4th (afterwards duke of Bedford), and others, anterior to 1411 (13 Hen. 4), in which year they presented to the vicarage[c]. John duke of Bedford, by deed 3 Dec. 9 Hen. 5 (1421), gave the (late) priory of Okeburn, with its possessions, to the dean and canons of the royal college of St. George in Windsor castle[d]. In this donation, the impropriation and advowson of Wedon seem to have been included, and continued with the dean and canons till 19 Edw. 4 (1479), when by licence from the king and the bishop of Lincoln they exchanged them for the impropriation and advowson of North Marston in Buckinghamshire with the prior and convent of Dunstaple[e]. After the dissolution, the impropriate rectory and advowson of the vicarage remained in the crown till 11 Jac. (1613), when they were granted to Francis Morris and Francis Philipps[f], who alienated them two years afterwards to Nathaniel Rich, by whom they were sold in 14 Jac. (1616) to Thomas Thornton, esq. of Newnham[g]; and from him they have descended with the family estates to Thomas Reeve Thornton, esq. of Brockhall, the present impropriator and patron.

The Rectory is rated in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[h] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[i] at 15 marks (£10) per ann.; and at the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) was let to farm by the prior of Dunstaple for £12 per ann.[k] The impropriate estate now consists of 248 a. 3 r. 3 p. awarded by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the great tithes.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Daventry. This church was early appropriated to the abbey of Bec, and Hugh Wells, bishop of Lincoln from 1209 to 1234, endowed a vicarage with the altarage or small tithes, a manse, the first mortuary, and the tithes of corn of twelve virgates or yard-lands; the vicar to pay synodals, and the monks of Bec all other dues[l]. This vicarage is omitted in the printed copy of the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1), but in the copy in the British Museum is rated at 60s. per ann.[m] In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it is valued at £11. 3s. per ann. deducting 3s. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[n]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a vicarage worth £30 per ann. in the patronage of John Thornton, esq. and that Edward Mackenas was incumbent[o]. It is a discharged living, being returned under the act 5 Anne (1707) to be of the clear yearly value of £19. 0s. 10d. In 1739 it received an augmentation from queen Anne's bounty, by lot, of £200, which has been since expended in the purchase of 8 acres of land in Hardingston.

The commissioners of inclosure allotted 72 a. 3 r. 33 p. in lieu of the glebe and vicarial tithes; and the vicar receives a certain endowment or yearly sum of £3. 6s. 8d. from the impropriator. The vicarage-house was an indifferent building in the village, but has been recently re-built in a field south-east of the church.

Vicars. William de Wedon, by the abbot of Bec, 1224.

Richard, by brother or friar Richard de Flaunull, procurator of the abbot of Bec in England, between 1258 and 1276.

Thomas Bunte, priest, 24 June 1276.

John, by brother Theobald, procurator-general of the abbot and convent of Bec. He was appointed to officiate for the vicar of Dodford between 1272 and 1290.

Richard, called Huberd, priest, 20 June 1299.

Edmund de Harleston, priest, by brother Richard de Beausevall, prior of Okebourn and the king's procurator for all things belonging to the said priory, 21 Sept. 1347.

William de Melton, priest, 15 Dec. 1347. Probably the same person who was vicar of Pightesley 1306 to 1310, and rector of Castor 1314 to 1316.

Walter Bateman, priest, 28 Apr. 1349.

John Bugge of Becford, by brother Peter de St. Stephen prior of Okebourn, 6 Oct. 1361.

John Nondieu, by the king, the temporalities of Okebourn priory being then in his hands, 19 Feb. 1387.

John Battesford, 22 July 1390. He exchanged for the vicarage of Massworth in Buckinghamshire with John Bugge of Retteford, priest, 4 Oct. 1391.

Richard Chamberleyn, chaplain, 10 Feb. 1400. He was vicar of St. Martin's, Stamford, 1386 to 1396.

Henry Emmotte, by Thomas (Langley) bishop of Durham, and John (Plantagenet) duke of Bedford, son of the king (Hen. 4), constable of England, and custos of the eastern marshes towards Scotland, by grant from the prior of Okebourn 24 Dec. 1411.

John Rynelowe, priest, by the same patrons, 17 Nov. 1420.

John Westbury, by the custos and canons of the king's college or free chapel in the castle of Windsor.

William Sugge, chaplain, 10 June 1422.

John Graunger, priest, by the dean and canons of Windsor, 28 Nov. 1423.

Roger Baker, priest, 17 Sept. 1427.

William Andrew, 24 Apr. 1439, previously noticed under Dodford.

Richard Bate, priest, 5 May 1448, whose other preferments will be found under Great Billing.

Philip Longe, chaplain, 22 Aug. 1450.

John Kendale, 1451. He exchanged for the vicarage of St. Michael's in Northampton with William Harreyes or Harrys, priest, 22 Mar. 1452-3.

Sir Henry Russell, priest, 3 Feb. 1460-1.

Sir Richard Stowe, priest, 10 Dec. 1463; already noticed under Fawsley.

John Warde, between 1471 and 1479. He was vicar of Higham Ferrars 1469 to 1482.

John Hampton, A.M. 7 Nov. 1479.

Roger Worsley, by the prior and convent of Dunstaple, between 1481 and 1491.

Edmund Wingate, chaplain, 29 July 1491.

already noticed under Harpole. He occurs in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535, and was probably succeeded by

John Ringrose, vicar of Pitsford, who was instituted 14 May 1562, on the presentation of the queen. On his resignation

Thomas Deane was presented by the queen, and inst. 22 Mar. 1586-7; but in the following year exchanged for the rectory of Lamport with William Prondlove, who was inst. 30 June 1587, and again 26 May 1596, doubtless after vacating for some preferment.

Leonard Hutton, D.D. vicar of Flore, where a brief memoir of him has been introduced, was inst. 24 Sept. 1602, on the presentation of the queen by lapse; and on his cession

Robert Smith of Sidney Suss. coll. Camb. A.M. was presented by the king, and inst. 27 Mar. 1605. He was expelled by the parliamentary committee in 1647, but continued to reside here, and in the entry of his burial 6 June 1651 is stated to have been vicar 42 years and upwards [p].

Edward Mackenas was incumbent in 1655 [q].

George Martin occurs in 1658 [p]. He lost an arm in the royal cause under sir George Booth, but nevertheless refused to conform to the act of uniformity in 1662, and was ejected from his living. He afterwards settled with a small congregation at Stony Stratford in Buckinghamshire [r]. On his non-subscription

John Ward, A.M. was presented by John Thornton, esq. and inst. 14 Mar. 1662-3. A cause was promoted against him by the churchwardens in 1674 before the bishop of Peterborough, who deprived him of his benefice "for divers crimes committed, and duties omitted by him [s];" and

John Matthew was inst. 26 July 1676, on the presentation of the same patron. On his resignation

William Barton, A.M. vicar of Naseby, was presented by the same patron, and inst. 8 Sept. 1684. In 1688 he vacated both his vicarages for the rectory of Brockhall; and

John Rogers was instituted on the presentation of the same patron, and was buried here 7 May 1736 [s]; but had resigned this vicarage the year before to

John Frost, B. Med. who was presented by Thomas Thornton of Brockhall, esq. and inst. 15 Feb. 1734-5. He was buried here 8 Apr. 1736 [p], and

William Tristram, of Pemb. coll. Oxf. A. M. was inst. 22 Sept. following, on the presentation of the same patron. He was buried here 22 Oct. 1747 [p], and

Samuel Jemson of Christ coll. Camb. A.B. 1745, A.M. 1750, was presented by the same patron, and inst. 3 Feb. 1747-8. He died 10 Sep. 1780, and

Euseby Isham of Queen's coll. Oxf. A.M. rector of Lamport, was inst. 31 Jan. 1781, on the presentation of the same patron. His resignation introduced

Robert Thornton of Clare hall, Camb. A.M. vicar of Cold Ashby, who was presented by Robert Andrew, esq. and the other executors of the late Thomas Lee Thornton, esq. and inst. 4 Mar. 1790. He died 15 Oct. 1823, and was buried at Brockhall. His successor

John Higgs Hunt of Trinity coll. Camb. A.M. was presented by Thomas Reeve Thornton, esq. and inst. 20 Mar. 1823. He has published "Tasso's Jerusalem "delivered, an heroic Poem, with Notes and occasional "Illustrations." 2 vols. 8vo. 1818.

The Registers commence in 1587. In 1625 are entries of several persons who died of "the peste" and were buried in the fields, a circumstance which tends to elucidate the recent discovery of some skeletons in lowering the Chester road beyond the Depot.

The Church, dedicated to St. Peter, stands at the eastern extremity of the village, under the canal embankment, and consists of a tower containing five bells, nave, south aisle and porch, and chancel. The north door of the nave, and the belfry windows, have plain Norman arches; the south aisle has two lancet windows, but most of the windows, and the principal part of the building, are of a much later period, though in very indifferent repair. The tower is 10 ft. 4 in. long, by 14 ft. 6 in. wide; the nave 48 ft. 6 in. long, by 18 ft. 10 in. wide; the aisle 61 ft. long, by 18 ft. 8 in. wide; and the chancel 34 ft. 4 in. long, by 18 ft. 11 in. wide. The interior is partly new pewed. At the west end of the aisle is a mutilated old font. The arch between the tower and nave is pointed, but the original Norman imposts run through the soffit. The nave is divided from the aisle by five pointed arches on octangular pillars with plain capitals, considerably declining from the perpendicular. The chancel is open to the nave; the dividing arch having been removed. In the south wall of the chancel is a piscina. The east window exhibits slight traces of painted glass *.

A CHANTRY was founded here, but when, or by whom, is not known. At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), its revenues were rated at 106s. 8d. per ann. and Thomas Crokey was officiating chaplain [a].

THE INDEPENDENTS have long had a society in this place, which not improbably originated in the non-conformity of the ejected vicar. A congregation was jointly formed here, and at Flore, prior to 1668, in which year the first trust deed is dated; and service was conducted at each village on alternate Sundays till 1792, when both places of worship being out of repair, it was agreed to erect a new meeting house at Wedon for the united congregation; and a smaller one has been recently built at Flore for a Sunday evening lecture. The old meeting house at Wedon is still standing at the back of the new one, and is now used as a Sunday school.

His next removal was to Hinckley in Leicestershire, about which time he embraced Unitarianism, and successively presided over congregations at Kidderminster, Norwich, and Hull; at which last place he died suddenly in June 1813, in his 59th year. He published, A vindication of the Unitarians; or remarks on "A vindication of the Methodists, by John Hill," in four letters to the author. 1806. 8vo. BENEFACTIONS (vide p. 240). Arnold's charity * now produces £18 per ann. which is applied in putting out poor boys apprentices, and at the expiration of their time the sum of £2 is allowed to such of them as have conducted themselves satisfactorily.

BILLING'S SCHOOL. Nathaniel Billing of London, vintner, a native of this village, by will 5 Feb. 1712-13, devised his real and personal estate to be converted by his executors into money after the decease of his wife Eleanor, in trust to erect or purchase a school house in Wedon Bec for teaching, gratis, twenty poor children, born in Wedon, to "read, write, and cast accompts, and singing psalms by notes, and instructing them in the catechism "of the church of England;" and the remainder of the money to be expended in purchasing land in or near the said parish; which land and school to be conveyed to the master and wardens of the Vintners' Company in London, in trust for the schoolmaster for the time being, who should keep the school in good repair, and provide for each boy "a kersey coat, or a coarse cloth of whitish colour and red buttons and button holes, a flat cap with "a tuff on the top, and white ribbon round each of the said caps, and a pair of shoes," every two years, to be under his keeping, whereby the children might appear decent at church on Sundays and holidays; and that once in two years the boys sufficiently instructed should be discharged, taking their cloaths with them, and the vacancies filled up by the master, with the advice of the minister and churchwardens. He further appointed, that in case the residue of his estate should amount to £1000, then each of the boys should have waistcoats and breeches given them of the same sort with their coats; and that the master should have the advantage of such additional scholars as he might procure; which master should be elected by the minister and churchwardens of Wedon Beck, and be approved of and continued as master of the school, as the lords of the said manor should from time to time think fit. But in case the school should not be kept up, and the children not carefully instructed in the church of England as then established, then he devised the said land and premises unto the poor belonging to the parish of Wedon Bec, and the poor belonging to the Vintners' Company in London, not settled pensioners, in moieties to be distributed yearly during Christmas. In pursuance of the will, a dwelling house for the master, and a school, were erected, and an estate purchased in Everdon, consisting of about 40 acres, which is now let for £100 per ann. It does not appear what was the amount of the sum raised by the sale of the testator's property, but the additional clothing has never been given to the boys.

Rogers's benefaction consists of £76 Old South Sea Annuities.
Bliss's charity is placed out at interest, and secured by bond.

Poor's Land. The commissioners of inclosure allotted about 3 acres in trust for the poor, in lieu of a right of cutting furze, which is now let for £13 per ann.

Church Land. The commissioners also allotted about 3 acres in trust for the church, which is now let for £10. 2s. and applied by the churchwardens for the repairs of the church.

The Roman Watling street is generally supposed to quit the great Chester road at the lane, or street road, as it is called, in Lower Wedon; but the Roman road diverged from the present turnpike road at the bottom of the hill from Stowe, passed along the Hill-land lane, by Ash-yards near the church, over the Nen, leaving the Ordnance buildings to the right, by Leesborough way towards Mr. Hewitt's, formerly the Globe inn, and thence into the lane above alluded to, which from this point is identified with the Watling street, and leaves this county at Dove bridge.

This village was adopted by Talbot, Camden, Morton, and other antiquaries, for the site of the Roman station Benaventa or Isannavaria, as has been incidentally stated under Borough hill (p. 410); to which place, for the reasons there adduced, this station is appropriated.

Wedon is not, however, shorn of all its antiquarian honors by this decision; for Camden, Speed, and Leland, with the concurrent sanction of every succeeding writer, have placed here a palace of Wulphere king of the Mercians, who, as well as his immediate predecessor Peada, will hereafter come more prominently under notice in connection with Peterborough abbey. Wulphere was elevated to the throne in 658 by the leaders of a revolt against Oswy of Northumberland, who had given Mercia to Peada, and on his assassination resumed it again. Wulphere by his warlike spirit rendered himself independent of the Northumbrians, sustained a fluctuating, but eventually successful conflict with Cenwalch of Wessex, and at length obtained a considerable portion of Sussex and Essex. He died in 675, and is said by some to have been buried at Peterborough, and by others at Lichfield.

WELTON

Is written in domesday "Welintone," "Waletone," and "Weletone;" but in records immediately subsequent, the orthography of this village and of Whilton became exactly similar, and may therefore be referred to the same derivation *. The lordship was inclosed by act of parliament 27 Geo. 2 (1754), and contains about 1750 acres; of which about 815 acres (including about 25 acres of leasehold under the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford,) belong to John Plomer Clarke, esq. lord of the manor; about 65 acres to the vicar, in right of his church; about 180 acres to Mr. Thomas Howes of Norton; about 145 acres to Mr. John Winterton; about 120 acres to Mrs. Loveday of Wilscote, Warwickshire, and Mr. Cole of Napton in the same county; and about 100 acres to the devisees of the late Joseph Ashley, esq. of Ashby Ledgers. The boundaries are formed on the north and north-east by the Roman Watling street road, which divides it from Watford, and from Murcote in the parish of Long Buckby, both in Guilsborough hundred; south-east by Thorp grounds in Norton; south by the Grand Junction canal, which separates it from Daventry; west by Braunston; and north-west by Ashby Ledgers. The soil varies, but is principally a strong loam. The following scarce plants have been found here. Sambucus Ebulus, dwarf Elder. Apium graveolens, Small age†. Helleborus virides, green-flowered Hellebore†. Malva moschata, musk Mallow†. Bordering on Ashby lordship is a large quarry of inferior oolite, in which occur calcareous spar, fossil wood, numerous large pectens, and various terebratulæ, plicated and non-plicated. In excavating the Grand Junction canal through this parish, were found a variety of septaria, small portions of galena with coal, highly inflammable bituminous wood, various ammonites, modiola plicata, spirifer ambiguous, and remarkably small and beautiful pentacrinal vertebræ. There is an extensive and well-known brick-kiln adjoining the turnpike road to Lutterworth, where bricks of a very superior quality are made; and a small one at the opposite extremity of the parish near Watford.

MANORIAL HISTORY. GRENTEMAISNIL FEE*. HONOR OF LEICESTER†. The saxon freehold of Baldwin in "Welintone," worth 20s. yearly, was doubled in value at domesday, when it was held by Osbern under Hugh de Grentemaisnil, and consisted of three hides wanting one virgate. The arable land was seven carucates, of which two were in demesne, with three servants, and five villeins had four carucates, leaving one waste or unaccounted for. There was a mill worth 12d. yearly, and eight acres of meadow[s].

MANOR. Baldwin was saxon lord, also of lands in Staverton[a] and Thorp[a], all of which were in the domesday survey held under Hugh Grentemaisnil by Osbern[a], and in the hydarium of Hen. 2 under the honor of Leicester by William de Novo Foro. In the latter record the fee of the earl of Leicester in "Welton" was certified to contain two hides and a half and two small virgates: the mesne lord was simply designated William[b], but Bridges furnished him with the surname de Welton, and confounding this village with WHILTON, introduced the pedigree here of the local family of Welton or Whelton[c]. He subsequently, however, in his account of the latter parish, candidly rectified his error, and acknowledged 'that Welton in Fawsley hundred belonged to Willliam de Novo 'Mercato[d],' a name synonimous with Novo Foro, and which literally translated is New-market, but was commonly abbreviated to Newmarch.

The descendants of this William are not known, and in the Testa de Nevill about 27 Hen. 3 (1242), Robert Mallore was found to hold half a fee in "Weletone" of the fees of Montfort of the honor of Leicester[e]; and Robert All, the heir of William All, and Simon de Trop, the fifth part of a fee in "Welleton," Staverton, and Thorp, of the same honor[s]. The jurors of Fawsley hundred, between 31 and 40 Hen. 3, presented that the earl of Leicester had three hides in "Welleton," and that Robert Mallory was lord of the town under the earl[f].

I have vainly endeavoured to trace a connected pedigree of this family, and can only furnish detached notices of individuals; but that it was a junior branch of the house of Kirkby Mallory in Leicestershire is evident, from the circumstance of sir John Mallory holding Welton, Thorp, and Staverton of sir Ankitell de Mallory as of his manor of Kirkby Mallory[g]; and there is little doubt but that the Richard Mallory who had lands here of the Moreton fee in the reign of Hen. 2, was their common progenitor. In 9 Edw. 2 (1315-6) John Mallory was lord of "Welton[h];" in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) sir John Malore of Welton occurs as witness to a release of Whilton mill[i]; and in 9 Hen. 5 (1421) another sir John Malory of Welton attested a feoffment of Little Brington manor[k]. Ellen daughter and heiress of sir John Mallory and Jane his wife, carried the manor of Welton in marriage to

Sir John Bernard of Iselham in Cambridgeshire‡, and died 10 July, 8 Edw. 4 (1468), leaving an only daughter and heiress Margaret, the first wife of

Thomas Peyton of Iselham, esq. whose grandson Thomas Peyton, esq. sold the manor of Welton in 2 Ric. 3 (1484-5) to

William Catesby of ASHBY LEDGERS, esquire of the king's body, to whom a fine was levied of it the same year by William Mauleverer, esq. and Joan his wife, mother of the said Thomas Peyton, and widow of Thomas Peyton, esq. son and heir of Thomas Peyton, esq. and Margaret his wife, daughter and heiress of Ellen daughter and heiress of John Mallory[l]. His ancestors must have previously possessed an estate here, for John de Catesby his grandfather had a grant of free warren (int. al.) in his demesne lands of Welton in 13 Hen. 4 (1411-2)[m]. Sir William Catesby, for he was afterwards knighted, was beheaded at Leicester after the battle of Bosworth, and being attainted in parliament 1 Hen. 7 (1485)[n] the manor of Welton, alias Catesby or Peyton's manor, Gauge's manor in Wold, Revell's manor in Buckby, Catesby's manor in Watford, Watford's manor in Great Creton, moiety of "Creke" manor, and lands in Little Creton, &c. all parcel of his late possessions, were granted in 4 Hen. 7 (1489) to

Sir David Owen in tail male[o]. According to Bridges[p] this grant was made to William Owen, father of sir David; but the latter was certainly the grantee; and the former is altogether omitted by many genealogists, who state sir David to be the natural son of Owen Tudor, grandfather of king Henry 7th[q]. From him this manor descended to his grandson Henry Owen, esq. son of John, of whom it was purchased in 14 Eliz. (1572) by alienating the estate; for in Mar. 17 Eliz. (1574-5) sir Richard sold one "moiety of Welton manor, called "Catesby's, otherwise Owen's manor, and Peyton's manor," to John Newport, sen. of Welton, gent. and John Newport his son and heir[1]; and by deed 17 June following (1575) granted to his younger son Edward Knightley an annuity of £60 out of the manor of Fawsley, on condition that within half a year after attaining his majority he should convey the other moiety to the above purchasers or their heirs; and accordingly in Feb. 35 Eliz. (1592-3) the said Edward Knightley executed a conveyance to John Newport the grandfather, John Newport the father, and John Newport the son, of Welton, gents.; in which, however, it is erroneously described as two manors, "the one called Catesby's or Owen's manor, and the other "called Peyton's manor[2]," an error which has been perpetuated ever since. In 1647 John Newport, gent. grandson of the last named, sold "Welton manor, otherwise called Catesby's, alias Painton's, alias Owen's manor," with the impropriate rectory, parcel of the late king Henry the eighth's (or Frideswide's) college, to

MORETON FEE *. HONOR OF LEICESTER †. Ulmar had a small freehold at "Waleton" in the time of Edward the confessor, which on the domesday survey he held under the earl of Moreton. It consisted only of half a virgate, wanting five acres. The arable land was half a carucate, and there was one acre of meadow. The whole was in the hands of one bordar [t].

On the confiscation of the Moreton fee, this small estate was included in the portion obtained by Robert Bossu, earl of Leicester, who founded the abbey there, and endowed it (int. al.) with 40s. yearly rent out of "Welton," as appears by the confirmatory charter of his son and successor Robert [u] Blanchmains. This grant is also recited in a confirmatory charter of Hen. 2 [x]; in a second confirmation charter of the same king it is stated that Richard Mallorie and his heirs were charged with 40s. yearly to the abbey for the land of "Welton" and "Torp [y];" and in the hydarium of the same reign Richard Mallore is certified to hold two small virgates in "Welton [z]," doubtless of the gift of the earl subject to the above payment. His descendants were soon after enfeoffed of the Grentemaisnil fee, when these lands merged in, or formed part of, their manor.

JUDITH FEE[a]. HONOR OF BERKHAMPSTED†. In the time of Edward the confessor, Leuric had a freehold in "Weleton" and "Torp," which at the domesday survey was held by him under the countess Judith, but was within the soke or jurisdiction of the king. It contained half a hide and a virgate, wanting the fifth part of half a hide. The arable land was a carucate, half of which was in demesne with two bordars; and the whole was worth 8s. yearly[a].

Leuric was a powerful thane, and one of the most extensive Saxon proprietors in the county; but the Norman conqueror expelled him from all his possessions, assigning his lands in Weston (Favell), Carlton, (Cold) Higham, Harleston, Brockhole, and Muscote, Kislingbury, Flore, Clasthorp, Silveston, Dodford, and Farthingston, to the earl of Moreton[b]; Staverton, to Hugh de Grentemaisnil[c]; Morton (Pinkeney), Wappenham, "Brime," Astwell, and Siresham, to Ghilo, brother of Ansculf[d], ancestor of the family of Pinkeney; Welford, (Cold) Ashby, Eltingdon, and Sulby, to Geoffrey de Wirce[e]; Maidwell and Draughton to Maino Brito[f], ancestor of the family of Wolverton; and Welton and Thorp to the countess Judith, under whom, as above stated, the Saxon lord became the tenant[a], and which scanty pittance constituted all that remained to him of his lost inheritance.

DAVENTRY PRIORY MANOR. It may be presumed that Leuric left no descendants, for Hugh Vicecomes or De Leycester, who died in the reign of Hen. 1, was enfeoffed of this estate, probably by Matilda St. Liz, daughter of the countess Judith, to whom he was seneschall or principal steward‡; and in the hydarium of Hen. 2 there was certified to be five virgates and a half in "Welton" of the fee of Berkhampsted, held by the monks of Daventry of the [heir of] Hugh Vicecomes[g]. In the Testa de Nevill between 31 and 40 Hen. 3, the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented that the prior of Daventry had two virgates in Daventry of the gift of the king[h]. In another part of the same record, Hugh Russell accounted for the scutage of half a fee in Thorp and Welton of the fee or barony of Ralph Chenduit† of the honor of Berkhampsted; and in the hundred roll 4 Edw. 1, the jurors presented that the prior of Daventry had 10s. yearly rent out of five virgates and a half in the same places, parcel of the honor of Berkhampsted[i].

At the inquisition of monasteries surrendered to cardinal Wolsey in 16 Hen. 8 (1524-5) the manor of "Welton," with court baron, late belonging to Daventry priory, was valued at £7. 10s. 2d. per ann.[k]; and, together with the rectory and advowson of the vicarage, passed successively with the other possessions of the priory, in 17 Hen. 8 (1525-6) to the cardinal's college, Oxford[l]; and in 24 Hen. 8[m] (1532) to king Henry the eighth's or St. Frideswide's college, Oxford. On the dissolution of the latter establishment in 37 Hen. 8 (1545), they reverted to the crown, and in 5 and 6 Phil. and Mar. (1558), the priory manor, by the name of Welton manor, parcel of the late king's college, Oxford, was granted to

Gregory Isham, esq.[n] of BRAUNSTON, of whom it was purchased by

John Newport, gent. who in 17 Eliz.[o] (1575), the same year in which he purchased the Peyton or Catesby manor, sold the manor of Welton, called "Frydswith's manor," to

Thomas Andrew, esq. of CHARWELTON, by whom it was probably alienated in severalties, as it does not appear in the inquisition after his death, and no subsequent notice of it occurs as a manorial estate.

LEICESTER ABBEY at its dissolution had 43s. annual rent out of a water mill at Welton, which was sold by the crown in 1559 to John Franke[p].

THE MANOR HOUSE, now called Churchill house, is at the entrance of the villnge from Daventry, and in the occupation of Miss Clarke.

WELTON PLACE, the seat of John Plomer Clarke, esq. stands on the paternal estate of the Clarkes, and was built prior to the purchase of the manor. It is a commodious residence, pleasantly situated on a gentle elevation west of the village. In the dining room is a large painting by Wotton, of a match at Newmarket between Charles duke of Grafton, and George earl of Halifax, in which portraits of those noblemen are introduced, giving instructions to their jockies. In the drawing room is a small collection of pictures, including Claude Lorraine, Carlo Maratta, Wouvermans, Griffier, and Canaletto, amongst the old, and Gainsborough, Ibbotson, and Anderson, amongst the modern masters.

Mr. Ashley's seat, noticed by Bridges, is east of the church, and may have been originally the manor house of the priory or college manor.

THE VILLAGE is seated on a gradual and rather steep declivity fronting Daventry, from which it is distant about two miles. In the time of Bridges there were 'eighty-four houses, including six called the Town-houses, which were set apart as dwellings for the poor[q].' By the census of 1801 this parish contained 101 houses and 485 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 95 houses and 509 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 123 houses and 567 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £151. 18s. 8d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2935. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £547. 9s. 2d. at .. in the £. The wake is kept on the Sunday following St. Martin.

ADVOWSON. Welton was originally a member of the parish of Daventry. Richard bishop of St. Asaph, whilst on his episcopal visitation of Northamptonshire, as proxy for Alexander bishop of Lincoln, established by his ordinance a parochial chapel at Welton, at the request of the lords of the vill, the priest officiating there, and the inhabitants; providing nevertheless that the dead should be carried to the mother church of Daventry for burial, except when the monks of Daventry consented that they might be interred at Welton. But before the bishop consecrated the chapel, William the priest acknowledged that he held, and was willing to hold, of the monks of Daventry as his superior lords, the chapel being a member of their church. In the presence of the bishop and of the spectators, he then delivered the key of the chapel into the hands of the prior of the convent, and received it again from the bishop and the chapter of the convent[r]. This document is not dated, but it must have been anterior to 1147 (12 Steph.), in which year bishop Alexander died; and in the year of the decease of king Henry (2nd) 1189, William de Novo Mercato restored to the convent the chapel of "Welton," which his father and himself had unjustly withheld from the church of Daventry[s]; Fulk Trussel his nephew subsequently ratifying it, and testifying that he saw and heard his uncle make the grant in the chapter of the priory[t]. Simon Malore, by deed s. d. granted to the prior and convent six acres of land, and all right he might have to the chapel of Welton[s]; and in 31 Hen. 3 (1247) Robert Malore, by fine, assured to the prior and convent the advowson of the chapel of Welton[r].

The resumption of the Daventry priory estate by king Henry the eighth on the dissolution of St. Frideswide's college in 1545, has been already stated under the priory manor. The rectory was demised in 21 Eliz. (1578-9) for 21 years to John Newport, gent.[u] whose family subsequently obtained it in fee; from which time it accompanied the Peyton manor till sold by Samuel Miller Adams, esq. in 1804; and by mesne conveyance now principally belongs to Mr. Thomas Howes of Norton. John Plomer Clarke, esq. is, however, proprietor of the chancel, subject to its repair; his father having purchased it in 1804 from S. M. Adams, esq.

The Advowson of the vicarage is still in the crown, never having been granted out since the dissolution of St. Frideswide's college.

The Rectory does not occur in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3) and 1291 (20 Edw. 1). It was included in the surrender of Daventry priory, and in the survey between the dissolution of cardinal Wolsey's college, and the foundation of king Henry the eighth's or St. Frideswide's college, it was certified under "Welton," that "the "lady Lucy holdeth at will the Tythe corne of the seid Towne & paieth yerlie for the same xii li;" and "sir David "Owen & his Tennts in Wolton pay yeirlie for the Tythe Hay for the land sometyme Peton's land xiv s.[x]" At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), Welton rectory was impropriate to St. Frideswide or king Henry the eighth's college, and let to farm at £14 per ann.[y] The commissioners of inclosure allotted 196 a. 0 r. 19 p. in lieu of the impropriate tithes of corn and grain. The tithes of hay and grass are stated in the inclosure act to belong to the respective proprietors of the lands in the parish.

Ware Priory Tithes. By deed s. d. the prior of Ware in Hertfordshire, procurator general to the abbot of St. Ebrulf in Normandy, alienated to the prior and convent of Daventry the tithes in Welton and Thorp granted by the earl of Leicester to Ware priory, at an annual rent of a mark of silver, payable every Michaelmas at Marston St. Lawrence[r]. This reserved payment occurs in the taxations of 1254[z] and 1291[a], as an annual pension of one mark to the prior of Ware out of the chapel of Welton.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Daventry. In the copy of the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) in the British Museum—for it is not in the printed copy—the vicarage of the chapel of Welton is rated at 5 marks (£3. 6s. 8d.) per ann.[b] This endowment was superseded in 1301 by bishop Dalderby's ordination of the vicarage of Daventry, which decrees that the vicar shall have a chaplain associated with him to minister daily in the chapel of Welton, who shall have land to the value of three marks (£2) assigned to him in a particular place, and his demands or dues and missal pence and mortuaries not exceeding six pence, and those beyond that sum shall be divided between the monks of Daventry and the chaplain; and the chaplain shall have the confessions in the said vill[c]. Another ordination of the vicarage by bishop Burghersh in 1321 recites verbatim and confirms the preceding one, except the special provision for the chaplain of Welton, which is wholly omitted and consequently annulled[d]. There must, however, have been a re-endowment; for at the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) the vicarage of Welton was valued at £7 per ann. clear of reprisals[y]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a vicarage worth £26 per ann. in the patronage of his highness the lord protector; that "noe man" supplied the cure; and that being two miles distant from any other church, they humbly conceived it convenient to have an augmentation[e]. It is discharged from first fruits and tenths, being returned under the act 5 Anne (1707) to be only of the clear yearly value of £23. 2s. 8d. It was augmented by queen Anne's bounty in 1754, with £200 to meet donations of the same sum, which have been vested in the purchase of 18 acres of land at Hillmorton in Warwickshire.

In the return of livings under £150 per ann. in 1809, the bishop of Peterborough certified it to be of the clear yearly value of £130. 6s. 8d. arising from glebe, augmentation, and surplice fees. The commissioners of inclosure allotted to the vicar 60 a. 1 r. 5 p. in lieu of the vicarial tithes; and 3 a. 3 r. 14 p. free from land tax, in compensation for an annual payment of £3. 16s. 8d. out of certain lands.

The old vicarage house being in a dilapidated state, and in a confined situation, bounded on three sides by Mr. Clarke's garden wall, an exchange was made with the late Mr. Clarke about twenty years since, for the present vicarage house, which has a good garden and close adjoining.

Simon Adams of Univ. coll. Oxf. A.M. descended from the family of Adams of Morton Pinkeney, and father of colonel Clarke Adams of East Haddon, was presented by the king, and inst. 24 May 1721, on the death of the last incumbent. He was buried here Oct. 1731[i], and Thomas Duncomb, A.M. held the living by sequestration several years[i].

John Wainwright, of Clare hall, Camb. A.M. was presented by the king, and inst. 2 Nov. 1748, on the resignation—as erroneously stated—of Simon Adams. He was buried here 21 May 1778[i], and

John Rowton, of Eman. coll. Camb. A.M. was inst. 27 June following, on the presentation of the king. He was also rector of Little Ashby in Leicestershire, and died 4 Oct. 1782[k], when

James Preedy, A.B. was presented by the king, and inst. 4 Jan. 1783; on whose cession

George Laughton, of Wadham coll. Oxf. D.D. was presented by the king, and inst. 2 Nov. 1785. He was also vicar of Chippenham near Newmarket, where he died in June 1800[l], and Richard Davies, of Jesus coll. Oxf. B.D. was inst. 20 July following, on the presentation of the king. He is also vicar of St. Nicholas, Leicester, and master of the free grammar school there.

The Communion Plate consists of a silver paten and chalice, and a silver flagon and plate for the alms, the gift of the present Mr. and Mrs. Clarke.

The Registers commence in 1578, but are defective and confused in many parts from 1653 to the close of the seventeenth century.

The Church, dedicated to St. Martin, stands on rising ground near the centre of the village, and consists of a tower containing four bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. The whole building, except perhaps the tower, is in the perpendicular style of the fifteenth century. Most of the windows have rectilinear tracery doubled in the heads; but the tracery of some of them has been destroyed. The interior is paved and pewed, and has a west gallery across the nave and aisles. The tower is 12 ft. 7 in. long, by 8 ft. 2 in. wide; the nave and aisles 49 ft. 4 in. long, the nave 15 ft. 9 in. the north aisle 11 ft. 4 in. and the south aisle 13 ft. 2 in. wide; and the chancel 31 ft. long, by 15 ft. 9 in. wide. The nave is uniformly divided from each aisle by four arches on lofty octangular pillars with capitals of plain mouldings. A closed arch entering the tower is evidently of an earlier period, as it is not in the centre of the nave, but joins the division from the north aisle. The font is old, but uninteresting. The chancel is entered under an open arch. In the south wall is a piscina, and in the north wall two square lockers.

She died Decr 12th 1704.

BENEFACTIONS (p. 240). The charity land consists of 58 acres at the north-west point of the lordship, now let for £126 per ann. a small close let for £2 per ann. and a garden for £3 per ann.; and the rents are applied to the relief of the aged and impotent poor, and the repairs of the church, the causeways, bridges, &c. A house and malt kiln given by Mr. John Clarke in the seventeenth century have been converted into tenements, and used for poor-houses.

THE NATIONAL SCHOOL is supported by voluntary subscriptions, and kept in a very commodious room built by the present Mr. Clarke, and given by him, together with a comfortable residence adjoining, for the master.

ANTIQUITIES. In the year 1778, in a close called Stone-pit field, belonging to John Clarke, esq. was discovered "a rudely formed sepulchre"—probably a cist—about two feet below the surface, within which were deposited two skeletons of small stature, having two brass fibulæ, and a number of beads lying near the throat and wrists. Between the skeletons was an urn, and a spear now mouldered to fragments; with four or five small Roman coins in indifferent preservation, one of which appears to be of Constantine the great, and another of Flavia Fausta his empress.

The urn is of a dark colour, nearly black, and the beads are of amber, glass, and jet, varying in size, shape, and colour. They are now in possession of J. P. Clarke, esq. and the subjoined representation of them is half the size of the originals.

A few years since a small silver Roman coin of Barbia Orbiana, last wife of the emperor Alexander Severus, having the figure of Concord on the reverse, was dug up in the church yard.

Wardon Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Fawsley hundred; east by Norton hundred; south by Sutton hundred; west by Oxfordshire; and north-west by Warwickshire.

The parishes and hamlets forming this hundred are:

Aston le Walls (including Appletree and West Wardon); Boddington (including Upper and Lower Boddington); Byfield (including Trafford); Edgcote; Eydon; Greetworth; Sulgrave; Wardon, Chipping (including Stoneton); and Woodford (including Farndon and Hinton).

The Saxon certificate of the hundreds in this county between the death of Edward the confessor and the Norman conquest, states that there is in "Wepdunes" hundred, 100 hides, as in the days of king Edward; whereof 18 hides save one yard-land are rated (or taxed); 40 hides are inland (or demesne); and 41 hides and one yard-land are waste[a]. In the domesday survey it occurs under the names of "Waredon," "Waradone," and "Wardune."

The fee of this hundred has been immemorially appendant to the manor or barony of Wardon, whence it derives its name; and the hundred courts are still kept there.

[b] Not distributed since 1747.—On a house in the possession of Ursula Chambers, value from £2 to £3. 10s. per annum, who refuses payment. She is in good circumstances. There are two old men in the parish who received this donation. [c] To purchase land. [d] The bequest was £3 per annum, which was paid for many years, till some of the late possessors of the land thought proper to deduct 2s. per £. for tax. The person who held it promises the payment if he should ever have it in his power. [e] On the inclosure. [f] Once in 8 years. [g] Now in land. [h] The principal is lost by insolvency, though the interest is paid. [i] Now in land. [k] £4. out of these sums is lost.

N. B. There are no charities in Edgcott or Eydon.

ASTON.

In domesday "Estone," and in later records "Aston," and "Aston-le-Walls," may have been denominated from its relative situation to the east of the other possessions of the original saxon proprietor; and, as suggested by Bridges[a], 'It hath probably its name of Aston in the Wall, from having formerly stood upon the Vallum or earthern 'rampire, which like a high wall reached a considerable length from the north-end of Cheping Wardon town, and 'points directly upon it. [b]The remainder of it which extends to Aston, Mr. Morton thinks hath been leveled to 'make the ground of more use in husbandry.' The parish includes the hamlet of Appletre, or Apeltree, and part of the grange or reputed manor of West Wardon. Aston, properly so called, was inclosed by deed of agreement in 10 Anne (1711-2), between William Plowden, esq. the lord and patron, and the rev. John Wilson, rector; and contains about 940 acres, the whole of which is the property of Edmund Plowden, esq. lord of the manor, except 142 acres assigned to the rector, in right of his church. The parish is bounded on the north by Boddington; east by Byfield; south by Chipping Wardon; and west by Claydon and Cropedy in Oxfordshire. It is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture. The former is principally a sandy soil, the latter, a strong loam. In the garden of the parsonage is a remarkably productive apple tree called a Wilding. The perpendicular height of the tree is 34 ft. 5 in., the length of the trunk to the branches 6 ft., the circumference at 3 ft. from the ground 7 ft., and the diameter of the spread of the four branches forming the top bearing fruit 47 ft. 11 in. In 1814, 40 bushels of fruit were sold from this tree, besides reserving sufficient for the use of the family, consisting of six individuals, and for making a hogshead of cider; in 1817, when there was a general failure of the apple crop, this tree bore about 9 bushels; and in 1822, after the sale of 40 bushels, there remained sufficient for the use of the family, and for making 18 gallons of cider.

MANORIAL HISTORY. MANDEVILLE FEE *. At the domesday survey Malger held of Geoffrey de Mandeville two hides in "Estone." The arable land was ten carucates; in demesne were three carucates and five servants; and fifteen villeins and five bordars had six carucates, leaving one waste, or unaccounted for. There were twelve acres of meadow. The whole had been rated at 100s. yearly, but was then raised to £6[c]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 William de Bologna was certified to hold seven hides in Aston and Appeltre of the fee of Mandeville[d]. It is rather remarkable that neither of these places are mentioned throughout the Testa de Nevill; but the Suttons were found to hold Aston by the service of one fee, in the inquisitions post mortem of Humphry (Bohun) earl of Hereford in 46 Edw. 3 (1372)[e], Alianora duchess of Glocester in 1 Hen. 4 (1400)[f], and Edmund earl of Stafford in 4 Hen. 4 (1403)[g], who were the successive representatives of the Mandevilles.

MANOR. John Jocelyn in 12 Hen. 3 (1228), levied a fine of the manor of "Estone" to Robert de Lexinton or Lessinton in fee[h], whose elder brother and heir John de Lexinton died in 41 Hen. 3 (1256), seised (int. al.) of "Aston" and "Apeltree," worth £20 yearly, and lands and rents in Byfield[i]. He was succeeded by his brother Henry (Lexinton) bishop of Lincoln, then 60 years of age[k], who survived him but a year, when the family estates descended to his two nephews and coheirs[k]

William de Sutton, son of his sister Alice, and Richard de Markham, son of his sister Cecilia, between whom partition was made in 43 Hen. 3 (1259)[l]. Sir Robert de Sutton, son of this William, died in 1 Edw. 1 (1279), seised (int. al.) of the manors of Aston and Byfield[m]. His son sir Richard de Sutton in 1 Edw. 2 (1307) was permitted to settle the manor and advowson of Warsop in Nottinghamshire, held of the king in capite, on his son John de Sutton and Margery Someri his wife, it appearing that there would remain to him the manor of Aston, worth £20 yearly, and other lands, sufficient to guarantee his ability to render, when required, the feudal service due to the crown[n].

In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) sir John de Cherleton, grantee for life from his son-in-law sir John de Sutton lord Sutton de Dudley, in plea to a writ of quo warranto, claimed view of frank pledge, with assize of bread and beer, and wayf in the manor of Aston by prescription; but the jury presenting that he amerced offenders against the assize 20d., instead of the legal punishment by pillory and tumbril, the view of frank pledge was seized into the king's hands, but restored again for a fine of half a mark[o]. On his decease, this manor reverted to sir John de Sutton, son of the grantor, in whose posterity, barons Sutton de Dudley, it may be traced in the subjoined pedigree. In 22 Hen. 8 (1530-1) sir Edward Sutton lord Dudley, and his brother sir John Sutton, otherwise called sir John Dudley, levied a fine of the manor of "Aston in the Walls," with lands and rents in Aston and "Appyltre," and the advowson of the church of St. Leonard of Aston, to John Hyde and others[p]; but I apprehend they were merely feoffees in trust for effecting a family arrangement between the brothers, by which this manor and estate passed to the said Sir John Dudley, who in 32 Hen. 8 (1541) had a grant from the crown (int. al.) of the manor of Apeltre, parcel of the late priory of Chacomb, the manor of West Wardon, comprising lands in Aston, West Wardon, Chipping Wardon, Woodford, Hinton, Eydon, and Culworth, parcel of the late abbey of Wardon in Bedfordshire, and lands in Boddington, parcel of the late priories of Catesby and Chacomb[q]. He left an only daughter and heiress, Margaret, who carried her patrimony in marriage to John Butler, esq. from whom this manor was transmitted to his great grandson Alban Butler, esq. who died in 15 Jac. (1617), leaving an only daughter and heiress Elizabeth, wife of Francis Plowden, esq.[r] of Plowden in Shropshire, whose son is thus recorded in the parish register: "Edmund "Plowden son of Francis Plowden junior, born at Shiplake court in the county of Oxford 6 Feb. 1616 as his "father reporteth to us; he is desirous to have his son's birth registered in this book because he is heir apparent "to this lordship of Aston on the Walls." William Plowden, esq. grandson of this Edmund, was a colonel in king James the second's guards, whose fortunes he followed into Ireland and France, but after a short residence at the court of St. Germains, was, through the interest of his wife's uncle the duke of Shrewsbury, and the countess of Sunderland, permitted to return to England and take possession of the family estates, his three elder brothers having died without issue. From his presumed attachment to the countess originated the song of Plowden of Plowden hall, by Wycherley the comic poet. He re-built the manor house at Aston, and lived there a few years, but being a catholic he became an obnoxious man to the violent whigs of the neighbourhood, particularly to a colonel Montagu, who then resided in the present lord Guilford's house at Chipping Wardon; and not having taken the oath of allegiance to king William, his six coach horses, by virtue of an act recently passed against non-jurors, were seized on entering Banbury, and impounded by a magistrate, being worth above five pounds each. He immediately quitted Aston in disgust, and it has been deserted by the family ever since. The estate, however, has not been alienated, and is now vested in his great grandson Edmund Plowden, esq.

The Manor House, which has been already incidentally noticed under the manor, stands west of the church. It has been reduced in size, and modernized, and is now occupied as a farm house.

Bridges says, 'On Mr. Plowden's estate, who is Lord of the Manor, were two and fifty fish-ponds in the time of 'his ancestor Francis Plowden Esq. who used to boast that he had one weekly to drain throughout the year*.' Some still remain, and there are vestiges of several others now disused.

The Village is seated in a well wooded valley, about eight miles from Banbury, and eleven from Daventry. Bridges states that 'Aston, with the adjoining hamlets, Apeltre and West-Wardon, contains about two and twenty 'families. The town is reported to have been formerly larger, and foundation-walls to have been dug up towards 'Apeltre.' By the census of 1801, Aston and its members contained 38 houses and 225 inhabitants; by that of 1811, Aston contained 27 houses and 146 inhabitants, and "Appletree" 6 houses and 47 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, Aston contained 29 houses and 183 inhabitants, and Appletree 15 houses and 88 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £177. 9s. 4d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £3050. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £91. 8s. 2d. at 10d. in the £. The wake follows the feast of St. Leonard.

The Advowson was given to the priory of Chacomb, but by whom is unknown. In 35 Hen. 3 (1251) William prior of Chacomb conveyed it by fine to John de Lexinton[t], from which time it was appendant to the manor till 1720, when William Plowden, esq. lord of the manor, sold it to the president and fellows of St. John's college, Oxford, the present patrons.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Brackley. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[u], and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[x], it is rated at 15 marks (£10) per ann.; and at the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at the same sum, deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[y]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage in the reputed patronage of James Absolon (the real patron being a papist), and that Simon Adams, the incumbent, supplied the cure[z]. The rectory consists of 142a. and a rent-charge of £40 per ann. in lieu of the glebe lands and all the tithes of Aston settled on the inclosure in Mar. 1712; and the tithes in kind of the hamlet of Appletree, and that portion of West Wardon which is within this parish.

The rectory house is contiguous to the east end of the church yard.

The Registers commence in 30 Hen. 8 (1538), the year in which they were first instituted.

The Church, dedicated to St. Leonard, consists of a tower containing three bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. The tower is low, and at the west end is a projecting porch, now disused. Some of the windows in each aisle appear to have been double lancet, and included within one arch, to correspond with the new ones when the church was renovated. In the exterior wall at the west end of the south aisle is a low ogee arch. The tower is 10 ft. long, by 11 ft. 5 in. wide; the nave and aisles 44 ft. 8 in. long, the nave 17 ft. 11 in. the north aisle 7 ft. 6 in. and the south aisle 8 ft. 5 in. wide; and the chancel 34 ft. 8 in. long, by 17 ft. 9 in. wide. The interior retains some of the old horizontal seats with carved ends. Under the western arch of the south aisle is a square font with a projecting base on a single step, and which from the ornaments on the faces may be assigned to the transition from the Norman to the early English style. At each angle is a grotesque head; on one face is a series of interlaced circular arches; on another a rudely foliated tree; the third is divided into small consecutive squares, in each of which is a saltire between four round dots; and the fourth has a device connected by a double circle, and on the centre a perforated four-leaved flower. The nave is separated from each aisle by three large pointed arches on circular and octangular pillars with plain mouldings. The chancel is entered under an open arch, and there is an ascent of three high steps to the altar. In the south wall are two stone seats for the officiating priest and deacon under arches supported by columns, and adjoining them, to the east, a double piscina under an arch divided by a mullion with a cinquefoil in the head. Near the north door is a locker, connected by a running string course with a cinquefoil-headed monumental arch, under which is the figure of an ecclesiastic, as represented in the subjoined outline.

APELTRE OR APPLETREE

Forms the south-western division of the parish of Aston, but maintains its own poor. It is all old inclosure, and contains between 6 and 700 acres, of which about 340 acres belong to Thomas Pares, esq. of Leicester; about 165 acres to the rev. William Brookes of Coventry; and about 145 acres to Samuel Amy Severne, esq. of Thenford.

THE MANORIAL HISTORY is included in that of Aston, of which it is a member. Thomas Barker, gent. levied a fine in 17 Hen. 7 [a] (1501), and died seised in 14 Hen. 8 (1522) of a moiety of the manors of Evenley, Astwick, and Apeltre [b]: in strictness it was a moiety of the manor of Evenley with Astwick only, but he, having lands in Apeltre they were loosely included in the general description. His son Fulk Barker sold his lands here to John Butler, esq. the lord of the manor [c].

A considerable part of the Apeltre estate did not pass with the manor of Aston to the Plowdens, but was settled on a collateral branch of the Butlers, as exhibited in the subjoined pedigree, and was sold, about 1720, during the minority of the children of Simon Butler, esq. to the Danvers family, of Swithland in Leicestershire [d], and purchased in 1797 by Thomas Pares, esq. of Leicester, of the hon. Augustus Richard Butler Danvers, who married the heiress of the last sir John Danvers, bart.

CHACOMB PRIORY MANOR. Hugh de Chacomb, the founder of Chacomb priory, endowed it (int. al.) with four virgates and fifteen acres of land in "Apeltre," as appears from an inspeximus charter in 2 Edw. 3 (1328) [e]. In 32 Hen. 8 (1541) the manor of Apeltre, parcel of the dissolved priory of Chacomb, was included in the extensive grant of monastic lands to sir John Dudley of Aston [f].

CLATERCOTE PRIORY in Oxfordshire had lands in Apeltre, which in 14 Hen. 8 (1522) were in lease to Thomas Barker, gent. [b]

The population of this hamlet has been incorporated with Aston. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £71. 15s. at 2s. 6d. in the £.

Alban Butler, a learned Catholic divine, was second surviving son of Simon Butler, esq. of Appletree, by his second wife Anne Birch, and born in 1710. His grandfather professed the protestant religion, and according to the tradition of the family was the confidential agent of the duke of Devonshire and the earl of Warrington in inviting the prince of Orange over to England; but the political effects of the revolution running counter to his anticipations, preyed deeply on his mind, and to drown his remorse for having been one of its instruments, he abandoned himself to a course of dissipation, which in a few years wasted a considerable portion of his patrimony, and left the remnant so heavily encumbered, that the last wreck of the estate was alienated during the minority of his grandchildren.

At the early age of eight years, Alban was sent to the English college of Douay; a neighbouring catholic gentleman, Mr. Holman of Warkworth, guaranteeing the expences of his education. Here he distinguished himself by his unassuming modesty, invincible evenness of temper, and insatiable love of knowledge and improvement. "He generally allowed himself no more than four hours sleep, and often past whole nights in study and "prayer. All his day was spent in reading. When he was alone, he read; when he was in company, he read; "at his meals, he read; in his walks, he read; when he was in a carriage, he read; when he was on horseback, he "read; whatever he did, he read." Having completed his studies, he was successively appointed professor of philosophy and of divinity in his college. Whilst at Douay he published his "Letters on the history of the Popes, "by Mr. Archibald Bower." In 1745 he accompanied the earl of Shrewsbury and two of his brothers on a tour through France and Italy; on his return was sent on the English mission, and was first stationed in Staffordshire, from whence he removed to Warkworth in this county, the seat of his early patron Mr. Holman, and at that time the residence of the late Mr. Eyre. He next became domestic chaplain to Edward duke of Norfolk, and private tutor to his nephew and heir presumptive the hon. Edward Howard, whom he attended to Paris, where he finally completed his "Lives of the Saints," a work which he projected in his youth, and to which he devoted the labours of thirty years, sedulously applying his knowledge of the Greek, Latin, French, Italian, and Spanish languages, to every branch of sacred and profane literature which had the remotest bearing on the subject. Gibbon, the historian, pronounced it "a work of merit;—the sense and learning belong to the author,—his pre-"judices are those of his profession." It made its first appearance in 5 vols. 4to. London, 1745. A Dublin edition appeared in 12 vols. 8vo. 1780; an Edinburgh edition, in the same number of volumes, 1799-1800; and a London stereotype edition, in the same number of volumes, 1815.

About the year 1766 he was elected president of the English college of St. Omer's, and vicar general to the bishops of Arras, St. Omer's, Ipres, and Bologne; which offices he continued to enjoy till his decease on the 15th of May 1773. His "Treatise on the Moveable Feasts" has been since edited by Mr. Challoner; and three posthumous volumes of his "Discourses" have been published under the superintendence of Mr. Jones. A portrait of him, engraved by Finden, is prefixed to the "Account of his Life and Writings," by his nephew Mr. Charles Butler of Lincoln's Inn.

WEST WARDON

Derives the general appellation of Wardon from its contiguity to Chipping Wardon, and the prefix of West from its relative situation to Wardon abbey in Bedfordshire, of which it was originally a member. It is bounded on the north by Byfield; east by Woodford; south by Chipping Wardon; and west by Aston le Walls; and is composed of certain lands in the several parishes of Aston, Chipping Wardon, and Woodford, the property of Thomas Carter, esq. of Edgcote. It is generally considered a member of Aston, the only house in it being within that parish.

Manorial History. By an inspeximus charter in 10 Ric. (1198) the king confirmed to the abbey of Wardon in Bedfordshire (int. al.) the grange of "West Wardon[g];" and by fine 7 Hen. 3 (1223) Roger abbot of Wardon granted to Henry de Braibroc and Christiana his wife, commons for all their beasts in all the lands which he had of their fee in West Wardon; in consideration of which, they granted to him 30 acres of land, and commons in 80 acres of pasture, with common pasture from the headland of Elias de Lisle on the east, to the foss of the abbot towards the highway to Byfield on the west, and from thence to the land of Roger de Costentin on the north, reserving a road fourteen feet wide, through the middle of the pasture, to drive the cattle from the land of Elias de Lisle to the land of Roger de Costentin[h].

In 32 Hen. 8 (1541) the manor of "West Wardon," with the Grange field, and lands in Aston, Chipping Wardon, Woodford, Hinton and Farndon, Eydon and Culworth, thereto belonging, parcel of the dissolved abbey of Wardon, was included in the grant to sir John Dudley[i], from whom it descended with the Aston estate to Francis Plowden, esq. who sold it in 1617 to

Sir William Wilmer of Sywell, whose lineal descendant William Wilmer, esq. alienated the manors of West Wardon, and Trufford in Byfield, in June 1720, to

George 2nd earl of Halifax, who in Mar. 1737-8 conveyed them to William Chauncy, esq. of Edgcote, and they are now vested, with the other estates of that family, in Thomas Carter, esq.

BODDINGTON,

In domesday "Botendone," and gradually corrupted to Botyngdon and Boddington, is not improbably compounded of boc'en, a contraction of the saxon plural of boc, an habitation, and dune or done, a down, which exactly corresponds with the situation of the upper village, overlooking the rich pastures of Stoneton and Wormleighton. The parish includes the two lordships of Upper Boddington and Lower Boddington, both of which were jointly inclosed by act of parliament 31 Geo. 2 (1757-8), when the former was found to contain about 1745 acres, and the latter about 1330 acres. The principal proprietors are, earl Spencer, lord of the manor, who has about 420 acres in Lower Boddington; the rector, in right of his church, about 490 acres in Upper and Lower Boddington; the rev. Francis Montgomery of Milton near Northampton about 520 acres in Upper Boddington; Mr. Richard Griffin of Banbury about 250 acres in Lower Boddington; Mrs. Cleaver, widow of the bishop of St. Asaph, about 205 acres in Lower Boddington; Mr. John Cleaver about 120 acres in Upper Boddington; Mr. George Wills about 100 acres in Upper Boddington; and Mr. William Cooper about 100 acres in Lower Boddington. The parish is bounded on the north by Wormleighton in Warwickshire, and Stoneton; north-east by Priors Hardwick and Priors Marston in Warwickshire; east by Byfield; south by Aston le Walls; and west by Claydon, a parochial member of Cropedy in Oxfordshire. The soil of the lower grounds is clay; of the upper, a sandy loam; and the proportion of pasture and arable is nearly equal. About 80 acres of the great reservoir for the Oxford canal is within this parish.

MANORIAL HISTORY. MORETON FEE*. MESCHINES or COURCY BARONY†. The saxon freehold of Turi in "Botendone" was valued at 100s. yearly, but at the domesday survey was rated only at £4, at which time it was held by Lewin under the earl of Moreton, and consisted of two hides. The arable land was five carucates, of which two were in demesne with four servants; and eleven villeins and five bordars had three and a half, making a surplus of half a carucate. There were ten acres of meadow[a]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 the Moreton fee here was divided between William de Meschines and the bishop of Lincoln, who had one hide each[b]. In 42 Edw. 3 (1368) Robert lord Lisle, the representative of Meschines, surrendered his whole barony, including (int. al.) half a fee in "Botendon," in tenure of Thomas (John) de Felton, to the king[c], who, four years after, bestowed it on his son John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster[d]; and Boddington is still included within the liberties of the duchy.

In 24 Edw. 1 (1295) the bishop of Lincoln's hide was held by Robert Paynell*, whose possessions here will be treated of under the Chester Fee.

FELTON MANOR. The Feltons, besides the Meschines lands, had part of the Chester fee; for in 24 Edw. 1 (1296) William de Felton had one hide here, which he held by service of half a fee, from John le Strange[e], one of the coheirs of that earldom. In 3 Edw. 2 (1309) he obtained a charter for free warren at Edlingham in Northumberland, and at Boddington[f]. His son Robert de Felton was co-lord of Boddington with Robert Paynell in 9 Edw. 2[g] (1315); but the same year a fine was levied of the manors of Edlingham and Boddington, by which it appears that he was only enfeoffed by his brother William de Felton to the use of the said William for life, remainder to his son William in fee tail, remainder to Robert de Vallibus or Vaux and Alice his wife in tail male, remainder to John de Fenwyk and Alianore his wife in tail male, remainder to the said William in fee[h]. 'This William de Felton in the third year of Edward III.[i] was amerced by the justices itinerant, for that being 'thirty years of age, and possessed of this Manor of Boddington worth[k] xx l. per annum, he had not as yet taken 'upon him the order of Knighthood.' In 16 Edw. 3 (1342) he was summoned to parliament[l]; but neither he, nor any of his descendants enjoyed a repetition of the honor. His son William de Felton, whilst serving in Spain under the duke of Lancaster in 41 Edw. 3 (1367), descending a hill against the enemy on his charger, with his spear in the rest, transfixed a knight through the body, and being immediately surrounded, was slain[m]. By the inquisition after his death one moiety of his manor of Boddington[n] was found to be held of the lord Lisle, and the other of the honor of Chester[o]. His son sir John de Felton settled this manor on his marriage with his first wife Joan Fitzwilliam, by whom he had two daughters, Elizabeth and Joan, who by an inquisition after his death, in July 20 Ric. 2 (1396), were returned to be his coheiresses[p]; but by his second wife Elizabeth Fenwick he had a son John de Felton, who, by another inquisition in Feb. 20 Ric. 2 (1396-7), reciting the entail of 9 Edw. 2, was adjudged to be his heir, aged 10 years, and in ward to the king[q], who in March following granted his wardship and marriage to Henry Percy earl of Northumberland[q]. He died s. p. in 4 Hen. 4 (1402), and

Sir John Fauconberg, son of his aunt Joan by sir Walter Fauconberg, was his cousin and next heir[r]. It is stated by Collins, that this line of Felton terminated in two daughters, one of whom married Walter de Fauconberg, and the other sir Edward [Edmund] Hastings[s]; if so, Hastings would have been returned coheir with Fauconberg in the above inquisition; but as the Felton manors of Boddington and Hinton near Woodford did in fact descend to Sir Edmund Hastings, in right of his wife Isabella[t], it may with strong probability be inferred that she was the daughter and heiress of Fauconberg. Sir Edmund was succeeded in 27 Hen. 6 (1448)[t] by his grandson sir Edmund Hastings, whose son sir Roger Hastings in 2 Hen. 8 (1510) levied a fine of the manors of Over Boddington, Nether Boddington, and Hinton to sir John Spencer of Althorp[u].

FELTON BARON FELTON, FAUCONBERG, AND HASTINGS.

From public records and other authorities.

Arms. FELTON: Gules, two lions passant Ermine crowned Or.

From sir John Spencer the manors of Upper Boddington and Lower Boddington have descended, by the same title as ALTHORP, to George John 2nd earl Spencer, the present proprietor; but a considerable estate in Upper Boddington, including the manor house, was sold in 1706 by Anne countess dowager of Sunderland, to whom it had been devised by her husband Robert 2nd earl of Sunderland.

CHESTER FEE or HONOR OF CHESTER*. Another portion of "Botendone" was the saxon freehold of Aschil, rated at 30s. yearly, but raised to 40s. at the domesday survey, when it was held by Robert under earl Hugh (of Chester), and contained one hide. The arable land was two carucates and a half, one of which was in demesne; six villeins, with a priest, and four bordars, had another; and a knight ("miles") had the remaining half. There were five acres of meadow[x].

Earl Hugh, the paramount lord of this estate, and of others in Byfield and Trafford, Blakesley, Middleton Cheney, Marston St. Lawrence, Radston, Slapton, and Yelvertoft[x], besides nearly all Cheshire, and numerous manors in different parts of the kingdom, was Hugh de Abrincis, surnamed Lupus, son of Margaret half sister to William the conqueror. He came over in the train of his royal relative, who, to check the incursions of the unsubdued Welsh, elevated him into a petty sovereign in Cheshire, granted him the earldom of Chester, with regal jurisdiction, to hold as freely by the sword as the king himself held England by the crown[y]. The genealogical descent of the earls of Chester down to the four sisters and coheiresses of Randle, surnamed Blundeville, 6th earl, will be found under BUGBROOK. Mabil, the second sister, married William de Albini, earl of Arundel; and in the Testa de Nevill about 27 Hen. 3 (1242) Maurice de Botendon was returned to hold half a fee in "Botendon" of the fees of Hugh de Albini earl of Arundel (son of Mabil) of the honor of Chester[z]. The earl died the same year, and this half fee, then in tenure of Clement de Botendon or Bodington, was included in the assignment of dower to Isabel his widow[a]. Dying s. p. his patrimony was divided between his four sisters and coheiresses[b]; Nichola, the third sister, became the first wife of Roger de Someri, by whom she had four daughters and coheiresses, the eldest of whom, Matilda, married John le Strange of Knokyn in Shropshire, who died in 4 Edw. 1 (1276), seised of an estate or manor here, which he had received in frank marriage[c]. His son John le Strange probably alienated it to the Feltons, who held a manor here of the Stranges[d].

The Paganells were enfeoffed in the other moiety of the Chester fee.

MANOR. Robert, the domesday tenant of this and all the other possessions of the earl of Chester in this county[e], is introduced in the pedigree under BUGBROOK, already alluded to, being first cousin to Richard de Abrincis, father of the earl. He had visited England in his youth, and was knighted by Edward the confessor; but returning to Normandy, continued there till the norman duke invaded this country, when he accompanied earl Hugh. He subsequently adopted the surname of Rothelent, from the castle of Rothelent or Rhuddland in Flintshire, which was given him by William the conqueror; from whence, maintaining a constant conflict with the Welsh, he was at length slain in a skirmish in 1 Will. 2 (1088)[z], and leaving no issue, his lands escheated to the paramount lord.

Towards the close of this reign, or the beginning of Hen. 1, Fulk Paganell founded the priory of Tickford near Newport Pagnell in Buckinghamshire; and endowed it (int. al.) with two parts of the advowson of "Botyngdon';" and in 33 Hen. 2 (1187) Gervase Paganell confirmed the grants of his grandfather Fulk and father Ralph to this monastery[z]. Hawise, according to Bridges, was sister and heiress of this Gervase[b], but as he had one or more brothers who left issue, she must have been his daughter and heiress, and is so stated by Dugdale under Paganell[i]; and though in another place he inadvertently styles her sister, yet a few lines after, speaking of her son Ralph de Someri, he describes Gervase Paganell as his mother's father[k]. By the marriage of Hawise to John de Someri she transferred to that family, as exhibited in the subjoined pedigree, the representation of the elder line of Paganell, under whom this manor had long been held by the descendants of William Paganell or Paynell, younger brother of Gervase, and probably enfeoffed by him; for on the aid for marrying Maud the king's daughter to the duke of Saxony in 14 Hen. 2 (1167) Gervase Paganell certified his barony to consist of fifty knights' fees of the old feoffment, and five fees and two-thirds of a fee of the new feoffment of his father and himself since the death of Hen. 1, of which William Paganell held one fee of the new feoffment[l]; and in the hydarium of a later period of the same reign, Fulk Paynell or Paganell was returned to have two hides in Boddington, one of which was of the fee of Chester[m]. From him this manor passed, though I am unable to give a lineal deduction of it, down to Robert Paynell, who in answer to a writ of quo warranto in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), to shew why he claimed view of frank pledge, and wayf, and acquittance from county and hundred courts, in his manor of "Botyngdon," pleaded prescription, and had his claim allowed, except that, it appearing he had amerced transgressors against the assize of bread and beer in the sum of 3s. instead of punishing them by pillory and tumbril, the view was seized into the king's hands, but restored again for half a mark[n].

In 20 Edw. 3 (1346) two several fines were levied by William Bricklesworth and Roger Akney of the manor of "Parva Boddington[o]," which, I presume, was the Paganell or Paynell manor, and which was soon after acquired by the Wakelyns*. Nicholas son of John Wakelyn of Boddington occurs in the entail of Trafford manor in 10 Hen. 4 (1408); and in 10 Hen. 7 (1495) Nicholas son of John Wakelyn made a settlement of the manors of Trafford and "Bodyngton inferior." In 10 Eliz. (1568) Nicholas Wakelyn levied a fine of Eydon and Boddington manors to George Rawleigh and other feoffees[p]; and in 42 Eliz. (1600) Alban Wakelyn, gent. levied a fine of Boddington Parva manor to Robert Washington, esq. and others[q].

Clatercote Priory in Oxfordshire, bordering on this parish, had lands and rents here and at Apeltre, valued in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[r] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[s] at 33s. per ann.; and which appear by an inquisition ad quod dammum, taken in 8 Edw. 2, to have consisted of a messuage and six virgates of land, purchased of Clement de Bodington long before the statute of mortmain. In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) the prior of Clatercote, in plea to a writ of quo warranto, successfully claimed for the tenants of his manor of "Botyngton" exemptions from all tolls and duties whatsoever throughout England, on the ground that his priory was of the order of Sempringham, and that those acquittances, with various privileges and immunities, were granted to the house of Sempringham, and all other houses of the same religious order, by charter from Hen. 3, confirmed by his successors[t]. After the dissolution these lands or reputed manor passed in 30 Hen. 8 (1538), as parcel of the late priory of Clatercote, to sir William Petre[u], ancestor of lord Petre. It is not improbable but dame Judith Corbet of Clatercote afterwards acquired this property, as William Boothby, and sir Henry Boothby, bart. her two sons by her first husband, were buried here[x]; and, I presume, this was the manor of Nether Boddington which in 1705 was in possession of the two daughters and coheiresses of Thomas Arnold, gent. the eldest of whom, Elizabeth, settled one moiety the same year on her marriage with Thomas Theed of Staverton, gent.; and the youngest of whom, Anne, afterwards married the rev. Charles Yalden[y].

At the time of the inclosure in 1757 Mr. Henry Basset claimed this manor of Nether Boddington, extending over twelve virgates of land.

Catesby Priory Lands. Sir John de Vallibus or Vaux, son of sir Oliver, by deed s. d. gave to this priory all his land in the vill and territory of "Botendone," as well in demesne as otherwise; which land he had of the gift of sir Roger de Clifford and Matilda his wife[z]. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[a] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[b] the possessions of Catesby priory at Bodington, Byfield, and Sulgrave, were jointly rated at £10. 16s. 8d. per ann. in lands, rents, meadow, and mill, and £4. 1s. 8d. per ann. in fruits of the earth and of animals; in the ecclesiastical survey of 26 Hen. 8 (1535) the temporalities of this priory at Bodyngton were valued at £7. 11s. 8d. per ann.[c]; and in the minister's accompts in 28 Hen. 6 (1536) the valuation varied to £5. 10s. per ann.[c] They were included in an extensive grant of monastic lands to sir John Dudley of Aston in 32 Hen. 8 (1541)[d]; and in the inquisition p. m. of John Butler, esq. of Aston, in 2 Eliz. (1560), they are described as five messuages, and twelve virgates and a half of land[e].

Tickford Priory in Buckinghamshire had two-thirds of the advowson, and 10s. yearly rent out of a messuage and three virgates of land, of the gift of Fulk Paganell[f], confirmed by Gervase Paganell in 33 Hen. 2 (1187), with the addition of the tithes of his house, in bread, in fish, and in hunting, whether he resided at Newport, Bradfield, or "Botendune[g];" also certain other temporalities, which passed in the grant 3 and 4 Ph. and Mar. (1556) to sir John Spencer[h].

Chacombe Priory, besides the other third of the advowson, had temporalities here, which were included in the grant to sir John Dudley[d], and in the inquisition p. m. of John Butler, esq. were described as a messuage and four virgates of land[e]. These, with other lands, were sold by his son Alban Butler, esq. to Robert Clever or Cleaver of Upper Boddington, gent. who died seised in 6 Jac. (1608), leaving Richard Cleaver son and heir aged 21 years[i], who died in 10 Jac. (1612), leaving Robert Cleaver son and heir aged 5 years[k], in whose descendants this estate, with some subsequent purchases, still continues. The largest share was vested in the late rev. William Cleaver, who did not reside here, or this village might have had the honor of giving birth to two eminent prelates, as William Cleaver his eldest son was successively bishop of Chester, Bangor, and St. Asaph, and died in 1815; and Euseby Cleaver, another of his sons, was successively bishop of Ferns and Cork, and archbishop of Dublin, and died in 1819.

The Prior of St. John of Jerusalem had lands here, which in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) were attached to his view of frank pledge at Blakesley[l].

The Manor House was severed from the manor by Anne countess dowager of Sunderland, and sold in 1706 to John Smith, gent. the celebrated mezzotinto engraver. It is now reduced to a farm house.

The Village of Upper Boddington is about nine miles from Daventry, and stands on a hill declining towards Lower Boddington, which is nearly a mile to the south. In the time of Bridges 'Upper-Boddington had upwards 'of sixty, and Lower-Boddington upwards of forty families[l].' By the census of 1801 Upper Boddington contained 56 houses and 249 inhabitants, and Lower Boddington 41 houses and 227 inhabitants; by that of 1811 Upper Boddington 61 houses and 253 inhabitants, and Lower Boddington 48 houses and 249 inhabitants; and by that of 1821 the two Boddingtons were returned together, and contained 119 houses and 634 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £110. 8s. 3d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2263, in Upper Boddington, and £1854 in Lower Boddington. The poor's rates of Upper Boddington, for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £289. 16s. 10d. at 1s. in the £.; and of Lower Boddington, £277. 19s. at 1s. in the £. The wake follows the nativity of St. John the baptist.

The Advowson of two parts of the church of "Botyngdon" was given to the priory of Tickford in Buckinghamshire, with an annual pension of two marks (£1. 6s. 8d.) to the prior, by Fulk Paganell the founder[m], and confirmed by his grandson Gervase Paganell[n]. The other third part of the advowson was probably vested also in the Paganells, for though the donor of it to the priory of Chacombe is not recorded, yet as Roger de Someri, the representative of the Paganells, married the heiress of the founder of that monastery, the grant may be attributed to the influence of that connection. Each priory presented a separate rector till about the middle of the fifteenth century, when the two portions were consolidated under one rector; the prior of Tickford having two turns in the course of presentation, and the prior of Chacomb the third. Tickford priory shared the fate of Daventry priory, in being suppressed and consigned, with all its possessions, in 17 Hen. 8 (1525-6), to cardinal Wolsey[o], towards the foundation of his colleges at Oxford and Ipswich. After the cardinal's attainder the king transferred the late priory of Tickford to Shene priory in Surrey[p]; but on the final dissolution of the religious houses, both the Tickford and Chacomb share of this advowson passed to the crown, and were granted in 3 and 4 Phil. and Mar. (1556), to sir John Spencer[q] of Althorp. Anne countess dowager of Sunderland sold this advowson to the hon. Thomas Wentworth of Great Harrowden, father of the first marquis of Rockingham, and it has subsequently passed by mesne conveyances to Thomas Golightly, esq. of Liverpool, the present patron.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Brackley. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[r], and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[s], the portion of the Tickford rector was valued at 11 marks (£7. 6s. 8d.) per ann. deducting a yearly pension of one mark to the prior, probably a clerical error of the transcriber, as the original grant to the prior was 2 marks, and it is so stated in subsequent valuations. The portion of the Chacomb rector was valued at 6 marks (£4) per ann.[t] In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) the entire rectory was rated at £22. 15s. 7d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton, and pensions of 3s. 4d. to the bishop of Lincoln, 1s. 8d. to the archdeacon of Northampton, £1. 6s. 8d. to the prior of Shene, and 13s. 4d. to the prior of Chacomb[u]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage worth £111 per ann. in the patronage of lord Spencer, and that Robert Sandie was incumbent[v]. The Tickford or Shene pension of £1. 6s. 8d. per ann. is now paid to the crown, and the Chacomb pension of 13s. 4d. to the lord of that manor. The rectory consists of 490 a. 2 r. 33 p. of land, and a rate tithe of 11s. 5½d. yearly in Upper Boddington and Lower Boddington, allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of glebe lands and of all tithes and moduses whatsoever.

The Rectory House is a respectable residence, north of the church-yard, and was built by the rev. Mr. Hind towards the close of the seventeenth century, but has been enlarged and improved by the present incumbent.

THE REGISTERS commence in 1558.

THE CHURCH, dedicated to St. John the baptist, stands on a hill at the southern extremity of Upper Boddington, and consists of a tower containing five bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. The interior is partly new pewed. The tower is 16 ft. 3 in. long, by 11 ft. 6 in. wide; the nave 52 ft. by 19 ft. 8 in.; the north aisle 49 ft. 6 in. by 8 ft. 11 in.; the south aisle 52 ft. 6 in. by 6 ft. 9 in.; and the chancel 31 ft. by 14 ft. 3 in. The font is octagonal. The nave is divided from each aisle by four large pointed arches on circular and octangular pillars, with capitals of plain mouldings. In the wall at the east end of the north aisle is a monumental arch, cinquefoil headed, each division cinquefoiled, and a rude head in each spandril. In the wall at the east end of the south aisle is another monumental arch, but more obtuse, and of a much earlier date, having the early English four-leaved ornament down one of the centre mouldings. The chancel, which is wainscotted, is entered from the nave under an open pointed arch. In it is a very large and curious old wooden chest.

BYFIELD,

In domesday "Bifelde" and "Bivelde," appears to be compounded of the saxon bÿe, a habitation, and pelse, a field, and might possibly be adopted to distinguish it from the surrounding waste or uncultivated lands. The parish includes a small insulated hamlet or farm called Trafford. Byfield, properly so called, was inclosed by act of parliament in 18 Geo. 3 (1778), and contains about 2700 acres, of which about 320 acres belong to Thomas Carter, esq. of Edgcote, lord of the manor; about 520 acres to the rector, in right of his church; about 230 acres to Mr. William Fairbrother; about 145 acres to Mr. Thomas Bromley; about 130 acres to Mr. William Coates; about 120 acres to Mr. John Harris; and about 120 acres to Mr. George Hitchcock of Hinton. It is bounded on the north by Charwelton in Fawsley hundred; east by Hinton in Woodford; south by Farndon in Woodford, and Aston le Walls; and west by Priors Marston in Warwickshire. Morton states that "The Stone of greatest "Note as to Fineness of Grain in all the Western Part of the County, is that from Culworth Quarry, which is "White: and that from Byfield Quarry, of a dark Colour, almost Black. Both of these may be wrought to a "considerable Degree of Smoothness, so as nearly to approach a Polish. The Halls of most of the Gentlemen's "Houses in that Part of the County are paved with these two alternately set in Squares, in the usual manner of "paving with Black and White Marble; which these, thus ordered, very well resemble. The Byfield Stone of "the two has the firmest Texture, and is of a more equal Temper[a]." No quarries of this kind have been worked for many years, but the stone alluded to was an under stratum of the ferruginous stand-stone, now used for the repair of the roads.

Morton also notices the following fossils in the stone of this lordship. "The small Echinated Oyster-shell[b]. "The smaller and more lightly Striate Tree Oyster-shell[c]. The Pectenites Lh. N. 565[d]. The small echinated Scallope "Shell[e] Various Tellinæ[f]. Anomiæ[g]. And Ammoniæ[h].

MANORIAL HISTORY. CHESTER FEE*. The principal saxon proprietor of "Bifelde" was Aschil, who had lands also at Boddington and Slapton. His estate here, consisting of eight hides, was rated at £8 yearly, and the same valuation was continued at the domesday survey, when it was held by Robert of earl Hugh (of Chester). The arable land was twenty carucates, of which two were in demesne with five servants; and three were in the occupation of eight villeins and three bordars. A knight with two villeins had one carucate, and two freemen were resident there, who probably had the remainder. The meadow land was a mile in length, and seven furlongs in width[i]. In the scutage of 16 Hen. 3 (1232)[k], and 19 Hen. 3 (1235)[l], "Bifeld" answered for one fee amongst the fees of the earl of Arundel. In 27 Hen. 3 (1242) William Longspe† and his parceners were returned to hold one fee in "Bifeld" of the fees of Hugh de Albini earl of Arundel, of the honor of Chester[m]; and in 2 Ric. 2 (1378) William Longspé—or rather his heir, as the male line had long been extinct—was found to hold one fee in Byfeld of the late prince of Wales and earl of Chester[n]. In later times the mesne lord did suit and service to the hundred court of Wardon.

ST. EBRULF ABBEY MANOR. *Robert de Rothelent, the Norman sub-tenant, with the consent of Hugh earl of Chester, the paramount lord, gave (int. al.) the church of "Bivivella in Northamtonescire," with the two carucates of his demesne there, to the abbey of St. Ebrulf at Utica in Normandy, recently founded, or, more correctly, restored, by Hugh de Grentemaisnil, Robert his brother, and their two uncles[o]. As this grant is recited and confirmed by William the conqueror in 1081[o], it could only have been made a few years subsequent to the domesday survey. The priory of Ware in Hertfordshire was the principal cell to St. Ebrulf, and the prior was the procurator-general for the management of its English revenues and possessions; accordingly, in 9 Edw. 2 (1315) the prior of Ware was certified to be one of the lords of Byfield[p]. In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) the abbot of St. Ebrulf was summoned by writ of quo warranto to shew why he claimed view of frank pledge in "Byfelde" and Woodford, when he pleaded prescription, but acknowledging that he had amerced offenders against the assize of bread and beer 2s. instead of the legal punishment of tumbril and pillory, the view was taken into the king's hands, but restored again for a fine of half a mark[p].

On the suppression of the alien priories by parliament in 2 Hen. 5 (1414)[q], the priory of Ware, with its possessions, as parcel of the abbey of St. Ebrulf, became vested in the crown; and the following year the king transferred the procuration or administration of this priory to the house of Carthusians which he had recently founded at Richmond in Surrey, under the name of the house of Jesus of Bethlehem of Shene[r].

The manor of Byfield, with lands in Woodford, parcel of the dissolved priory of Ware, was granted in 3 and 4 Phil. and Mar. (1556) to sir John Spencer of ALTHORP[s], but it cannot be traced in his descendants lower than his grandson Robert 1st lord Spencer, who died seised in 1627[t].

As all the other manors in Byfield can be appropriated, this must have been the one possessed by 'El. Breton Esq.[u]' in the time of Bridges, and called, I presume erroneously, 'the Dutchy Manor[u];' or, if correctly designated, the original tenure had undergone a change.

LEXINTON OR PARLES MANOR. John de Lessinton or Lexinton died in 41 Hen. 3 (1256) seised (int. al.) of lands and rents in "Bifeld" held of William Longspé by service of three barbed arrows, of Francis Gifford, and of the priors of Ware and Canons Ashby—all of the honor of Chester—and two virgates of William Constantin of the honor of Leicester[x].

From the Lexintons this estate passed, conformably with the pedigree in ASTON, to the Suttons. In the inquisition p. m. of sir Robert de Sutton in 1 Edw. 1 (1273) it is expressly styled a manor[y]; and in 9 Edw. 2 (1315) Richard de Storeton (Sutton) is certified to be one of the lords of Byfield[z].

By an inquisition ad quod dammum in 21 Edw. 3 (1347) it was presented that if Walter Parles of WATFORD alienated certain lands it would not be to the damage of the king, because there would remain to Walter (int. al.) a messuage and a carucate of land in "Byfeld[a];" and on the inquisition after his death in 35 Edw. 3 (1361) he was found to have 10 marks (£6. 13s. 4d.) yearly rent in Byfield jointly enfeoffed with Ralph Parles his son and heir, and held of the barony of Dudley by service of annually rendering a plough-share (culter) to the lord[b]. Ralph died in 8 Hen. 5 (1420) at the very advanced age of 85 years, seised (int. al.) of Byfield manor, called Parles manor, leaving Ralph Parles, son of Walter, his grandson and heir, aged 11 years[c]. The pedigree of Parles is reserved for WATFORD, and it will be sufficient to state here, that Joan Parles, the heiress of the family, married

John Comberford, esq. whose son Thomas Comberford, esq. in 5 Hen. 8 (1513-4) levied a fine of this manor to William Fitzherbert, esq.[d]

Sir Thomas Fitzherbert sold this manor to sir Thomas Andrew of CHARWELTON, who died possessed of it in 6 Eliz. (1563-4), and of another manor in Byfield which he had recently purchased of lord St. John, leaving Thomas Andrew, esq. his son and heir[e]; by whom they were alienated in 26 Eliz. (1584) to

The rev. Simon Rogers[f]. They have subsequently been blended together under the general denomination of Seawell's manor, from the family who purchased them of Rogers.

In Feb. 1690-1, Richard Seawell, gent. brother and heir of Thomas Seawell, deceased, enfeoffed

Richard Mathew of Culworth and Henry Mathew of Byfield, gents. in his manor of "Byfield and Westrop in the "parish of Byfield," with courts leet and baron; by whom it was conveyed in Aug. 1691 to

Sir Roger Cave of STANFORD, bart. who in Sept. 1693 purchased another manor of "Byfield and Westrop" of sir St. Andrew St. John, bart. His son and successor sir Thomas Cave, bart. in Dec. 1706 sold the manor of Byfield and Westrop purchased of Mathew, "called Seawells manor," and the manor of Byfield and Westrop, purchased of St. John, "called Gotham manor," to

John Hastings of HINTON in Woodford, esq. who in Mar. 1710-11 conveyed them to

James West of Kensington in Middlesex, esq. by whom they were alienated in July 1713 to

Thomas Barker of Daventry, gent. of whom they were purchased in Mar. 1714-5 by William Hitchcock of Byfield, gent. in whose family they continued till Jan. 1758, when Miss Anne Hitchcock of Daventry sold them to Richard Chauncy, esq. of EDGCOTE, from whom they have passed with the other family estates to Thomas Carter, esq. the present proprietor.

GRENTEMAISNIL FEE *. HONOR OF LEICESTER †. A portion of "Bivelde," containing two hides, was at the domesday survey held by Ivo of Hugh de Grentemaisnil. The arable land was five carucates, of which one was in demesne, with one villein and one bordar; the remaining four were waste or unaccounted for. It had been the freehold of three saxon thanes, when it was rated at only 2s. but was now quintupled in value[g]. In the Testa de Nevill about 19 Hen. 3 (1235), amongst the great fees of the earl of Leicester, are two fees in "Byfeld" and Newbottle[h] in Sutton hundred. A subordinate seignory was soon after acquired here by the Mortimers ‡, for in the inquisition p. m. of Edmund lord Mortimer in 32 Edw. 1 (1304), Alan Zouch § was found to hold half a fee of him in "Byfeld," worth 50s. yearly, and Roger Constantin another half fee of the same value[i]; which half fees are found in the subsequent inquisitions of the Mortimers[k], and gave rise to two distinct mesne manors.

ZOUCH OR VERNEY MANOR. Alan lord Zouch enfeoffed Simon Verney of his half fee in "Bifeld," as appears from the inquisition after Zouch's death in 7 Edw. 2 (1313)[l]; and in 9 Edw. 2 Simon Verney was one of the lords of Byfield[m]. The Verneys of Byfield have been confounded with the ancestors of the lords Willoughby de Broke[n]; but all which can be gleaned of this family is from the inquisitions of the lords of whom they held mediately or immediately. The heir of William Verney was found to hold half a fee in Byfield of Roger Mortimer earl of March in 34 Edw. 3 (1359-60)[o], and of his grandson earl Roger in 22 Ric. 2 (1399) P. Simon Verney was found to hold half a fee in Byfield of Maud, widow of John lord Lovell, the representative of Zouch, in 1 Hen. 6 (1422)[q]; William Verney half a fee of Edmund earl of March in 3 Hen. 6 (1424-5)[r]; and Simon Verney of William lord Lovell in 33 Hen. 6 (1455)[s].

Walter Luke, esq. in 3 Hen. 8 (1511) levied a fine of this manor of Byfield to

Michael Fisher, esq. (afterwards knighted) and Margaret his wife[t]. Agnes daughter of John Fisher, esq. and granddaughter and heiress of the above sir Michael Fisher, married Oliver St. John 1st lord St. John of Bletsoe in Bedfordshire ||, who sold this manor to

Sir Thomas Andrew of CHARWELTON [a], from which period its descent has been anticipated under Parles manor down to Thomas Carter, esq. the present proprietor.

ST. ANDREW OR GOTHAM MANOR. In the Testa de Nevill about 27 Hen. 3 (1242) Richard de Grey * was certified to hold half a fee in "Byfeud" of the fees of Simon Montford of the honor of Leicester [x], which he probably assigned to his younger brother William, whose son Richard de Grey of Sandiacre in Derbyshire, in the succeeding reign, is said to have given all his lands at Byfield to his daughter Agnes in free marriage with Sir Roger St. Andrew † of Gotham in Nottinghamshire [y]. This, I apprehend, is not strictly correct, but must be limited to the interest which Grey possessed in the lands as feoffor or immediate lord of Roger Constantin, who in 32 Edw. 1 (1304) was returned to hold half a fee in "Byfeld" of Edmund lord Mortimer the superior lord; and this supposition derives strength from the fact that on the death of sir John St. Andrew, son of Roger, he was found to hold—not lands—but 6 marks yearly rent in Byfield [z], probably the reserved service on the feoffment of the mesne lord. At a subsequent period, however, the lands seem to have escheated to the St. Andrews, on the extinction of the Constantins; for in 37 Hen. 6 (1459) Peter St. Andrew died seised of the manor of "Byfeld," called Gotham manor, held of the duchy of Lancaster, of which the honor of Leicester was a member, by service of half a fee [a]. From him this manor descended, agreeably to the pedigree of the family in EAST HADDON, to Sir Oliver St. John, bart. of WOODFORD near Thrapston, whose son sir St. Andrew St. John, bart. sold it, as already observed, to sir Roger Cave, bart.; and it has since accompanied the other manors to Thomas Carter, esq. the present proprietor.

CATESBY PRIORY LANDS. In 24 Hen. 3 (1239) Robert Fitz Richard levied a fine of eight virgates of land at "Bifeud" to Richard Fitz Robert [b], who, by the name of Richard Fitz Robert of Northampton, gave them to Catesby priory [c]. At the dissolution of the priory this estate was valued at £5. 0s. 10d. per ann. in lands and tenements, and 4d. per ann. in free rents [d]. Part of these lands were granted in 5 Eliz. (1563) to Elisæus Wynne [e], and part in 19 Eliz. (1576) to Edward earl of Lincoln [f].

CANONS ASHBY PRIORY had the service of half a virgate of land in "Byfeld" of the gift of John son of Elias de Lisle [g], and a house near the land of the prior of Ware [h]; but at the dissolution the possessions of the priory in Byfield were rated at only 4d. per ann. [i]

NONE of the manor houses are now standing.

THE CURFEW was continued in the time of Bridges, who states that 'a bell is rung here at four in the morning, and at eight in the evening, for which the clerk hath xxs. yearly, paid him by the rector [k]. It is now disused and forgotten.

THE VILLAGE is pleasingly situated, and appears to advantage when approached from Banbury on the road to Daventry, from which latter place it is distant seven miles. The western end of it is called Westrop or Westthorp. In the time of Bridges it 'was a village of one hundred and sixty families [l];' by the census of 1801 it contained 174 houses and 842 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 186 houses and 916 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 205 houses and 903 inhabitants. A note appended to the return states, that "the introduction of machinery is supposed to "have prevented the increase of population." The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £143. 19s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £4587. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £761. 17s. 6d. at 6s. in the £. The wake follows Holyrood day.

THE ADVOWSON attended the St. Ebrulf abbey manor to the dissolution of the priory of Ware. In 34 Hen. 8 (1542) it was granted to sir Edmund Knightley [l], and accompanied the Fawsley estate down to sir Charles Knightley, bart. who sold it in 1820 to the president and fellows of Corpus Christi college, Oxford.

THE RECTORY is in the deanry of Brackley. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3) [m], and 1291 (20 Edw. 1) [n], it was rated at 30 marks (£20) per ann. The abbot and convent of St. Ebrulf claimed against the rector in the court of Canterbury the tithes of their demesne in "Byfeld;" and (John de Exon) bishop of Winchester, formerly rector of Byfield, is recorded to have paid 5s. per ann. for certain tithes in Byfield, and 5s. per ann. as a pension out of the said church to the prior of Ware [o]. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) this rectory was valued at £28. 15s. 7d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton, and 5s. for the pension to the prior of Shene [d]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a rectory worth £90. 10s. per ann. clear, in the patronage of Richard Knightley, esq. of Fawsley, and that Thomas Knightley, the incumbent, supplied the cure [q]. The commissioners of inclosure allotted 524 a. 0 r. 23 p. to the rector, in lieu of the glebe lands, the tithes of Trafford, and of the open fields and old inclosures of Byfield, with a rate tithe of 8s. 1d. per ann. for homesteads, &c. belonging to persons who had no land in the open fields, with which to exonerate them. About 10 a. of the rectorial land have been since sold to the Oxford canal company.

The rectory-house stands north-east of the church-yard, and with the attached grounds occupies between three and four acres. Bridges states that 'the late incumbent Mr. [Thomas] Knightley laid out a thousand pounds in 'beautifying the parsonage-house';' and the present incumbent has made considerable improvements.

RECTORS. Mast. John de Exon, Oxon, or Gernsey, presented by the prior of Ware 1242. He was chancellor of York in 1257, and elevated to the bishopric of Winchester by papal provision in 1261, but is said to have paid for the honor no less a sum than 12,000 marks (£8000). Espousing the cause of the barons against the king, he was suspended by the legate, and retiring to Rome died there in Jan. 1267-8.

Richard de Wyk, by Fulk, procurator-general of the abbot and convent of St. Ebrulf. He was rector of Kilsby between 1258 and 1274.

John de Schelton, subdeacon, 20 Oct. 1277.

Mast. Walter de Wermyngton, by the prior of Ware, procurator-general of the abbot and convent of St. Ebrulf, 17 Jan. 1305. He appears to have been rector of Middleton Chenduit between 1273 and 1298, of Etton 1291 to 1304, and of Siresham in 1316.

Mast. Walter de Wermyngton, jun. 1 Oct. 1319.

William de Gresley or Grysley. He exchanged for the rectory of Stowe Nine Churches, with John de Plowfeld, Oct. 1372[x].

John Bowryng, by the king, Mar. 1378-9.

Walter Almaly, priest, by the king, 28 Aug. 1380.

William Norton, clerk, 22 Sept. 1389. He was rector of Edgcote in 1414.

Robert Ravendall, priest, 20 Dec. 1395; exchanged for a prebend in the collegiate chapel of Windsor, with

Thomas Hanley, Mar. 1398-9[y].

John Turvey, chaplain, 25 July 1403.

Thomas Suthwell, priest, 13 Mar. 1414-5.

John Everdon, priest, by the prior and convent of Jesus de Bethlehem of Sheen, 26 July 1423, already noticed under Weston Favell.

William Shaw, deacon, 2 Aug. 1448.

Richard Eyton.

Mast. Nicholas Goucell, A.M. 22 Mar. 1473.

Mast. William Petyfere, 4 Nov. 1485, and held this rectory with Everdon till 1496.

Mast. William Felle, S. T. P. 11 June 1496.

Mast. Thomas Warren, 20 Aug. 1517.

John Knightley, A. M. 1535. He was eighth son of sir Richard Knightley of Fawsley, who presented him to the rectory of Stoke Bruern in 1524, which he held with this benefice, and the deanry of the collegiate church of Warwick, till his death in 1549, when

William Briggs or Bruggs, was presented by Edward and Thomas Haslewood, by grant from the prior and convent of Sheen, and instituted 24 Feb. 1549-50. On his deprivation

William Lee was presented by William Gent, by grant from dame Ursula Knightley, widow, and inst. 18 May 1554. On his decease

William Reynolds was inst. 2 May 1571. He resigned, and

Richard Burdsall or Birdsall was presented by sir Richard Knightley, and inst. 12 Feb. 1572-3. He was probably the same person who was master of St. John's hospital, Northampton, about 1544, and rector of St. Peter's, Northampton, with Kingsthorp and Upton, in 1563. On his resignation

Simon Rogers, who has previously occurred under Barby, was inst. 18 Aug. 1579, on the presentation of the same patron.

'Jonas Chaloner, presented by sir Valentine Knightley, 'admitted 1592[z].' An entry copied in the new register from the old one states that he wrote himself "Pastor "deprived 1605."

James Maude, A.M. was inst. 15 Mar. 1605-6, on the collation of the bishop by lapse. A former incumbent, prior to the statute of limitations, 13 Eliz. alienated the rectory on a long lease, probably to the Andrew family, as it is included in the devises under the will of sir Thomas Andrew in 5 Eliz. (1563)[b]. The term expiring in 1625, Mr. Maud entered the following metaphorical commemoration of his restoration to the full enjoyment of his rectorial rights, in the old parish register, from which it has been copied into the present one: "Memorandum quod vicesimo quinto die Martii "Anno Dñi 1625 Rectoria de Byfield in coñ Northam- "ton' & diocesi Petriburg; cum omnibus & singulis per- "tinentiis suis post longam perigrinacionem sive mi- "seram potius captivitatem tandem domum reversa est, "inq' manus ipsius rectoris et incolumis pervenit. "Feb. 20, 1627 Annoq' serenis regis Caroli tertio." On his decease

Thomas Knightley, of Linc. coll. Oxf. B.D. ancestor of the Knightleys of CHARWELTON *, was presented by Richard Knightley, esq. of Fawsley, and inst. 17 Dec. 1631. He was buried here 17 Oct. 1688[c], and his son

Richard Knightley, A.M. already noticed as rector of Charwelton, was inst. 8 Nov. following, on the presentation of Nathaniel (Crewe) bishop of Durham, p. h. v. He was buried here 20 Sept. 1695[c], and

Daniel Hopkins was presented by Lucy Knightley, esq. and inst. 4 Aug. 1696. He resigned the following year, when the same patron presented

Thomas Knightley, of Trin. coll. Camb. A.B. 1696, A.M. 1700, eldest son of the late rector Richard Knightley, who was inst. 24 Dec. 1697. He was buried here 16 Sept. 1721[c], and

John Mapletoft, of Pembroke coll. Oxf. A.M. rector of Broughton, was inst. 10 Nov. following, on the presentation of the same patron. He resigned Broughton in 1753, but retained this benefice, and was buried here 31 May 1763[c], when

Richard Knightley, of Christ Ch. coll. Oxf. A.M. resigning the rectory of Charwelton, was presented by Lucy Knightley, esq. of Fawsley, and inst. 20 June following. He was buried at Charwelton 24 June 1777, and the same patron presented his brother

John Knightley, who was inst. 2 Aug. following. He was created a baronet in 1798, and resigning this benefice in 1810 presented his nephew

Henry Knightley, of Christ Ch. coll. Oxf. A.M. who was inst. 23 Mar. in that year. He has previously occurred as vicar of Fawsley, where he was buried 12 Sept. 1813, when he was succeeded in both benefices by Philip Lacock Story, of Jesus coll. Camb. A.M. who was inst. 1 Dec. following, on the presentation of sir Charles Knightley, bart. He died in May 1819, and Charles Wetherell, of St. Edmund hall, Oxf. A.M. was presented by William Henry Fremantle of Englefield Green, Berkshire, esq. M.P. and Frederick Hervey Bathurst of Clarendon Park, Wiltshire, esq. (in trust for sir Charles Knightley, bart.), and inst. 21 July following.

THE REGISTERS in the time of Bridges commenced in 1559; but now the earliest is dated 1688.

THE CHURCH, dedicated to the Holy Cross, stands at the south-east extremity of the village, and is a handsome edifice, consisting of a tower and spire containing five bells, nave, north aisle, south aisle, and transept called Trafford aisle, south porch, and chancel with vestry attached. It is built of ashler stone, and is principally of the decorated style of the fourteenth century. The tower is lofty, and has diagonal buttresses at the angles, dying under the cornice. The lower division of the west front is a fine composition of decorated character; the basement is composed of two plain slopes with a face between; in the centre is a beautiful door with a series of archivolt mouldings running nearly to the ground without a base; the filletted round is the most predominant, and the only hollow moulding is ornamented at intervals with the perforated ball so peculiar to this period. The dripstone is a crocketted ogee and finial, connected with the sides of the door by two small buttresses supporting pinnacles with elaborately-enriched finials, which, passing through a sloped tablet flowered beneath, run into and form the bases of two niches for statues with crocketted pediments, and pedestals crowned with rich finials. Between the niches resting on the tablet is a window of two lights trefoiled, and a quatrefoil head, having a crocketted ogee dripstone, on the finial of which is raised another niche, similar in design to, but smaller in size than the two lateral ones beneath. The upper division and the spire are of later date, and may, perhaps, be considered early perpendicular. The belfry window is transomed and double-headed, under a very depressed arch, having a dripstone with plain return. The tower terminates with horizontally-capped battlements flanked by four multangular embattled turrets; and in the centre rises a slender spire.

The base tablet of the south porch is an ogee; but though differing in this respect from the west front of the tower, the doors of both are of correspondent design. The windows of this church present some anomalies; the contour of the arches varies very considerably, but there is a general accordance in the tracery, and the archivolt and mullion mouldings are the same, or nearly so, in all. The windows on the north and south sides of the chancel are of two long narrow lights trefoiled with trefoils and quatrefoils in the head, under remarkably flat arches, and the dripstones terminate in corbel heads above the spring of the arch.

The tower is 14 ft. 8 in. long, by 11 ft. 9 in. wide; the nave and aisles 59 ft. 2 in. long, the nave 18 ft. the north aisle 12 ft. 10 in. and the south aisle 13 ft. 3 in. wide; the south transept 11 ft. by 9 ft. 5 in.; and the chancel 38 ft. 3 in. by 17 ft. 10 in. The interior retains some of the original benches carved at the ends. Under the western arch of the south aisle is a plain octagonal font. The nave is divided from each aisle by four large pointed arches connected with dripstones, and supported by octagonal pillars with plain capitals, all uniform. In the east wall of the transept or Trafford aisle, is a piscina under a plain ogee arch, and near it a square locker. The chancel is entered under an open pointed arch springing from corbels.

Benefactions (p. 468). The poor's land consists of 17 a. 2 r. 34 p. allotted by the commissioners of inclosure, and now lets for £46 per ann.

The "12 bushels of wheat to the poor" is erroneously stated to be a bequest under the rev. J. Knightley's will in 1779; but arises out of "an immemorial custom or usage," confirmed by the act of inclosure in 1779, by which "the rector for the time being is bound "to provide and give unto the poor of the parish of Byfield, and Westrup "in the parish of Byfield, Forty-eight Pecks of good, wholesome, clean Wheat, on the feast day of St. Thomas "yearly."

Thomas Shaw, by deed 6 June 13 Hen. 8 (1521), gave a messuage with pertinences, to repair the common (church) ways in Byfield, and for other charitable uses[z]. This benefaction, which is omitted in the parliamentary return, consists of a house occupied by paupers, and 10 a. 2 r. 26 p. allotted by the commissioners of inclosure, and now let for £26. 10s. per ann.

[z] Par. Reg.

TRAFFORD

Is an insulated portion of Byfield parish, bounded on the north by Eydon, and on the east by Culworth in Sutton hundred; on the south it is divided from Edgecote by the river Charwell, over which is a stone bridge called Trafford bridge, and on the west it adjoins Chipping Wardon. It is all old inclosure, and contains about 325 acres, the property of Thomas Carter, esq. of Edgcote.

MANORIAL HISTORY. CHESTER FEE*. At the domesday survey Robert (Rothelent)* held of earl Hugh (of Chester) one hide and one virgate in "Trapeford." The arable land was two carucates and a half; of which one was in demesne with three servants, and three villeins had another. There was a mill worth 6s. 8d. yearly, and three acres of meadow. The whole was then valued, as heretofore, at 30s. yearly[a]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 Trafford was certified to be a member of Byfield, containing one hide and two small virgates[b].

MANOR. The first notice of it as a distinct manor is in 20 Ric. 2 (1397), when the feoffees of Thomas Wakelyn conveyed the manor of "Trafford" to

Sir Thomas Latimer Bochard† of BRAYBROOK, who died seised of it in 2 Hen. 4 (1401), held of sir Thomas Percy lord of RADSTON (parcel of the honor of Chester), by the service of the twentieth part of a fee, leaving sir Edward Latimer his brother and heir[c]; of whom it was re-purchased by

Thomas Wakelyn, who settled it on his sister Alice for life, remainder to Nicholas son of John Wakelyn of Boddington, with ultimate remainder to his own right heirs. In this family, the possessors also of the neighbouring manors of EYDON and NETHER BODDINGTON, it continued till 22 Hen. 7 (1506), when Nicholas Wakelyn, gent. alienated it to Edmund Haselwood, gent. in exchange for lands in Pidington, "Middleton beside Colintre," Brampton, Spratton, and Creton.

His son and heir John Haselwood, esq. settled at MAYDWELL, where his descendants resided till the extinction of the male line; but Trafford was sold in the reign of Elizabeth to

Sir Edward Montagu of BOUGHTON (ancestor of the dukes of Montagu), who with Edward Montagu, esq. his son and heir, conveyed it in March 41 Eliz. (1598-9) to Robert Wilmer, of Everdon, gent. who died seised (int. al.) of the manor of "Trafford alias Trafforth," held of sir Thomas Spencer, bart. as of his manor of RADSTON[d]. His lineal descendant William Wilmer, esq. of SYWELL, sold the manors of Trafford and West Wardon in June 1720 to George 2nd earl of Halifax†, who in Mar. 1737-8 alienated them to William Chauncy, esq. of EDGCOTE, from whom they have passed with the other family estates to Thomas Carter, esq. the present proprietor.

EDGCOTE

Is written in domesday "Hocecote," in early records "Hochecote" or "Ochecote," and in later times Edgecott or Edgcote. The final syllable is the saxon cote, a cottage, but the ancient prefix seems inexplicable, though the modern one suggests an allusion to its situation on the edge or border of the county. The lordship is all old inclosure, and contains about 1340 acres, the whole of which belongs to Thomas Carter, esq. the lord of the manor. It is bounded on the north by Chipping Wardon, and north-east by Trafford in Byfield; east by Culworth in Sutton hundred; south by Thorp Mundeville in the same hundred; and west by Wardington in Oxfordshire. The soil is principally a deep loam, and most of the lordship is in permanent pasture. There were two mills between Edgcote and Chipping Wardon, not far distant from each other. The upper one is in the former parish, and remains; the lower one, in Wardon parish, has been discontinued about ten years, and the mill stream levelled.

Manorial History. Constance Fee. Honor of Huntingdon*. Burred, a Saxon thane, had a considerable estate in this county extending into the vills of Raundes, Denford, Wadenho, Isham, Broughton, Edgcote, Burton and Finedon, Hackleton, Barton (near Kettering), Woodford, Thrapston, and Stanion[a]. He, and his parents, had given "Bartune juxta Ketering" to the abbot and convent of Peterborough, but the monkish historian indignantly relates, that Geoffrey bishop of St. Loth, the king's justiciary, to the condemnation of his soul, unjustly took it from them[b]. This prelate may safely be identified with Geoffrey bishop of Constance in Normandy, who officiated as chief justiciary of England at the celebrated trial in Kent, between Lanfranc archbishop of Canterbury and Odo bishop of Baieux, and on whom William the conqueror bestowed all the forfeited possessions of Burred[a]. Edgcote or "Hocecote" at the domesday survey was held under the bishop, by Walchelin. It contained two hides. The arable land was five caracates; of which two were in demesne with two servants, and twenty-one villeins and two bordars had the remaining three. There was a mill worth 10s. yearly, and six acres of meadow. It had been, and still was, valued at £4 yearly. Burred enjoyed it, as well as his other manors, with sac and soc[a].

The bishop of Constance, besides the inheritance of Burred, had in this county twenty-three houses in Northampton, and fourteen manors, exclusive of "Finmere," and six others, surveyed consecutively with them, but which are locally situated in Oxfordshire[a]. In addition to these, he had nearly two hundred and fifty manors in the counties of Berks[c], Wilts[d], Dorset[e], Somerset[f], Devon[g], Bucks[h], Glocester[i], Huntingdon[k], Bedford[l], Leicester[m], Warwick[n], and Lincoln[o]. He died in 1093[p] (7 Will. 2), and his lands appear to have escheated to the crown. The feudal services of his Northamptonshire estates were with few exceptions assigned either to the honor of Huntingdon, or of Clare.

In the hydarium of Hen. 2, Roger Murdac was certified to have two hides in "Hochecote" of the fee of David king of Scotland[q], and earl of Huntingdon. In that part of the Testa de Nevill which may be placed about 25 Hen. 3 (1240), Geoffrey de Lukenor or Lewknor accounted for five fees of the fees of Isabel de Brus or Bruce, of the honor of Huntingdon, one fee of which was in "Hochecote[r]." Robert Bruce, great grandson of Isabel, was crowned king of Scotland in 1306, when all his English estates were seized by Edward 1st; and in 2 Ric. 2 (1378) Edward (late) prince of Wales was found by inquisition to be paramount lord (int. al.) of the five fees of Simon Simeon[s], formerly held by Geoffrey de Lewknor.

Manor. Walchelin, the domesday mesne lord of Edgcote, had also Harrowden Magna and Parva, and Broughton in Orlingbury hundred, and part of Clipston in Rowell hundred. The whole of them passed to the family of Lewknor, who enfeoffed the Murdaks in this estate, and thus becoming entitled to an intermediate seignory between their grantee and the honor of Huntingdon, Edgcote was made a subordinate member of their capital manor of Harrowden.

In 38 Hen. 3 (1253-4) William Murdak, the fourth in descent from Robert Murdac, noticed in the hydarium of Hen. 2, obtained a grant of free warren here, and in Compton Murdack in Warwickshire[t]; and in 9 Edw. 2 (1315) his eldest surviving son sir Thomas Murdak was certified to be lord of "Hochcote[u]." John Murdak, his son, was summoned by writ of quo warranto in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), to shew why he claimed to have view of frank pledge, wayf, infangtheof, free warren, and acquittance from fines and pleas for murder, in his manor of "Hogecote;" when he abandoned his claim for the acquittances, but pleaded prescription for all the other privileges, except free warren, in support of which he offered to produce king Henry's charter to his ancestor William Murdak. The jurors presented that he was duly entitled to free warren; but that he punished offenders against the assize of bread and beer by fine of 3s. and not by pillory and tumbril according to law: the view of frank pledge was therefore seized into the king's hands, but restored to him again on petition for a fine of half a mark[x]. His son sir Thomas Murdak, with Helen his wife, levied a fine of this manor in 6 Ric. 2[y] (1382).

Henry prince of Wales was in possession, and after his accession to the crown, in 3 Hen. 5 (1415), levied a fine of it[b].

In 14 Hen. 6 (1436) Richard Buckland died seised of the manors of "Ochecote juxta Cheping Wardon," and of Sewell, and by inquisition 37 Hen. 6 (1458), Robert Whytingham, son and heir of his daughter Agnes, was found to be his next heir aged 30 years[c]; but by another inquisition in 1 Edw. 4 (1461) the heir was returned to be unknown[d], which was strictly correct, for Joan his wife, who was jointly enfeoffed with him, survived till 2 Edw. 4 (1462)[e], and made the following disposition of this manor by will: "Johane late the wyf of Richard Bokeland "Squyer sendeth gretyng &c. Her eldest grandson sir Robert Whitingham had been attainted in parliament the year preceding[f], which, probably, was her motive for disinheriting him; but in the succeeding reign his daughter and heiress Margaret, wife of sir John Verney, litigated this estate with her cousin Margaret, daughter and heiress of the devisee Richard Whittingham, who, with her second husband Thomas Haselwode, esq. having in Feb. 6 Hen. 7 (1490-1) contracted to sell the manor and advowson of "Ochecote" alias "Eggecott" to

Sir Reginald Bray for £800, acknowledged in May following the receipt of 800 marks (£533. 6s. 8d.) in part of payment, but in consideration of the title not being determined in chancery between sir John Verney and Margaret

In Nov. 15 Hen. 8 (1523) the surviving trustees, reciting that they had already, in fulfilment of the will of sir Reginald Bray, enfeoffed the manors of Cottesbroke, East Haddon, and "Ochecote" in this county, and various manors in the counties of Buckingham, Bedford, Hertford, Essex, and Somerset, to sir Edmund Bray in tail male, at his special request, and in pursuance of the conveyance of Sept. 7 Hen. 7, released the manor and advowson of "Ochecote" to the said sir Edmund Bray in fee; who in May 27 Hen. 8 (1535), by the name of sir Edmund Bray, knight, lord Bray, sold the manor and advowson of "Eggecote" to Robert Dormer of Eythorp in Buckinghamshire, esq.; of whom, in Sept. following (1535), they were purchased by "Thomas Crumwell Esquier chieff secretary unto the king's highnes." This distinguished but ill-fated favorite of a capricious monarch was the son of a blacksmith at Putney in Surrey, and born there about the year 1498. His education was limited to reading, writing, and the rudiments of Latin; but being of an enterprising turn he visited the continent, where he made himself master of the German, French, and Italian languages; and having the good fortune to rescue sir John Russell, afterwards earl of Bedford, from a secret plot against him at Bologna, he is said to have been introduced by him on his return into England to cardinal Wolsey, who employed him as his solicitor or confidential agent. In the hour of distress he did not desert his patron, but ably and successfully defended him in the house of commons from the charge of treason. Through the intervention of his friend sir John Russell, the king engaged him in his service; and he speedily ingratiated himself with his royal master by fostering his dispute with the papal see, and rendering it subservient to his rapacity. He extorted from the clergy in convocation a recognition of the king's supremacy; and accusing them of having incurred a premunire in submitting to Wolsey's legatine authority, obtained from them a considerable sum as a peace offering. He was sworn of the privy council in 1531, chancellor of the exchequer in 1532, principal secretary of state, and master of the rolls in 1534. He is said by his biographers to have been knighted in 1531, but this statement is negatived by the above conveyance of this manor in Sept. 1535, where he is simply designated "Esquier." As a preliminary step to the suppression of the religious houses, he was this year appointed visitor general of all the monasteries throughout England. In the exercise of this inquisitorial power his zeal was more conspicuous than his justice or humanity, but he acquitted himself to the entire satisfaction of his royal master, and honors began to flow in rapidly upon him; he was constituted lord privy seal on the 2nd of July 1536, elevated to the peerage on the 9th of the same month, by the title of baron Cromwell of Oakham in Rutlandshire, and on the 18th of the same month the new office of vicar-general or vicegerent under the king, as supreme head of the church, was conferred on him, or rather created for him; in which capacity he presided in convocation, and took precedence of the archbishops. The influence he acquired by this commanding appointment, he employed in promoting the reformation. Without attempting to pursue the minuter changes in the ecclesiastical government which principally originated in his counsels, it would be doing injustice to his memory not to record that one of his first acts was to abolish worship in the Latin tongue, and to encourage an English translation of the Holy Scriptures, of which, when printed, he directed one of the largest copies to be placed in every church for the use of the parishioners; to him also the public in general, and genealogists in particular, are under indelible obligations for projecting and enjoining parochial registers. Having been the chief instrument in suppressing the monastic orders, he shared amply in the spoil; the king rewarding him with numerous manors and lands, parcel of the dissolved priories in the counties of Essex, Suffolk, Norfolk, and Leicester. His rank kept pace with his wealth, for in 1537 he was installed knight of the garter, and in April 1540 raised to the dignity of earl of Essex, and appointed lord high chamberlain. Aware of the virulence of his enemies, and of the inconstancy of his royal master's temper, he sought to strengthen his interest by engaging the king in marriage with the princess Anne of Cleves, on whose gratitude for her elevation, and zeal for the Lutheran religion, he relied for powerful protection; but this apparently politic measure hastened his ruin. The king, disgusted with his new consort, was determined on a divorce; and having transferred his affections, or rather his passions, to Catherine Howard, abandoned Cromwell to her machinations, and on the 10th of June 1540 the deserted favorite was suddenly arrested at the council table by her uncle the duke of Norfolk, and committed to the tower on a charge of heresy and high treason. The evidence adduced was not merely improbable, but absolutely frivolous, yet a bill of attainder against him passed both houses of parliament[h] without permitting him to be heard in his own defence; a proceeding, however, which, though utterly unjust and unconstitutional in itself, was, as applied to him, a just retaliation for his having introduced the precedent in the cases of the countess of Salisbury and others in the preceding session. He made the most humble and even abject appeals to Henry for mercy, in which he was warmly seconded by archbishop Cranmer, but the king was inexorable, and he was brought to the block on Tower hill the 26th of July 1540. He is reported to have made a settlement on his family in contemplation of the approaching storm[i]; and the supposition is corroborated by the circumstance of his manors of Hackleton and Glapthorn in this county passing to his son and heir Gregory, who had been summoned to parliament as baron Cromwell in April 1539; but they might have been restored to him by the king, as he was so far from sharing his father's disgrace, that he was created baron Cromwell by patent in the December following.

Edgcote, on the earl's attainder, escheated to the crown; and in Jan. 32 Hen. 8 (1540-1) was included in the dower or grant for life to the ci-devant queen Anne of Cleves[k], who had recently been divorced with her own consent in convocation, confirmed by parliament[l]. She continued to reside in England, and dying at Chelsea in 1557, was buried in Westminster abbey. In 35 Hen. 8 (1543) she demised her life interest in "Edgecote" to William Chauncy of Edgecote, gent. at a reserved yearly rent of £43. 6s. 8d.; and in 37 Hen. 8 (1545-6) he obtained a grant of the reversion in fee[m]. From him it descended, conformably to the annexed pedigree, down to William Henry Chauncy, esq. who devised it to his sister Miss Anna Maria Chauncy, with remainder to his heir at law Thomas Carter, esq. the present proprietor.

The old Manor House, which was taken down about the middle of the last century, is thus described by Bridges. '[a] The Manor-house inhabited by Tobias Chauncey Esq. hath in it several marks of antiquity, and especially the back part of it; where is a large kitchen built by Thomas Cromwell Earl of Essex, Vicar-general to King Henry VIII. not long before his attainder. In this kitchen are two chimnies of stone vastly large, and of so peculiar a way of arch-work in the front of them, that without the usual advantage of a discharge of timber to defend the arch-work from being overburdened, an arch of massy stone in each of them sustains itself at a great length, though almost upon a flat, and being very little raised in the middle. In some rooms are door-cases and windows like chapel-windows; and in one room above stairs, which is flagged, there are over the chimney the ten quarterings of the family on one shield in stone-work, as also the same coats in different shields: on the side of the arms towards the top are Mars and Venus with Cupid standing by her, and below are the statues of Apollo and Vulcan. This work bears date in 1598.'

The present handsome edifice, very nearly on the site of the old mansion, presents an east and west front, and was erected by Richard Chauncy, esq. in 1752, of yellow sand stone raised within the lordship. In the hall, which is approached by a double ballastraded flight of steps, are a few portraits of the Chauncy family. Sir William Chauncy, 1636, æt. 63, a full length, in a black dress and lace turnover. Richard Chauncy, esq. of London. Elizabeth Dean his wife. The late William Henry Chauncy, esq. by sir Joshua Reynolds. The house is in a beautifully secluded situation, and the adjacent grounds abound with timber of all kinds, and of the most luxuriant growth. The present proprietor has judiciously converted several small ponds and streams connected with the Charwell into an extensive sheet of water, which forms a pleasing view from the east front.

The Village is about six miles from Banbury, and eleven from Daventry. In the time of Bridges it consisted of 'about eighteen families.' By the census of 1801 it contained 13 houses and 66 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 15 houses and 67 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 14 houses and 62 inhabitants. The village formerly stood near the church, and immediately opposite the west front of the present mansion, but was pulled down by the late W. H. Chauncy, esq. who built two new farm houses in the grounds, and seven cottages at a convenient distance; and there are now three farm houses, a mill, and those seven cottages, besides the parsonage, and the mansion house, and two cottages attached to the garden. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £91. 6s. 10d. at 4s. in the £.* The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2092. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £85. at 1s. 2d. in the £. The wake follows St. James; but is not observed.

The Advowson has been immemorially appendant to the manor.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Brackley. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[p], and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[q], it is rated at 15 marks (£10) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at £12. 10s. 7d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[r]. 'It was let by lease to the Lord of the Manor in the sixth year of Edward VI. for one hundred and ninety nine years[s];' and the parliamentary commissioners in 1655 returned it to be only £36 per ann. except £14 per ann. which Toby Chauncy, esq. the patron, allowed in augmentation[t]. Since the expiration of the rectorial lease in 1751 the lordship has become titheable; but there is no glebe.

The parsonage-house adjoins the south side of the church-yard.

Moses Hodges Bartholomew, A.M. was re-inst. 29 June 1815, on the presentation of the same patron.

The Registers in the time of Bridges commenced in 1588[x]; but do not now begin till 1724.

The Church, dedicated to St. James, stands on the lawn, between the mansion and the parsonage, and consists of a tower containing four bells, nave, south aisle and porch, north chapel or vestiary, and chancel. The tower may be assigned to the commencement of the fifteenth century: its principal ornament is the western entrance, which presents a crocketted ogee arch and finial, flanked on each side with a narrow pilaster buttress, terminating with a beautiful finial; the architrave has a sweep of hollow mouldings running down the sides nearly to the base. On the south side is the unusual appendage of a stoup. The nave has two decorated windows, and the wall does not range with the tower at the point of junction; it may be presumed, therefore, that there was originally a north aisle, and the supposition is strengthened in the interior by bases of early English pillars to a door of the perpendicular style, which opens into the north chapel—a building decidedly of the latter style; and from its architecture corresponding with the period, there is little doubt but it was erected for the accommodation of the priest who officiated under the will of Joan Buckland. It has no exterior entrance, and was till lately divided into a lower and upper room, and formerly inhabited, according to tradition, by a priest. The tower is 10 ft. 2 in. long, by 11 ft. 9 in. wide; the nave 43 ft. 4 in. by 16 ft. 3 in.; the north chapel 9 ft. 11 in. by 12 ft.; the south aisle 34 ft. by 18 ft. 11 in.; and the chancel 30 ft. 5 in. by 16 ft. 4 in. The interior is neatly paved and pewed. The nave is divided from the tower by a low arch on tall slender pillars, and from the south aisle by three arches on low circular pillars with circular bases; the capital of the western one is of plain mouldings, but the eastern one is of rude heads, &c. and both are evidently very early English. 'In one of the windows of the ile,' says Bridges, 'are [u] Par. Reg. [x] Br. 1. p. 120.

'the figures of a man and woman in a praying posture under the arms of Caryll [Clarell] and Busterde. Before 'the man is a label with this inscription, Deus, propitius esto mihi; and before the woman a like label with 'misere mei domine[7].' Neither these, nor any of the embellishments commemorated by the inscription of 'Sir 'William Chauncey Knight adorned this temple[7],' are now remaining. The chancel is open to the nave without any arch or division. On the south side within the rails is a piscina under a trefoiled arch, and near it a plain locker. On the north side of the east window is a small vacant niche.

Monumental Inscriptions.

Nave. I. Between two windows is a mural monument of white marble with scroll pediment and urn. Below the tablet is a fine bust by Rysbrack resting on the arms of Chauncy, impaling, S. on a chevron between three bugle horns O. strung G. as many roses of the third seeded V. Kelsey.

South Aisle. II. At the east end, attached to the wall, is an alabaster altar tomb, with the recumbent figures of William Chauncy, the purchaser of this manor, and his wife Joan. He is in a suit of plate armour, with large pouldrons, elbow gussets, and genouailles, tassettes buckled on, and mail skirts: at his right side is a dagger, and below it his gauntlets; and at his left a long sword fastened by a broad horizontal, and narrow transverse belt. He is bare-headed, with curled hair, mustachios, and short beard; quilled ruff and double chain, the lower row passing over a small book, which he is clasping in his hands; his head rests on an open tilting helmet, crested, and his feet on a lion. His lady is habited in an open robe folded back to the waist, double escalloped epaulets, loose sleeves, and quilled ruffles: over a plaited kerchief meeting a quilled ruff, are four chains, and from the waist falls a chain girdle with an ornamented pendant; her head reposes on a flowered cushion; her hair is turned back under a close black head dress, terminating behind in long broad plaits, confined round the crown with a decorated gold band, and bordered in front with a row of beads. The drapery flows parallel to her feet, and surrounds them in nebule folds. The front of the tomb is divided into three compartments; in the centre one, within mantling, Chauncy, quartering, 1. O. fretty S. Murdack; 2. Az. three barrulets Ar. Merton; 3. Ar. fess Az. between three crescents G. Rysley; 4. Erm. on chief S. a talbot passant, Morden; 5. III. On another alabaster altar tomb are the effigies of sir Toby Chauncy and his two wives, the precise counterparts in costume of the figures on the preceding monument. In the front of the tomb are ranged three sons and six daughters with their names over them, now obliterated; the two eldest sons are in armour, each holding a shield with Chauncy and a blank impalement, and the third is in a lay dress; four of the daughters are in swaddling clothes. At the head of the tomb, in the centre, within a garter inscribed with the motto, Chauncy and nine quarterings, as before, in No. II. impaling, quarterly, 1 and 4, S. a fess engrailed between three whelks O. Shelley; 2 and 3, quarterly, Or and Az. a falcon close Ar. Michelgrove. On the dexter side, Chauncy impaling Rysley; on the sinister, Chauncy impaling Shelley. At the foot of the tomb, in the centre, within a garter with the motto, Chauncy; on the dexter side, Shelley; on the sinister, Rysley. Round the ledge:

There are several other marble slabs for the Chauncy family, but the inscriptions are omitted; being repetitions of epitaphs on the preceeding monuments.

CHANCEL. X. On the south side is an altar tomb of marble, 'over which,' says Bridges[z], 'were the represen-'tation of our Saviour upon the cross, with the virgin 'Mary, and Mary Magdalen standing by; as also of a 'man and his wife, with labels, and some children 'under them, in brass; but these, with the inscription 'and arms on the side and ends of the monument, are 'all torn off.'

'This was probably the monument of Thomas Caryll '[Claryll] merchant of the staple at Calais, and Joan 'his wife, who, as we learn from Belchier's collections, 'were both buried in the[a] church of Edgecote about the 'year 1540.'

HISTORICAL INCIDENTS. Morton conjectures that "[c]the first Fight upon Danesmore (for so it was certainly "called as long since as 1469) or Dunsmore (as the Countrey People now frequently call it) a pretty spacious "Valley on the South of Edgecote, was perhaps betwixt that Party of Danes who used to Encamp upon Rains-"borough, and an Army of Saxons, who were got together from the Neighbouring parts of Warwick and Northamp-"tonshires to oppose them in their Depredations. Our old Historians who have recorded the Places of so many "Battels betwixt the Saxons and Danes, are silent as to this; So that it seems to have been less considerable, and "we are wholly left to Conjectures; Which yet if they have some shew of Probability, will I know be more "acceptable to some, than if I had pass'd by the Place without offering at any Account of it."

"That there was a Battel betwixt the Saxons and Danes at Danesmore, the Name of the Place, and a constant "Tradition of the Neighbourhood, may reasonably incline us to believe. The People there have a notable "Rhime, which they make the Danes to say upon the Point of Battel. Tis this:

If we can Pad-well overgoe, and Horestone we can see;
Then Lords of England we shall be.

"Pad-well is a noted Flush Spring in Edgcote Grounds: Horestone a Famous old Stone on the Borders of Warwickshire in Wardlington Fields[d]."

1469 (9 Edw. 4). A formidable insurrection broke out this year in Yorkshire, headed by sir John Coniers, and sir Henry Nevill eldest son of Lord Latimer, who, marching their troops towards London, the King became alarmed, and directed lord Herbert, whom he had lately raised to the earldom of Pembroke on the attainder of Jasper Tudor, to lead all the forces he could raise in Wales against them. The earl was joined on his route by Humphrey lord Stafford of Southwick, nominated, but not yet created earl of Devonshire, with a well-appointed body of 800, or according to some authorities 5000 archers, and they proceeded together to Banbury, where a dispute arising between them respecting quarters, Stafford withdrew his forces; and to his defection may be attributed the subsequent defeat of the Yorkists, who were thus left unprovided with archers at the critical moment when the hostile armies unexpectedly approached each other on the plain of Danesmoor in the parish of "Edgecote," near three hills of unequal size, and in their relative position approaching to a triangle. The spot now called Danesmoor is a small plantation of a few acres, but the name at this period had doubtless a much more extended application.

The Welshmen took their position on the western hill, and if they could also have secured the eastern one, an ancient prophecy assured them of victory; but the Lancastrians intercepted them by encamping on the intermediate southern hill. Sir Henry Nevill, with a party of light horsemen, skirmished in front of the Welsh camp in the evening, but venturing too near, was overpowered by numbers, and though he surrendered himself was murdered in cold blood. Undismayed by this cruel outrage, and burning for revenge, the Yorkists early in the morning (July 26th) commenced the attack, and by the skill of their archers compelled the Lancastrians to descend the hill into the plain. The earl of Pembroke fought with the most determined bravery, as did his brother sir Richard Herbert, who with his poleaxe in his hand forced his way twice through the enemy's ranks and returned in safety. Victory was on the point of declaring for the Welshmen, when a ruse de guerre turned the fortune of the day. John Clapham, esq. one of the retainers of the earl of Warwick, was seen mounting up the eastern hill; and though only attended by 500 of the rabble from Northampton and the neighbouring villages, he displayed in front the banner of the earl with the white bear, and his followers raising a shout of "Warwick! Warwick!" the Welshmen thinking the great earl was actually advancing with his forces, fled in utter dismay, and were slain by their pursuers without mercy; insomuch that 5000 were left dead on the field, including sir Roger Vaughan,

Henry Ap Morgan, Thomas Ap Richard Vaughan, William Herbert of Pembroke, and Watkin Thomas son of sir Roger Vaughan. Amongst the prisoners were the earl of Pembroke, and his brother sir Richard Herbert, who, with ten other gentlemen, were taken to Banbury and there beheaded. Of those who fell on the side of the Yorkists, the principal were sir Roger Pigot, James Coniers son and heir of sir John Coniers, Oliver Audley, and Thomas Wake son and heir of William Mallory, esquire.

The strength of the two armies has been variously represented; the Yorkists were estimated at about 20,000, and the Welshmen between 17 and 18,000, though in Hollinshed, probably by an error in copying the numerals, they are stated only at 6 or 7000 men[a].

1642 (18 Car.) The king, having mustered his forces at Shrewsbury, resolved to march towards London and give battle to the parliamentary army. On the 21st of October he reached Southam in Warwickshire. The following morning, on his way to Edgcote, observing a gentleman amusing himself with a pack of hounds near Shuckburgh, he enquired who it was that could hunt so merrily when he was going to fight for his crown and dignity; and Mr. Richard Shuckburgh being introduced, he prevailed on him to forego his sport, return home, and raise his tenantry, which he did so expeditiously that he joined the royal army with a troop of horse before the battle of Edge-hill had commenced, and was knighted by his majesty in the field[f]. The king and his two sons rested on the 22nd at Edgcote[g]; and the bed in which his majesty is traditionally said to have slept is still preserved in the present mansion. His army, consisting of about 14,000 foot and about 4000 horse, encamped between this village and Cropedy[h]; and the parliamentary army under the earl of Essex quartered at Keynton, a small market town between Stratford on Avon and Banbury. The next morning, Sunday the 23rd, the two hostile armies encountered at Edge-hill, and so obstinate and equal was the conflict, that both sides claimed the victory. The king drew off his troops on the 24th towards Oxford, and slept that night at Aynho, where he continued four days[i].

EYDON,

In domesday "Egedone," and in early records "Aydon" and "Eyndon," is of uncertain etymology, but may possibly be derived from the saxon ege, an insulated spot, and dune, a down or hill, which is not altogether inapposite to its elevated situation, approached on nearly every side by a steep ascent. The lordship was inclosed by act of parliament in 1 Geo. 3 (1760), and contains about 1360 acres; of which about 500 acres belong to the rev. Francis Annesley, lord of the manor; about 260 acres to the rector, in right of his church; about 140 acres to Henry Cadwallader Adams, esq. of Anstey hall in Warwickshire; about 115 acres to Mr. Richard Garratt; and about 100 acres to John Welchman, esq. of Blackheath near London. It is bounded on the north by Farndon in Woodford; east by Canons Ashby, and south-east by Morton Pinkeney, both in Norton hundred; south by Culworth in Sutton hundred; and west by Chipping Wardon. The soil of the uplands is a sandy loam, and of the lower grounds a stiff clay with a little gravel. About two-thirds of the lordship is in pasture. There is excellent stone for building in this lordship, but the quarries are not worked to the same extent as formerly. Morton, in treating of the sand freestone of the county, says, "They have a Freestone of this sandy sort at Eydon. "The colour of it is reddish. Hinton House, the neat and pleasant Seat of the courteous and ingenious "J. Hastings Esq., is built of it. 'Tis used also for window-frames, Water-Tables, and other like Uses. And is a "lasting Weather-Stone[j]." He subsequently introduces the following stratification: "At Eydon in William Tew's "Stone-pit August 1705. The Strata then in view were. 1. A Reddish Sandy Soil, one Foot. 2. Sand with a "small Mixture of Earth in it, about four Foot. 3. Ordinary Reddish Walling-Stone, in several thin Courses, "three Foot. 4. Freestone, six-Foot. It lay in five Courses. The intermediate Courses were the clearest and "best for Walling. In many Pieces of the Stone there is a great Intermixture of the Marcasite here call'd "Iron-stone, sometimes in Veins, sometimes in thicker Parcels. Pieces of Wood with a Mineral Matter intruded "into the Pores of it, are found enclosed in the Substance of the Freestone; but no Shells in those, or any other of "the Strata."...." Below the Freestone Strata is one of hard rugged Iron-stone, as 'tis here called, so hard and "apt to shatter, that 'tis useless[k]." Redwell, one of the principal springs in this parish, is a strong chalybeate.

MANORIAL HISTORY. GRENTEMAISNIL FEE*. HONOR OF LEICESTER†. At the domesday survey one Hugh held of Hugh de Grentemaisnil two hides in "Egedone." The arable land was five carucates; two of which were in demesne with two servants, and the remaining three in the occupation of twelve villeins. There was a mill worth 2s. yearly, and two acres of meadow. The whole had been valued at 40s. but was then raised to 50s. yearly[l]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 Richard Fitz Wale was certified to hold two hides in "Aydon" of the fee of Leicester[m]; and in the Testa de Nevill about 27 Hen. 3 (1242) the heir of Thomas Wale was returned to have one fee in "Eyndon" of the fees of Simon de Montfort of the honor of Leicester[n]. earl of Lancaster and Leicester claimed in Eydon view of frank pledge, assize of bread and beer, return of writs, profits of amerciaments, pleas de vetito namio, and other privileges[n].

COPE'S MANOR. Richard Fitz Wale, already mentioned as mesne lord of Eydon, was brother and heir of Thomas Fitz Wale. By the inquisition after the death of Edmund earl of Lancaster and Leicester in 25 Edw. I (1297) Thomas Wale was found to hold of him one knight's fee in Eydon[p]. In 9 Edw. 2 (1315) Richard Wale was certified to be lord of Eydon[q], and in 19 Edw. 2 (1325) John Wale levied a fine of this manor[r]. In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) Richard Wale occurs as witness to a Farthingston deed; 'and[s] in the twentieth year of the same reign upon 'collecting the aid for making the king's son a Knight, Richard Wale accounted for one Knight's fee in Eydon, 'as held of the honor of Leicester.'

              - RICHARD WALE, of Eydon, living 3 Edw. 3 (1329) and 20 Edw. 3 (1346).

In 11 Hen. 4 (1410) John Beaufort earl of Somerset died seised (int. al.) of the manor of Eydon[t], from whom it was transmitted, conformably with the pedigree in OVERSTON, to the celebrated Margaret countess of Richmond and Derby. On her attainder in 1 Ric. 3 (1483)[u] this manor was included in the reversionary grant to John de la Pole earl of Lincoln[x], detailed under GREAT BILLING; as also in the extensive grant to sir John Fineox and enfeoffees, from her grandson and heir king Henry the eighth to the uses of his will[y]; but which was subsequently revoked by the capricious monarch, who in 1540 (32 Hen. 8) granted the manor of Eydon to

Sir John Cope[z] of CANONS ASHBY. From him it descended to his great grandson Erasmus Cope, esq. by whom, or his immediate successor, it was alienated in the reign of Charles 1st to

John Browne, esq. clerk of the parliament for more than half a century. He was buried here 8 June 1691[a], having attained the advanced age of 83 years; and Elizabeth, his widow, was buried here on the 13th of the same month. They survived both their children. Elizabeth, the eldest, was the first wife of Toby Chauncy, esq. of EDGCOTE, and died 4 May 1667, leaving an infant son who died the year following; and Martha, the youngest, was first wife of sir Roger Cave, bart. of STANFORD, by whom she had sir Thomas Cave, 3rd bart. who succeeded to her inheritance, but sold Eydon to his mother in law dame Mary Cave, second wife of sir Roger. On her decease in 1721 it descended to her son Roger Cave, esq. whose eldest son William Cave, esq. in 1750 sold "the manor of "Eydon, called Cope's and Wakelyn's manors," to

Richard Williamson, esq. captain in the Northamptonshire militia. By Jane his wife, daughter of Lucy Knightley, esq. of Fawsley, he had two sons and two daughters, Richard Williamson, esq. Charles Williamson, esq. Jane Grey, wife of the rev. Newdigate Poyntz, and Charlotte wife of Thomas Marriett, esq. who in 1788 joined in conveying the manor or manors of Eydon to

The rev. Francis Annesley. He settled his estates on the second line of the Bletchingdon family, and dying in 1811 was succeeded here by his nephew the rev. Francis Annesley, the present proprietor.

Wakelyn Manor was subordinate to, or held under, Cope's manor. The Wakelyns had possessions here and in the neighbourhood at a very early period. Thomas Wakelyn of Eydon occurs in 3 Edw. 3 (1329)[b], and sir William Wakelyn of Eydon, probably his son, in 48 Edw. 3 (1374)[c] and 3 Hen. 4[d] (1401). The identity of this family with the Wakelyns of Trafford and Boddington may be safely inferred from the entail of the former †, and the descent of the latter manor ‡. In 10 Eliz. (1568) a fine was levied of the manors of Eydon and Boddington Alban Wakelyn, of Eydon, gent. sold Eydon and Boddington Parva manors 42 Eliz. (1600).

Richard Wilbraham, esq. died in 44 Eliz. (1602) seised of a capital messuage and lands in Eydon, late purchased of Alban Wakelyn, gent. and held of sir Edward Cope as of his manor of Eydon, leaving Thomas his son and heir aged 16 years[h]. By mesne conveyances the Wakelyn estate or manor subsequently became united in ownership with Cope's manor.

The Priory of St. John of Jerusalem, in plea to a quo warranto, in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) claimed view of frank pledge in Blakesley of all his tenants (int. al.) at Eydon[i].

Wroxton Abbey in Oxfordshire had some small possessions here, which were included in the grant to Thomas Pope, esq. (afterwards knighted) in 29 Hen. 8 (1537)[k].

Catesby Priory had at the dissolution 1s. 6d. yearly in Eydon, included in the grant to sir John Dudley of Aston in 32 Hen. 8 (1541)[l].

Canons Ashby Priory. Thomas Fitz Wale, lord of "Eyndon," gave one acre there to this priory, and confirmed another acre of the gift of his father[m]. William de St. Ledger granted to this priory the house in "Eyndon," which Gerard held, with the curtilage and two houses in the curtilage, half an acre in the west field, and half an acre in the other field which Richard Fitz Wale held, for the souls of himself, his wife, and his heirs, and for the soul of Robert Canon of "Esseby" (Ashby), at whose admonition he gave these alms towards building the church of St. Mary of Esseby, with the tower and other edifices which the said Robert had intended to erect[m]. These possessions are not rated in any of the ecclesiastical surveys of the priory.

The Manor House of the Copes and Caves stood east of the church, and was taken down by the late rev. Francis Annesley, who erected the present commodious mansion south-west of the village. It is built of freestone raised on the estate, from a design by J. Lewis, engraved in elevation and plans for the New Vitrivius Britannicus. In the house are two fine family portraits. 1. Francis first baron Mountnorris and Viscount Valentia. 2. Arthur, first earl of Anglesey, in his robes as lord privy seal of Ireland.

The Village is about nine miles distant from Daventry, Towcester, and Banbury. 'On the 13 Aug. 1651 'a fire broke out in the town of Eydon, which consumed twenty-six houses, besides barns and stables, with two 'hundred and twenty-three loads of corn and hay; and the damage was computed at one thousand pounds and 'upwards[n].' In the time of Bridges there were 'ninety houses exclusive of the town or poor house,' the two manor houses, and 'three inships or odd-houses[o].' By the census of 1801 it contained 106 houses and 484 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 106 houses and 471 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 122 houses and 548 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £72. 4s. 11d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2611. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £688. 2s. 2d. at 11s. 6d. in the £. The wake follows St. Nicholas.

The Advowson was given to the abbey of St. Mary de Pratis at Leicester, by Richard Fitz Wale, as appears from the general confirmation charter of king Henry 2nd[p], which by the attesting witnesses may be placed between

The Rectory is in the deanry of Brackley. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[x], and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[y], it was rated at 12 marks (£8) per ann. deducting a pension of 1 mark per ann. to the prior of Ware (procurator general to the abbey of St. Ebrulf in Normandy), and of 3 marks (£2) to William de Brokedish (probably lessee of the abbot of Wardon); and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it was valued at £17. 6s. 8d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[z]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage worth £110 per ann. in the presentation of the lords commissioners of the great seal; and that John Parkes the incumbent was presented in 1649[a]. The rectory now consists of 261 a. 0r. 17 p. allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of all the tithes of the open fields and old inclosures, except about 30 acres of old inclosure, which still remain titheable. The parsonage-house stands at the entrance of the village from Byfield.

Thomas Wale had presented John Martin, but the abbot of Leicester recovering the advowson against him, the bishop admitted the abbot's nominee[b]. In 1290-1 (19 Edw. 1) a writ of certiorari was directed to J. de Mettingham to certify the verdict between the abbot of Wardon, plaintiff, and the rector of Eydon and others for tithes; and on examination of the verdict, the defendants not appearing, judgment was given for the abbot[c]. And in 1304 (32 Edw. 1) the prior of Ware recovered £10 against Richard rector of Eydon for taking aver corn[d]—a reserved rent in corn paid by farmers and tenants to religious houses.

The Church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, stands at the south end of the village, and comprises a low pinnacled tower containing five bells, nave, north aisle, and chapel, south chapel, and chancel. It is principally of the Perpendicular period, but exhibits nothing deserving of notice, except the east window of the chancel, which is of three days, divided into three series by two embattled transoms; each light cinquefoiled, and a large quatrefoil in the head of the arch. The tower is 13 ft. 1 in. long, by 10 ft. 3 in. wide; the nave and aisle 47 ft. 4 in. long, the nave 16 ft. 6 in. and the aisle 12 ft. 9 in. wide; the north chapel 17 ft. 4 in. by 10 ft. 5 in.; the south chapel 17 ft. 4 in. by 9 ft.; and the chancel 25 ft. 10 in. by 15 ft. 8 in. The interior is paved and pewed. The font is in the transitional style from Norman to early English; the basin is circular, having an ornamented rim, and below, a series of narrow Norman arched compartments slightly hollowed, resting on a double cable band, which compresses the centre of the font; the lower division is octangular, with a rude flower at the bottom of each face, under an arch; the base is also octangular, but evidently of later date. The nave is divided from the aisle by four pointed arches, on two octagonal and one circular pillar, with capitals of plain mouldings; from the north chapel by a plain pointed arch; from the south chapel by a pointed arch on brackets, and a lofty narrow trefoiled arch; and from the tower by a pointed arch with plain slopes. The chancel is entered from the nave under a lofty pointed arch on brackets. In the south wall is a piscina beneath a plain cinquefoiled arch.

The Moravians or United Brethren have a small chapel here, 31 ft. 9 in. long, by 23 ft. 9 in. wide, with a house and garden attached.

The Roman Road from Benaventa or Isannavaria to Brinavis[k] passed through this parish, as appears from the grant of William de St. Ledger to Canons Ashby priory, which describes one of the half acres as lying "int' "Stavenhul sike et Portweia."

GRETWORTH

Is written in domesday "Grenteworde," and in later records "Gretteworth," "Greatworth," and "Gretworth." The lordship is old inclosure, and contains about 820 acres, of which William Pulsford, esq. lord of the manor, has about 140 acres; the rector, in right of his church, about 40 acres; Mr. John Floyd of Catthorpe in Leicestershire about 200 acres; George Rush of Farthingho, esq. about 140 acres; and John Kipling, esq. of Overston about 120 acres. It is bounded on the north by Sulgrave in Wardon hundred; north-east by Stotesbury and Helmdon: east by Hawes in Brackley; south by Farthingho; and west by Marston St. Lawrence, all in Sutton hundred. The soil of the upper grounds is a light loam, and of the meadows a stiff clay. About two-thirds of the lordship is pasture, and the remaining third arable.

Manorial History. Baieux Fee*. Honor of Leicester †. "Grenteworde" was the freehold of Saulf in the time of Edward the confessor, and rated at £4 yearly, but valued at £3 only at the domesday survey, when it was held by William of the bishop of Baieux, and contained two hides. The arable land was five carucates, one of which was in demesne with two servants, three in the occupation of ten villeins and five bordars, and the remaining one probably waste[l]. The possessions of the bishop were confiscated by Will. 2; and the paramouncy of this estate was subsequently annexed to the fee of Leicester, and the court at Helmdon, of which it is still a member.

Manor or Barony of Keynes. The name of William occurs as mesne lord of ten out of the eleven estates of the bishop of Baieux in this county[l]. In the first entry the word "Pevrel" is interlined over "Wills," but as the succeeding entries are simply "Wills," they can only be referred to William Peverel by implication; and the probability in the present instance is, that William Keynes was the mesne lord; his descendant Ralph de Keynes being certified in the hydarium of Hen. 2 to hold these two hides in "Grettworth[m]." The history of this family, including the partition of the patrimonial property between the above Ralph, and his brother Richard de Keynes, with the litigation to which it gave rise, has been amply detailed under Dodford. By this family arrangement above alluded to, Gretworth became the demesne or paramount manor of Richard de Keynes in this county, to which was attached an intermediate seignory, under the honor of Leicester, extending over two fees in Farthingston and Kislingbury, one fee in Brington and Charwelton, one fee in Evenley and Purston, and one fee in Cosgrave, Puxley, Tiffield, and Buckby. In the Testa de Nevill about 19 Hen. 3 (1235) his grandson Richard de Keynes was returned to hold these five fees in capite of the small fees of Moreton[n]; and dying towards the close of that reign left a daughter and heiress Joan, who conveyed her inheritance in marriage to Sir Roger de Leukenor[o]. In 4 Edw. 1 (1276) sir Roger de Leukenor, lord of "Gretteword," conveyed the moiety of a messuage, and eleven acres and a half, and a rood of land there, which Richard de Keynes and William Fitz Osbert had granted to Hugh de Franckelein of Westrop, to Agnes daughter of the said Hugh, at a yearly rent of 14d. and suit at his court[p]. He died the same year; for in 5 Edw. 1 (1277) his sons Thomas de Leukenore and Roger de Leukenore entered into an agreement and made an entail of the manor of Gretworth and other manors in the counties of Sussex, Surrey, Suffolk, and Buckingham[q]. Sir Roger Leukenore died in 23 Edw. 1 (1295) seised (int. al.) of this manor, but held of Edmund earl of Leicester (and Lancaster) by service of five fees, leaving sir Thomas de Leukenore his son and heir aged 24 years[r], who the following year was certified to hold the town of "Gretworth," by one fee, of the earl[s]. The service of the five fees related to the fees of the Keynes barony appendant to Gretworth, and corresponds with the inquisition after the death of the earl in 25 Edw. 1 (1297), when sir Thomas Leukenor was certified to have holden of him five fees in Farthingston, &c. of the small fees of Moreton[t], as enumerated in the Testa de Nevill.

In 6 Edw. 2 (1312) sir Thomas de Leukenore had a grant of free warren (int. al.) in Horsted Keynes in Sussex, South Mimms in Middlesex, and Gretworth[u]; and 'in the third year of Edward III. a bill of indictment was 'preferred against this gentleman for prohibiting his tenants in the town of Gretworth from appearing at the 'Sheriff's turn with the rest of the Hundred, and making there the usual presentments. But upon inquiry it was 'found, that these tenants had ever been excused from such attendance, and owed no suit nor service to any court 'leet, or baron, except to the Manor court held at Gretworth, and the court of the earl of Leicester at Helmdon.' His grandson sir Thomas de Leuknor and Agnes his wife, levied a fine of this manor of Gretworth in 36 Edw. 3 (1362)[x]; and in 48 Edw. 3 (1374) he obtained a confirmation of the grant of free warren[z]. This manor continued in the Leukenors till the sixteenth century, but its further descent will be sufficiently illustrated by the subjoined pedigree.

In 22 Hen. 8 (1530) Henry Draper, gent. levied a fine of the manor of Gretworth to sir Edward Nevill and others[a]; soon after which it passed to Andrews, lord Windsor, who presented to the rectory in Feb. 28 Hen. 7 (1536-7), and whose grandson Edward, 3rd lord Windsor, levied a fine of the manor of Gretworth in 9 Eliz. (1567)[b].

The Pargiters, who had been resident freeholders here from the reign of Henry the 7th, subsequently acquired the manor. The direct male line terminated in sir William Pargiter, who died in 1678, leaving a daughter and heiress Eleanor, wife of sir Henry Dering. After his decease without issue she married

Charles Howe, esq. third son of John Grubham Howe, esq. of Langar in Nottinghamshire, by Annabella third natural daughter and coheiress of Emanuel (Scrope) earl of Sunderland. He was born in Glocestershire in 1661, and in the reign of James the 2nd accompanied a near relative on a foreign embassy, who dying during its progress, young Howe accomplished the object of the mission, and had the offer of being appointed his friend's successor at the court; but disapproving of the ministerial measures, he declined, and returning to England, married lady Dering. He survived her nearly fifty years, but withdrew from the world, and resided almost constantly at Gretworth, consecrating his retirement to practical virtue, and devotional exercises. A posthumous volume was published from his MSS. entitled "Devout Meditations; or a collection of Thoughts upon religious and philosophical Subjects." The first edition appeared anonymously, but to the later ones—for it has been frequently re-printed—the author's name is attached, probably through the suggestion of the celebrated Dr. Young, who, in a letter to the editor, observes, "I know no name to which that work would not do additional credit; and why a man's modesty should rob him of his just honour, when, by that honour, his modesty can be no more offended, I know not:" and in more immediate allusion to the merit of the work he says, "The book of Meditations I have read, and more than once, and I shall never lay it far out of my reach; for, a greater demonstration of a sound head and sincere heart I never saw." Mr. Howe had three sons and three daughters, but all died in their infancy, except Leonora Maria, who was the first wife of Peter Bathurst, esq. of Clarendon Park in Wiltshire, by whom she had two daughters, Leonora and Frances, who succeeded to Gretworth in moieties on the death of their grandfather.

In 1751 George Macaulay, M.D. and Leonora his wife, and Thomas Cooper, esq. and Frances his wife, jointly sold their manor and estate at Gretworth to William Higginson, esq. who died in 1775, and was succeeded by his eldest surviving son the rev. William Higginson, who had married in 1764 Elizabeth eldest daughter of James Montagu, esq. of Lackham in Wiltshire. Their son the rev. William Montagu Higginson, by will in 1801 devised this estate for sale, subject to his father's life-interest, pursuant to which devise, and of a decree of chancery, the whole was sold in 1813, when the manor, with about 140 acres of land, was purchased by William Pulsford, esq. of London, the present proprietor.

The Manor House was re-built by Mr. Howe in the beginning of the last century. On Christmas eve 1793 it was destroyed by an accidental fire, which burnt with such amazing rapidity that, in a few hours, only the bare walls were left standing. Some of the offices are remaining, and the site of the mansion is now partly occupied by a farm house.

The Village is about four miles from Brackley, on a lofty eminence commanding an extensive view to the west and south-west over a richly-wooded champaign. Bridges says, 'in Gretworth are about twenty 'families, the street dividing them from Westhorp, which lies to the west at the end of the town, and containing 'near the same number of houses, belongs to Marston[c]' St. Lawrence. By the census of 1801 Gretworth contained 36 houses and 207 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 38 houses and 212 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 42 houses and 213 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax for this parish is £105. 17s. 7d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £1586. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £305. 12s. 4d. at 5s. 6d. in the £. The wake follows the feast of St. Peter.

THE ADVOWSON was given at an early period by the Keynes family to Merton priory in Surrey, but was released between 1198 (10 Ric.) and 1218 (2 Hen. 3), by prior Walter and the convent to their friend William de Kaines, son of Richard de Kaines[d]; from which time it attended the manor till the sale of the Higginson estate in 1813, when it was purchased by the rev. Henry Bradridge, the present patron and rector.

THE RECTORY is in the deanry of Brackley. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[e], and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[f], it is rated at 5½ marks (£3. 13s. 4d.) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at £9. 11s. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[g]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage presentative worth £80 per ann. in the patronage of Andrew Wall of Ludshot in Hampshire, esq. [probably in trust] and that Sampsom Smart was incumbent[h]. Bridges says, 'the glebe consists only of a yard and half land, and the rector receives ij^{s} per acre, by a decree made 'upon the inclosure about eighty years ago[i].' The rectory now consists of 40 a. of glebe land, and the tithes of the whole lordship. The parsonage is a small house a short distance west of the church.

The Church, dedicated to St. Peter, stands at the south-west end of the village, and consists of a tower in which are three bells, nave, and chancel. The tower was re-built the beginning of the last century, and the nave about fifty years since, but the chancel is early English with lancet windows. The interior has been recently paved and pewed. The font is modern. The tower is 11 ft. long, by 9 ft. 3 in. wide; the nave 33 ft. 5 in. by 24 ft.; and the chancel 20 ft. 10 in. by 17 ft. 4 in.

The following Verses were written by Mr Howe to ye memory of his Dearest Wife ye Lady Dering

By Death alone Mankind to Heav'n attains;
And bliss eternal, thro' affliction, gains.
The Good, on earth, the sharpest woes must prove;
Destin'd to ample shares of joy above.
Great thus her griefs! Great thus her suffrings were
And Great her patience various ills to bear.
But now she's safe! the dismal storm is o're,
That roughly cast her on the blissful shore:
Now joys succeed! and this bright truth survives:
She was the best of Women; Best of Wives.

Benefactions (p. 468). 'Upon the inclosure of the Lordship, there were church-lands to the value of 'about iv[l] per annum given to the repairs of the church [o].' The allotment contains about four acres, and is now, let for £9 per ann.

'Lands to about the yearly value of v[l] were purchased with one hundred pounds left to the poor by ....Pargiter, 'whereof one-fifth part belongs to Westhorp [o].' The close contains about five acres, and is now let for £10 per ann.

Lady Dering's Charity consists of a rent-charge of £15 per ann. out of certain lands in Stotesbury or Stuchbury for "such poor children chiefly young girls, as the person or persons that shall from time to time enjoy the manor "and estate of Greatworth, formerly the estate of Charles Howe of Greatworth, esq. and the said lady Eleanor his "wife shall think fit."

SULGRAVE,

In domesday "Sulgrave," and in some early deeds "Solegrave," may possibly be compounded of the saxon ꝛul, a plough, and ꝛnæꝼ or ꝛnave, a wood; though it must be admitted that the union of arable and wood land would have equally applied to most parishes of saxon nomenclature.

The lordship was inclosed by act of parliament 33 Geo. 2 (1760), and contains about 1950 acres, of which about 210 acres belong to the rev. Moses Hodges Bartholomew of Wardington in Oxfordshire, lord of the manor; about 105 acres to the vicar, in right of his church; about 430 acres to the rev. Francis Annesley of Eydon; about 120 acres to Robert Willis Blencowe, esq. of Hayes in Middlesex; about 145 acres to Mr. John Whitton; about 135 acres to Mr. George Whitton; and nearly 100 acres each to the rev. Thomas Thomas of East Ilsley in Berkshire, and Mr. William Henry Hitchcock of London. It is bounded on the north by Morton Pinkeney in Norton hundred; east by Weston by Wedon in Norton hundred, and Helmdon in Sutton hundred; south by Stotesbury or Stuchbury in Sutton hundred, Gretworth in Wardon hundred, and a small part of Marston St. Lawrence in Sutton hundred; and west by Thorp Mandeville, and north-west by Culworth in Sutton hundred. The soil of the north and east sides of the lordship is a strong clay; in other parts it is very various, with a substratum of lime stone.

The Tove, a small river, takes its rise from Holywell spring in this lordship, and, after passing Towcester, flows to Bosenham mill north of Grafton Regis, from which point it forms the boundary between the counties of Northampton and Buckingham till its union with the Ouse below Cosgrave.

Manorial History. Pinkeney Fee*. At the domesday survey "Sulgrave" contained four hides, and was held by Hugh, Landric, and Osbert, of Ghilo brother of Ansculf. The arable land was ten carucates, of which three were in demesne with one servant, five in the occupation of twenty villeins, and six bordars, and the remaining two were probably waste, as this estate had been rated at £8 yearly, but was then reduced to £7 yearly. There were eight acres of meadow. Four men formerly held it, but could not leave it because it lay in the soke of Wardon [p]; by which, I apprehend, is meant, that they were not freeholders, but villeins regardant to the soke, whose persons as well as services were at the disposal of the lord.

Ghilo was progenitor of the family of the Pinkeneys, who held the barony of Wedon, of which Sulgrave was a member, by service of castle guard to Windsor. Henry de Pinkeney in 29 Edw. 1 (1301) alienated his barony to the king; and by inquisition of this barony in 32 Edw. 1 (1303), there were returned to be two fees in Sulgrave, one in tenure of Simon de Pinkeney, a junior branch of the baronial family, and another in tenure of Philippa, widow of William de Culworth[q]; or, as more correctly stated in a plea the same year, one belonging to Robert son of William Pinkeney, and the other to Peter [Adam] de Montalt[r]. By subinfeudation the Pinkeney estate was at this time divided into the St. Andrew's Priory and Elington manors; and Montalt was lord of the Culworth manor.

St. Andrew's Priory or Washington Manor. Robert de Pinkeney, ancestor of the Pinkeneys of Morton Pinkeney, and probably younger son of Ghilo, was enfeoffed of a portion of this lordship, under whom it was held by a family who assumed the local surname. Simon (St. Liz) earl of Northampton, by deed s. d. addressed to all his faithful men of Northamptonshire and Huntingdonshire, testified that Robert de Pinkeney, in his presence at Northampton, granted to the church and monks of St. Andrew there, all the fee which Godfrey and Gero held of him in "Sulgrave" by service of one knight[s]. The paramount lord, Gilbert de Pinkeney (of Wedon), who lived in the reign of Hen. 2, with consent of Eustachia his wife, and Henry his son and heir, confirmed to the priory the church of Sulgrave with pertinences, of the gift of Godfrey and Bartholomew, and a moiety of all the land which Godfrey held in Sulgrave, as given to them by said Godfrey and Bartholomew, freed from all service to said Bartholomew, but subject to the service due to himself of half a fee from Robert de Pinkeney[t]. Bartholomew de Sulgrave, son of Godfrey, confirmed the church, and a moiety of all his lands of "Sulgrave;" entered into an agreement with the prior and convent, respecting the castle ward to Windsor, for half a fee; and by another agreement demised to them all his demesne in arable, pasture, and meadow, for ten years from St. Michael after the death of Hugh Chartruse bishop of Lincoln (Sept. 1200, 2 Joh.), rendering yearly a moiety of the growing corn, except the tithe, and two loads of hay[u].

William de Culworth, in consideration of 2 marks (£1. 6s. 8d.) and 10s. quit-claimed William Fitz Godric, and all his children, except his two daughters Matilda and Albinia, to prior Henry and the convent of St. Andrew[x]. William son of Robert de Culworth gave to the prior and convent in free alms a moiety of all the tithes of hay of his demesne of Sulegrave, and all the tithe of the hay of his tenants there; and for 5 marks (£3. 6s. 8d.) confirmed to them 60a. of inland, which Waleran held, rendering 3s. yearly for all services except foreign service belonging to half a knight's fee; and released them from attendance at his court, and from castle ward to Windsor, respecting which there had been a controversy between them and his grandfather William de Culworth[y].

"Waleran miles de Sulgrave," gave to the prior and convent thirty acres and five virgates in Sulgrave, which Richard de Lyons at the petition of Claricia his wife, the daughter and heiress of Waleran, confirmed; and William the son of Richard subsequently remitted the service of the land[z].

In 4 Edw. 3 (1330) the prior of St. Andrew's, Northampton, and Stephen de Trafford, were certified to be lords of Sulgrave by the service of 20s. yearly to the castle guard of Windsor[a]. In the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) the temporalities of St. Andrew's priory in "Sulgrave" were rated with "Stotesbur'" at £9. 7s. per ann.[a]; in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) Sulgrave alone was valued at £6. 18s. 9½d. per ann.[b]; and in the minister's accompts on the dissolution Sulgrave was returned at £9. 17s. 9½d. per ann. including £3 in Woodford[a].

In 30 Hen. 8 (1538-9) the manor of Sulgrave, parcel of the dissolved priory of St. Andrew, with all lands in Sulgrave and Woodford, and certain lands in Stotesbury and Cotton near Northampton, late belonging to the said priory, and all lands in Sulgrave late belonging to the dissolved priories of Canons Ashby and Catesby, were granted to Lawrence Washington of Northampton, gent.[c] who died seised in 26 Eliz. (1583-4), leaving Robert Washington his son and heir aged 40 years[d]; who, jointly with his eldest son Lawrence Washington, sold the manor of Sulgrave in 8 Jac. (1610) to his nephew Lawrence Makepeace of the Inner Temple, London, gent.[e] Lawrence Washington, after the sale of this estate, retired to Brington, where he died. His second son John Washington emigrated to America about the middle of the seventeenth century, and, as exhibited in the subjoined pedigree, was great-grandfather of the American patriot George Washington.

CULWORTH OR TRAFFORD MANOR. In the cartulary of St. Andrew's priory is a memorandum that sir Robert de Culworth formerly held a manor in Sulgrave with a carucate of land and tenants, which at the request of king John he gave to Hugh de Hardeboroœ, who afterwards assigned it to his daughter Philippa in free marriage with William son of the said sir Robert de Culworth; which William and Philippa had four sons, William, Richard, Robert, and Hugh. William the eldest died in the life-time of Philippa, who gave the manor of Sulgrave to her youngest son Hugh, who sold it to Walter de Gayton, who sold it to sir John de Mohaut or Montalt, who acquired another carucate in Sulgrave, and gave all to Adam his son, and Margaret his wife, who then held it[h].

In 4 Edw. 1 (1275) there was an assize between Richard de Culworth, plaintiff, and Walter de Gayton, and Adam and John de Montalt, defendants, for a messuage, a carucate of land, a mill, and 20s. rent in Sulgrave[i]. In 6 Edw. 1 (1278) Hugh de Culworth mortgaged his manor of Sulgrave to Walter de Gayton for 180 marks (£120), and in case of non-payment within seven years, agreed that it should remain to the said Walter in fee[k]. In 14 Edw. 1 (1286) Richard de Culworth obtained a writ of certiorari against John de Montalt for the lands claimed in the assize of 4 Edw. 1[l]. But John eventually had quiet possession of the whole, as stated in the cartulary, and died seised in 22 Edw. 1 (1293)[m]. His son Adam de Montalt left an only daughter Elizabeth, who conveyed this manor in marriage to Stephen de Trafford. In 19 Edw. 3 (1345) William Baret lord of Asthull (co. Warw.) granted to Stephen de Trafford (son of Stephen and Elizabeth), in free marriage with Margery his daughter, all the lands in "Sulgrave" demised to him by the said Stephen[g]; and in 34 Edw. 3 (1360) a writ was issued by which, after reciting that the lands of Stephen de Trafford in Sulgrave, which were alleged to be held of the king as of his castle of Windsor, rendering 12s. yearly, had been taken into the king's hands by reason of his having alienated them without licence to William Baret, who afterwards re-enfeoffed him without licence, but that the lands had on an inquisition by jury been found not to be held in capite, but of the princess Isabella as of the manor of Wedon, of the fee of Pinkeney, the escheator of the county was commanded to restore them to Stephen and Margery, saving the issues received whilst in the hands of the crown[g]. In 37 Edw. 3 (1363) Stephen and Margery demised all their lands in Sulgrave and Trafford to their son John de Trafford for life, rendering service at their court, and paying a pound of pepper yearly for the first two years, and £10 yearly afterwards. In 45 Edw. 3 (1371) Stephen de Trafford conveyed his manor of Sulgrave which he had leased to John de Mussenden of Culworth for life, but which he had re-entered on non-payment of rent, to Henry de Ardern, in fee[g].

The purchaser of Sulgrave manor was afterwards knighted, and in 5 Ric. 2 (1382), by the name of sir Henry Ardern, made a settlement of his manors in the counties of Warwick, Northampton, and Worcester. From him this manor descended, as exhibited in the pedigree of Arden or Ardern, introduced under SPRATTON (p. 67), down to Robert Ardern, esq. who in 18 Hen. 6 (1439) levied a fine of Wappenham manor to sir Walter Lucy*, and of Netherbury manor in Sulgrave to

Robert Danvers† and his trustees in fee; and by an indenture in May 23 Hen. 6 (1445) it is witnessed that "the "seid Robert Arderne and John Halton have sworne uppon ye book that ye said maner is not entailed, and that "ye seid Robert Arderne nor his heirs shall nev^r^ trouble nor suffre be troubled nor vexed ye seid Robert Danvers," &c. This deed seems to have arisen out of a claim set up by sir William Lucy, which will be best explained by the following curious affidavit: "To all trew cristen people that this psent escrithe shall see or here "Robt Arderne esquier sendeth gretynge in Gode. Wher' it is so, byfore this tyme y have sold unto Robt "Danvers the maner of Netherbury in Sulgrave by fyne arered, as it appereth in the same, of the which bargayne "the saide Robt Danvers is inquietede by s'r Willm Lucy Knyght, agenste all resone, trouthe ande conscience, "be hit knowen that aftur my seid bargayne, and aftur the saide fyne knowlegeade, y the saide Robt Arderne hade "a spekynge wyth s'r Walter Lucy fadre to the said s'r Willm to have bought of me the said maner for C mā "(£66. 13s. 4d.) supposyinge that tyme, that y shuld have entreted the said Robt Danvers to have refusede his "bargayne, inasmuch as ther (was) lefte that tyme an C mēs in his honde yet not paied for the same &c. In wytnes wherof y have sett to my seall, yeven the xiij^te^ Day of the Moneth of Februer "ye xxviij^te^ yer of the reigne of Kynge Henr' the sexte aftur ye Conqueste[n]." Notwithstanding this declaration, Lucy refused to yield; but in 31 Hen. 6 (1453) he released to Danvers and his trustees all right to the manor of Netherbury in Sulgrave which they had lately recovered against him in the king's court[n].

This manor was purchased about the commencement of the seventeenth century by the Crewes of STEANE, with whom it continued till July 1700, when the trustees and executrix of Thomas lord Crewe, deceased, sold it to John Hodges, esq.[n]

THE ELINGTON OR LEESON MANOR originated in a feoffment from the Pinkeneys of Morton, and was subordinate to that manor.

In the book of knights' fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295) Henry de Clinton was certified to hold one fee in "Soleg've" of William de Pinkeney[o]; and in 9 Edw. 2 (1315) William de Glinton was returned to be lord of "Sulgrave[p]." By a mistake in the initial letter, not unfrequent in copying early records, "Clinton" and "Glinton" have been erroneously substituted for Elinton. In 30 Edw. 3 (1356) Henry de Elington was found to hold lands in Sulgrave and Syresham of the manor of Morton[q]. William de Elyngton, probably his son, enfeoffed

John de Stotesbury in his manor of Sulgrave[r], who in 33 Edw. 3 (1359), on an action brought against him by the prior of St. Andrew for cutting down a quantity of underwood, proved that it was his own property, as lying within his manor of Sulgrave called Elington's manor[s]. In 16 Hen. 6 (1437) a suit was heard before Richard "Wydevill," esq. sheriff of the county, between John Stotesbury, plaintiff, and Margery widow of William Harwedon, sen. esq. and her son William Harwedon, jun. esq. defendants, respecting certain cattle seized by the said Margery for upwards of twenty years arrears of services due to her, when it appeared that one William de Elyngton formerly held the manor of Sulgrave of sir Giles St. John, as of his manor of Morton Pinkeney, by homage, fealty, escuage, and 20s. yearly rent, and afterwards enfeoffed John Stotesbury, senior, from whom it came to John Stotesbury the plaintiff; and after the death of sir Giles, the manor of Morton, with the said services, descended to the said Margery as his daughter and heiress[r].

The male line of the Stotesburys terminated in the beginning of the reign of Elizabeth. In 6 Eliz. (1564), at the court baron of Lawrence Washington, gent. the jurors presented that

Thomas Leeson held a messunge and a virgate and a half of land, as heir of Thomas Stotesbury, who had died since the last court[t]; and in 35 Eliz. (1593) certain lands in Sulgrave were found to be held of Thomas Leeson, gent. as of his manor of Elington[u].

In 2 Jac. (1604) Randall Manning of London surrendered to his son John Manning of London all his right to the manor of Pinkeney in Sulgrave, and ten virgates and a half thereto belonging[t]. This manor, it is presumed, was subsequently acquired by the Crewes, and passed with the Culworth or Trafford manor to John Hodges, esq. in whom all the manors were proved to centre, on a trial between his representative Mrs. Jackson and other claimants about the year 1764.

CANONS ASHBY PRIORY, besides smaller donations, had in "Sulgrave," of the gift of William son of Robert de Culworth, confirmed by Philippa his widow, 21 acres of meadow in one field of his demesne, and the same quantity in the other field of his demesne, with common pasture[x]. The temporalities of this priory in Sulgrave were valued collectively with others in the taxation of 1291: in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) they were rated only at 7s. 8d. per annum[y] and with those of

CATESBY PRIORY in Sulgrave rated in the same survey at 35s. 4d. per ann. were granted after the dissolution (int. al.) to Lawrence Washington, gent.[z]

MANOR HOUSES. One only is now recognised, which has degenerated into a common farm house. It stands at the eastern extremity of the village, and was formerly the residence of the Washingtons: within these few years the arms and alliances of the family ornamented the kitchen window.

Westward of the church-yard is a small field called Castle close, where a raised mound, with part of the fosse which surrounded it, marks the site of an ancient mansion attached to one of the manors.

The Grange or Manor house of St. Andrew's priory stood near the windmill approaching Culworth, and not far from Holywell spring.

THE VILLAGE is about six miles from Banbury. In the time of Bridges there were 'about ninety houses and 'forty freeholders[a].' By the census of 1801 it contained 96 houses and 414 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 93 houses and 437 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 120 houses and 578 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £116. 4s. 6d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2607. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £539. 7s. at 7s. in the £. The wake is kept on the Sunday after St. James.

ADVOWSON. The grants and confirmations of the advowson have been anticipated under the St. Andrew's priory manor. After the dissolution, the impropriate rectory and advowson of the vicarage were (int. al.) granted in 6 Edw. 6 (1552) to Thomas Cecyll and Peter Bold of London[b]. They were subsequently purchased by the Wykhams of Swalcliffe in Oxfordshire, in which family they continued till 1792, when William Richard [b] Pat. 26 Sept. 6 Edw. 6. p. 9.

Wykham, esq. sold the impropriate rectory to the rev. Francis Annesley of Eydon, and the advowson of the vicarage to the rev. William Harding, the present patron and vicar.

THE RECTORY is omitted in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3), but in that of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) was rated at 9 marks (£6) per ann.[c]; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) was let to farm by the prior of St. Andrew at £9 per ann.[d] The commissioners of inclosure awarded 343 a. 3 r. 12 p. in lieu of the great or impropriate tithes.

THE VICARAGE is in the deanry of Brackley. It was endowed by Hugh Wells bishop of Lincoln between 1209 and 1234[e]; and in the copy of the taxation of 1291 in the British Museum is rated at £4 per ann.[f] In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 it was valued at £10 per ann. deducting 3s. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[d]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a vicarage worth about £40 per ann.; and that Mr. Richard Fisher the incumbent was admitted by order of parliament[g]. It is a discharged living, returned under the act 5 Anne (1707), to be of the clear yearly value of £46. 18s. 8d. The vicarage now consists of 105 a. 0 r. 21 p. allotted by the commissioners in lieu of the vicarial tithes, and 1 a. 2 r. 11 p. in exchange for the old church yard. The vicarage house, which has been improved by the present incumbent, stands a short distance west of the church.

Thorald, priest, 28 June 1264.

Robert de Wardington, probably the same person who was rector of Edgcote.

Thomas Courte was inst. 28 May 1601.

Richard Fisher occurs in 1655[g].

George Fisher of Queen's coll. Oxf. A.M. was presented by Ambrose Holbech, gent. p. h. v. and inst. 18 April 1683. He was buried here 17 Oct. 1724[i], and

John Loggin of Merton coll. Oxf. A.M. was inst. 13 Feb. 1724-5, on the presentation of Mrs. Susan Wyckham. He obtained the vicarage of Chacombe in 1737, which he held with this benefice till his death, and was buried here 9 July 1741[i], when

Richard Lydiatt, of New coll. Oxf. A.M. was presented by Richard Wykham, esq. of Swalcliffe in Oxfordshire, and inst. 26 Dec. following. He resigned in favor of his brother

Thomas Lydiatt of New coll. Oxf. A.M. who was inst. 21 June 1748, on the presentation of the same patron. His decease introduced

James Wilmot of Trin. coll. Oxf. A.M. 1748, B.D. 1756, D.D. 1760, who was presented by William Humphry Wykham, esq. of Swalcliffe, and inst. 1 Aug 1753. He was rector of Barton in Warwickshire. On his resignation the same patron presented

Richard Wykham of Linc. coll. Oxf. A.M. who was inst. 10 Dec. 1760. In addition to this benefice he was vicar of Chacomb from 1774, and rector of Newton Purcell in Oxfordshire from 1783. He was buried here 26 Feb. 1805[i], and William Harding of Wadham coll. Oxf. A.B. was inst. 12 July following, on his own petition, having previously resigned the vicarage of Freeston cum Butterwick in Lincolnshire.

REGISTERS. Bridges says 'the old register was burnt some time ago with the vicarage-house; the succeeding 'one begins in 1649[k]. The present registers do not commence till 1668.

The Church, dedicated to St. James, stands near the centre of the village, and consists of a low tower containing five bells, nave, south aisle, north and south porches, and chancel. Most of the windows are despoiled of the tracery. The tower is 11 ft. 11 in. long, by 9 ft. 6 in. wide; the nave and aisle 47 ft. 5 in. long, the nave 19 ft. 4 in. and the aisle 9 ft. 5 in. wide; the chancel 24 ft. 2 in. long, by 14 ft. 1 in. wide. The font has a multangular shaft with a foliated basin. The nave is divided from the aisle by four pointed arches on octagonal pillars with plain capitals. The chancel is entered under an open pointed arch.

BENEFACTIONS (p. 468). Land in Helmdon was purchased with the bequests of Timcocks and Walker, and £2 added by the parishioners, but was afterwards sold again subject to £80 and interest at 4 per cent.; which interest, together with the interest of the bequests of Ash, "Unknown," and Haycock, making a total of £5. 12s. is distributed amongst the poor annually on St. Thomas's day, in money.

John Hodges, esq. by will 18 June 1722 settled a rent-charge of £8 per ann.; £4 per ann. to be distributed in bread to the poor every Sunday, and the remaining £4 to pay a schoolmaster or schoolmistress to teach ten poor children.

Robert Gardiner of Sulgrave, gent. by deed in 1763 gave £14 per ann. to trustees to be disposed of as follows: to purchase twelve threepenny loaves every week for the poor attending divine service in Sulgrave church £7. 16s.; to the schoolmaster, to teach six poor boys, £5; for an entertainment for the trustees on St. Valentine's day, £1. 1s.; and to be laid up annually to defray the expence of new deeds when the trustees should be reduced to two, 3s.

The said Robert Gardiner by will in 1776 bequeathed the interest of £500, to be disposed of annually on St. Valentine's day as follows: to the minister for a sermon on St. Valentine's day, £1. 1s.; to the county hospital at Northampton, £1. 1s.; an entertainment for the trustees, 15s.; clothing for six poor boys, £3; to be distributed to the poor in beef, £9. 3s.; and to place out a poor boy apprentice, £10; total £25.

SCHOOL. The school-house was built by John Hodges, esq. but the endowment being inadequate to the support of a master, the deficiency is annually raised by voluntary subscriptions.

TUMULUS. On the north side of the parish is a tumulus called Barrow or Burrow hill; on the summit, which is about forty feet square, grows an old ash tree. "For a large Extensive Prospect," says Morton, "there is a "gallant one in Sulgrave-Field, upon Burrow-Hill, a small factitious Mount, on a rising Ground, whereon no "fewer than Nine Counties do present themselves to one View, that is, the Counties of Northampton, Warwick, "Worcester, Oxford, Glocester, Berks, Bucks, Bedford, and Hertford; and 'tis thought a part of Wiltshire, or "Hampshire, is likewise to be seen from thence[1]."

[1] Morton, p. 22.

WARDON OR CHIPPING WARDON

Includes a small portion of West Wardon; and in its civil, though not ecclesiastical jurisdiction, the lordship of Staunton or Stoneton.

"Wardone" or "Waredone" may possibly owe its name to a combination of the saxon pape, a defence or border, and bune, a down, in allusion to the line of vallum which will be more particularly noticed in a subsequent page. In early records it is written West Wardon to distinguish it from Wardon in Bedfordshire, but the same appellation being subsequently applied, and for the same reason, to the adjoining grange or manor of West Wardon, and a market having been obtained for this vill, the more definite distinction of Cheping or Market Wardon, now corrupted into Chipping Wardon, was adopted.

It was inclosed by act of parliament in 6 Geo. 2 (1732), and contains about 1840 acres; of which about 1545 acres belong to the earl of Guilford, lord of the manor; about 120 acres to the rector, in right of his church; and about 150 acres to Thomas Carter, esq. of Edgcote. The boundaries are formed on the north by Aston le Walls and West Wardon; on the east by Eydon and Trafford in Byfield; on the south by the river Charwell, which divides it from Edgcote, and from Wardington in Oxfordshire; and on the west by Prescott in Oxfordshire, and Appletre. The soil is principally a dark-coloured loam; and a considerable portion of the lordship is in permanent pasture.

MANORIAL HISTORY. REINBUDCURT FEE. BARONY OF WARDON. At the domesday survey Wido de Reinbudcurt held two hides and three virgates in "Waredone Hund," which had been the saxon freehold of Tosti—probably earl Tosti—though not so designated. The name of the vill is omitted, but its identity with Wardon will be abundantly proved by subsequent records. The arable land was six carucates and a half. One hide and three carucates were in demesne; and fifteen villeins, with a priest and two bordars, had five ploughs, for if the word "caï" were here rendered carucates, the aggregate would give a surplus of one and a half. There were two mills worth 26s. yearly, and twenty acres of meadow. The whole had been heretofore rated at 100s. yearly, but was then raised to £8 [a].

Wido or Guy de Reinbudcurt, lord of Wardon, had also in this county the whole, or portions of, Burton, Aldwinckle, and Cranford, in Huxlow hundred; Stanford, Eltingdon, and Sulby, in Guilsborough hundred; Harrowden and Isham in Orlingbury hundred; and Cogenho in Wymersley hundred; six manors in Leicestershire [b]; six manors in Cambridgeshire [c]; four manors in Lincolnshire [d]; and Wroxton in Oxfordshire [e]. Of his Northamptonshire possessions he retained only Wardon and Burton in demesne. Wardon was constituted the head of his barony, which was held in capite by the service of fifteen knights' fees, and the yearly payment of 75s.—5s. each fee—to the ward of Rockingham castle.

His son and successor Richard de Reinbudcurt or Reyncurt lost 25 marks (£16. 13s. 4d.) at dice with king Henry the first; and Burton was seized by the royal gamester as security for the payment [f]. He left an only daughter and heiress Margaret, whose husband

Robert Foliot, in her right, had a grant or confirmation from Hen. 2, between 1157 and 1162, of all the lands and honor of Wido de Reyncurt, to hold as freely as said Wido and Richard his son had held them, with sac and soc, tol and theam, infangtheof, &c. to the said honor belonging [g]; and in the Liber Niger 14 Hen. 2 (1167) his barony is thus entered. Of the old feoffment—prior to the death of king Henry the first—

Michael Belet holds four knights' fees.
Abbot of Westminster, one knight's fee.
John de Argentune, one knight's fee.
William de Widvill, half a knight's fee.
Philip de Insula, fourth part of a knight's fee.
Thomas de Andeli, four knights' fees.
Ernulf de Bosco, one knight's fee.
Henry de Aldwincle, half a knight's fee.
William de Franceis, half a knight's fee.

And Robert Foliot himself holds in demesne one knight's fee of the old feoffment. Of the new feoffment after the death of king Henry,

Adam de Bernaville holds the fourth part of a knight's fee.
Roland de Dinant holds one knight's fee and a half, at the king's pleasure.
Roger de Mowbray one knight's fee and a half, of which he withholds the service.

After the conquest of England the antecessors of Robert held the barony by the service of fifteen knights' fees, and he, after them [h]. The fee held in demesne by Foliot—the caput baronis—was Wardon; and by the assistance of subsequent records, and an inquisition of the barony temp. Edw. I [i], the names and services of the manors, of nearly all the above feudatories may be appropriated.

Michael Belet held Wroxton in Oxfordshire by the service of one fee, and Siston, Scot Willoughby, and Hounesby in Lincolnshire, by three fees.

Thomas de Andeli (Daundelyn) held Isham by one fee, and Barton and Eversden in Cambridgeshire by three fees.

Abbot of Westminster held Sulby by one fee.

Ernulf [Ernald] de Bosco held Harrowden and Cogenho by one fee.

Hungerford, esq. [g] Ibid. fo. 19. [h] Lib. Nig. fo. 90. [i] "Transcript Cartar' Rob. Braybrok," fo. 61 b. to 64 b.

John de Argentune held "Meldburn and Melred" in Cambridgeshire by one fee.
Henry de Aldwincle held Aldwincle by half a fee.
William de Widvill held Lyveden in Aldwincle by half a fee.
William de Franceis held Wimpole in Cambridgeshire by half a fee.
The quarter of a fee, each, held by Philip de Insula (Lisle) and Adam de Bernaville, I am unable to trace.
The fee and a half of Roland de Dinant was in Burton, and held during the king's pleasure, or till recovered by Foliot, who had failed in paying the stipulated sum for its redemption.

Stanford, with the places within its soke, including most of the Leicestershire estates of Wido de Reinbudcurt, are not included in this return of the barony, having been given by him, and confirmed by William the conqueror, to Selby abbey in Yorkshire, to hold in frank almoigne.

The certificates of fees recorded in the Liber Niger are the returns to the king's writs, upon which were assessed the aid levied for the marriage of Maud, daughter of Hen. 2, to Henry duke of Saxony. On this occasion each fee of the old feoffment paid one mark, but of the new feoffment, which was smaller, only 8s. Though Foliot certified that his barony answered for fifteen fees, there were thirteen and three-quarters returned of the old feoffment, and three and a quarter of the new, making a nominal excess of two fees, arising probably out of the new feoffments, on which an increased service was reserved. Simon Fitz Peter, sheriff of the county, rendered an account this year (14 Hen. 2) of £9. 3s. 4d. (13⅔ marks) received from Robert Foliot[k]; being the amount for his fees of the old feoffment; and it is probable that the aid on the new fees was remitted, as Dinant was not enfeoffed in Burton by him, but by the king, and Mowbray withheld the service from him. Robert Foliot was succeeded by his son

Richard Foliot, who in the hydarium of Hen. 2 was found to hold in "Wardone" two hides and a half, and a large virgate, viz. four parts of a knight's fee, of the king in capite[l]. In 6 Ric. (1194) he paid £13. 15s. to the scutage of 20s. each fee, levied for the ransom of the king, then treacherously taken prisoner by the emperor of Germany[m]; in 8 Ric. (1196) he paid the same sum to the scutage of Normandy[n]; and in 1 Joh. (1199) he owed £6 for the second scutage[o]. His daughter and heiress Margaret married

Wischard Ledet, who in 5 Joh. (1191) had the king's writ for the custody of the lands of his wife's grandmother Margaret Foliot, allowing her thereout an honorable maintenance[p]. On the pipe roll of the following year it was entered that Elias Foliot owed 200 marks (£133. 6s. 8d.) for an inquisition against Wischard Ledet, to try whether his mother, whose heir he was, died seised in demesne as of fee of "West Wardon," and for having seisin, if the verdict were in his favor; but his claim proved unsuccessful, as Wischard Ledet the same year rendered an account of 200 marks and two palfreys for the seisin of "West Wardon" with all its pertinencies, of which Richard Foliot, father of his wife Margaret, died seised[q]. In 13 Joh. (1211) Wischard Ledet was acquitted by writ of the scutage of Wales for thirteen fees and three quarters[r], being, it is presumed, personally present in that expedition. He died in 5 Hen. 3 (1221), leaving his daughter and heiress Christiana, wife of

Henry de Braybrok of Braybrook, who the same year were jointly charged with £100, the relief of a barony, for the lands of her late father[s]; and having livery of her inheritance, on payment of the relief the year following[t], he obtained writs of aid directed to the sheriffs of Northamptonshire, Cambridgeshire, and Bedfordshire, to distrain his knights for the scutage of two marks each fee, due to him, to enable him to discharge the escuage with which he stood charged at the exchequer for those fees which he held in capite[u]. He died in 18 Hen. 3 (1234)[x]; and Christiana his widow soon after married Gerard de Furnival, second son of Gerard de Furnival of Hallamshire, who in the Testa de Nevill about 19 Hen. 3 (1235) paid 8 marks (£5. 6s. 8d.) scutage for four fees in this county of the barony of Wardon[y]. After his death in 1241 (25 Hen. 3)[z] his widow resumed her patronymic—no unusual circumstance with great heiresses in those days; and accordingly in the list of knights' fees in the Testa de Nevill about this time, those of the barony of Wardon are entered as held by her in capite, by the name of Christiana Ledet[a]. In 29 Hen. 3 (1245) she paid £13. 10s. for thirteen fees and a half, to the scutage of one mark for marrying the king's eldest daughter[b]; in the following year she paid £27 for the same fees to the scutage of Gannoc[c]; and in 38 Hen. 3 (1254) she paid the same sum for the same fees, to the scutage for making the king's eldest son a knight[d]. She survived to a very advanced age, and died in 55 Hen. 3[e] (1271). By Gerard de Furnival her second husband she had a son Gerard de Furnival, to whom she gave (int. al.) lands at Hulme in Lincolnshire, and Burton Latimer; but her barony descended in the elder line of Henry de Braybrok her first husband, by whom she had two sons, Wischard, who adopted his mother's surname, and John, who retained his paternal appellation.

Wischard Braybrok or Ledet died in 1241 (25 Hen. 3)[z], when Mary his widow purchased of the abbot of Pipwell the wardship of her son Walter Ledet for the manor of Braybrook[f]; and in 26 Hen. 3 (1242) she rendered an account to the exchequer of £10, one year's reserved rent, for his relief of the manor of Corby held of the crown at fee farm[g]. Walter Ledet died prior to 41 Hen. 3 (1257), leaving two daughters and coheiresses, Alicia, and Christiana within age[f]. On the death of every tenant in capite the crown was entitled to the profits of the lands, with the wardship and marriage of the heirs during minority; or if the lands of which he died seised were held of mesne lords, they were entitled to the same privileges for the specific manors so held of them; but if the deceased held both in capite and of mesne lords, the right of the lords became merged in the crown. The barony of Wardon was at this time vested in Christiana Furnival or Ledet, but the king, either ignorant of this fact, or presuming that Walter held other lands in capite, granted the wardship of the heirs to queen Alianora, against whom a suit was instituted by the mesne lords under whom Walter held, and the sheriff of Northamptonshire was directed to summon a jury before the barons of exchequer, to inquire if Walter Ledet held of the king in capite, and how much, and how much of others, and by what service. Sir Richard de Harecourt was presented to hold in "Kinelingworth" [South Kilworth in Leicestershire] fourteen virgates, and in "Boresworth" [Husbands Bosworth in Leicestershire] forty-two virgates for one fee, of the fee of Foliot and of the honor of Wardon, by service of finding a horse to carry the harness ["hernes"] of a knight, and one man with horse and harness when the king went into Wales, which service the said Richard owed to lady Christiana de Furnival, and the said fee owed no other foreign service nor scutage; and if the said man were killed, Christiana was bound to provide Richard with another man in his stead. And by letter missive, dated 18 Aug. 41 Hen. 3 (1257), the king announces to his dear consort Alianora queen of England, that, because it appears by inquisition before the barons of exchequer that Walter Ledet held nothing in capite in Corby, but at fee farm, nor in "Langeton, Foxton, Gum'dle, Smitheton" [Langton, Foxton, Gumley, and Smeaton in Leicestershire], or "Braybroke," by which the custody of the lands and heirs of the said Walter belongs to the crown; and because sir Richard de Harecourt acknowledges to hold his land in "Kynelingworth and Boresworth" of Christiana Ledet, and not of Walter, nor said Walter of the crown;—it is adjudged that Thomas de Cressy, of whom the said Walter held the manor of "Langeton" by knight's service, who claims the said manor against the crown;—and the abbot of Pipewell, of whom the said Walter held lands in "Braybroke and Parva Boudon," and who claims custody of the said lands and heirs against the crown;—and William de Megnill, of whom the said Walter held the manors of "Gumundle and Foxton," and who claims custody of the said manors against the crown;—and Ralph de Turville, of whom the said Walter held the manor of "Smitheton," and who claims the custody of the said manor against the crown;—shall respectively recover seisin[h]. The abbot of Pipewell sold the wardship of these coheiresses the following year for 200 marks (£133. 6s. 8d.) to Ermentrude their mother[h]. On the decease of their great-grandmother Christiana Furnival, or Ledet, as she was indifferently called, they became tenants in capite, as coheiresses of the barony of Wardon, when their wardship escheated to the king, who gave Alicia the eldest in marriage to William de Latimer, and Christiana the youngest to his brother John de Latimer. 'These two gentlemen,' says Bridges, 'attended upon Prince Edward in his expedition into the Holy Land, and were with him at the siege of Acres. During this siege King Henry died, and the Earl of Gloucester was appointed regent of the kingdom in King Edward's absence. In the mean time Christian de Furnival died also, and upon her decease John de Braybroc her younger son seized on the lands of her inheritance. Sir William Latimer, informed of this proceeding, made his complaints of it to the King, and acquainted him that whilst he was discharging his duty in his attendance upon his Majesty, he was in danger of losing the estate, which by right of inheritance had devolved upon him in England. The King hereupon dismissed him from his service, and gave him letters to the Earl of Gloucester, requiring that reparation should be made him for the injuries he had received, and that his lands should be restored. Upon his coming into England, Sir John de Braybroc, to shelter himself from the storm which threatened him, made his application to the Earl of Gloucester, and gave up to him all the lands on which he had seized. The Earl of Gloucester kept them in his own hands; and tho' Sir William Latimer presented him with the King's letters, he could not prevail upon him to restore them, till he had given him twelve hundred marks (£800) for the delivery, and then partition was made of them between the two sisters.' The fact of the douceur to the earl may be doubted, as his surrender seems to have been compulsory, for in 2 Edw. 1 (1274) a writ of scire facias was issued by the sheriff of this county against Gilbert de Clare earl of Gloucester, requiring him to shew cause why the King should not render the manor of West Wardon to William le Latymer and Alicia his wife, and John le Latymer and Christiana his wife, the heirs of Christiana Ledet; and the earl failing to appear, the escheator was commanded to give them full seisin[k]. During their absence on foreign service, the castle guard to Rockingham from the barony of Wardon was not duly rendered, which led to an inquisition at Geddington in 8 Edw. 1 (1280) before Robert de Holebrook, by Robert de Hotot, Guy de Waterville, Hugh Daundelyn, Nicholas de Wymale (Withemale), and Roger de Lisle, at the suit of William de Eylesford and the men of Burton, who made oath, that lady Christiana de Furnival formerly had the barony of Wardon with fifteen fees thereto belonging, rendering yearly 75s. to the castle guard of Rockingham, and that she also held the manor of Burton, then in possession of the said William de Eylesford [who acquired it by grant from her son Gerard de Furnival], and that being distrained at Wardon by the bailiff of the castle of Rockingham for payment of the said ward, she collected and transmitted it to Burton to be paid by her bailiff there; and in consequence the bailiff of the castle of Rockingham had for eight years immediately succeeding the death of Christiana unjustly distrained the men of the manor of Burton, until William de Eylesford obtained the king's writ to Robert de Holebrook for holding the present inquisition. The jurors presented that three years' castle guard was due at the feast of St. Michael last, but that the manor of Burton was not of the fee of the barony of Wardon, nor were the men of Burton bound to pay or contribute towards the said ward. That the heirs of Christiana ought to levy it annually of the fees of the said barony, and pay it at St. Michael to the king's bailiff of the castle of Rockingham, as she had been accustomed to do, before she assigned the men of Burton to acquit the ward; and if the said ward were in arrear, either in whole or in part, the bailiff of Rockingham used and ought to distrain for the same in the manor of West Wardon, which was the capital manor of the barony. That William le Latimer and John le Latimer, who married the heirs of Christiana, collected but withheld the said ward, except 13s. 4d. yearly, which the men of Burton had received from Sitheston in Lincolnshire for three years, and 17s. 6d. yearly, which they had received for eight years, viz. 5s. from Harrowden and Cogenho, 5s. from Isham, 5s. from Sulby, and 2s. 6d. from Aldwinckle. That Roger de Nevill, John Spicot, and sir Robert de Waufre prior of Wroxton, held four fees in Setheston, Willoughby and Hounesby in Lincolnshire, and Wroxton in Oxfordshire, and ought to render to the said ward of Rockingham 20s. yearly. That William son of Nicholas de Cogenho holds one fee in Harrowden and Cogenho, and ought to render 5s.

yearly. That Henry de Isham holds one fee in Isham, and ought to render 5s. yearly. That the abbot of Sulby holds one fee in Sulby, and ought to render 5s. yearly. That Henry de Aldwinckle holds half a fee in Aldwinckle, and ought to render 2s. 6d. yearly. That the heirs of West Wardon ought to acquit two fees [for West Wardon], and the fourth of a fee granted in alms at Sulby, and render 11s. 3d. yearly. That Alexander de Somersham holds the fourth part of a fee, and ought to render 1s. 3d. yearly. That the prior of Barnwell holds in Barton in Cambridgeshire, and Robert de Ho and Beatrice his wife in Eversden in the same county, three fees, and ought to render 15s. yearly. That Reginald de Argentyne holds one fee in Weldeburn in the same county, and ought to render 5s. yearly. That Henry son of sir William de Cheney holds in Long Stanton in the same county half a fee, and ought to render 2s. 6d. yearly. That Richard Franceis holds half a fee in Wimpole and Wastlingworth in the same county, and ought to render 2s. 6d. yearly. And that, except as to the two aforesaid sums which they had received from Sitheston in Lincolnshire, and Harrowden, &c. the men of Burton had, from the death of Christiana to St. Michael last, unjustly paid 75s. yearly to the castle guard of Rockingham[l].

Few territorial baronies, it is presumed, have furnished such a curious and connected chain of incidents as the one now under consideration; no apology therefore for indulging in a minuteness of detail foreign to the general plan of this work, is need be offered to those who feel interested in developing the laws and customs of feudal times; nor will its subsequent descent be found uninteresting, when viewed in relation to the important constitutional question so ably and elaborately treated in the report of the committee of the house of lords on the peerage—whether the possessor of a barony by tenure was ipso facto a peer of the realm, and entitled to demand of the crown a writ of summons to parliament.

John le Latimer died in 11 Edw. 1 (1283) seised jure ux. of the entire manor of West Wardon, two parts of the manor of Braybrook, one-third of the manor of Corby, and rents in Weldon[m]. In 13 Edw. 1 (1285) Christiana le Latimer his widow was called by writ of quo warranto to shew why she claimed view of frank pledge and wayf in Wardon, and the hundred of West Wardon, when she pleaded that holding these privileges jointly with Alicia wife of William le Latimer of the inheritance of Walter Ledet their father, she could not answer without said Alicia and William, who being summoned, they jointly pleaded that the manor of West Wardon was the capital manor of the barony of Ledet, to which the hundred with the view of frank pledge and wayf belonged, and which they and their ancestors had enjoyed from time beyond memory without impeachment. The king's attorney prayed judgment for the king, on the ground that long seisin was not a sufficient warrant without a royal grant. The jurors presented that William and Christiana had held a great hundred court yearly after St. Michael, in which they inquired concerning all articles incident to view of frank pledge, but put no one to oath, yet nevertheless punished transgressors against the assize of bread and beer, the sheriff, at his succeeding tourn neither altering nor superseding any of the presentments then made; and that the said William le Latimer had granted to Christiana the entirety of the said manor and hundred, which had come to him in coparceny, and had taken other lands for his purparty which were not held of the king. Afterwards William and Christiana appeared by their attornies in the octaves of the blessed Mary; but because William was abroad with the king the hearing was postponed to Easter, then to St. Michael, and again to Easter, when Christiana not appearing, the privileges were taken into the king's hands, and a day appointed for final judgment[n]. In 18 Edw. 1 (1290), a final partition, probably, having been effected between the coheirs, Christiana Latimer did homage for her moiety of the lands of Henry de Braybroc and Christiana Ledet[o]; and in 20 Edw. 1 (1292) died seised of the manor and hundred of Wardon, held of the king by the service of two fees and a half, manor of Braybrook, moiety of the manor of Corby, and lands and rents in Rowell, Little Bowden, Rushton, Desborough, Carlton, and Weldon, leaving

Sir Thomas Latimer her son and heir aged twenty-two years[p]. He was summoned to parliament from 18 Edw. 1 to 4 Edw. 2, but never afterwards, nor any of his descendants. In 3 Edw. 3 (1329), in plea to a quo warranto, he substantiated his right to the same privileges in the town and hundred of West Wardon, which were allowed to his mother Christiana Latimer in 13 Edw. 1, with the addition of gallows and infangtheof, a weekly market every Tuesday, and free warren; and also successfully claimed to have view of frank pledge and wayf in Braybrook and Carlton, free warren in Braybrook, Desborough, and Little Bowden, and to crenellate or embattle his mansion at Braybrook[q]. He died in 8 Edw. 3 (1334), and was succeeded by Warine Latimer his son and heir aged twenty-six years[r], who did not immediately enter into full possession of Wardon, as one-third was held in dower by Lora, his father's second wife[s], a circumstance, however, scarcely deserving notice, except in refutation of an opinion that the lord of a barony could not endow his wife in the whole or any part of the capital manor. Warine Latimer, the following year, 9 Edw. 3, settled the remaining two-thirds of Wardon, with the reversion of the other third on himself and his wife Catherine for life, remainder to his right heirs[t]; and dying in 23 Edw. 3 (1349) left John Latimer his son and heir aged fifteen years[u], but Catherine his widow survived till 35 Edw. 3 (1361), when Wardon descended to Thomas Latimer Bochard, her third but eldest surviving son, aged twenty years[x]. He was afterwards knighted, and on his decease without issue in 2 Hen. 4 (1401) the family estates passed to his brother and heir sir Edward Latimer[y], who died without issue in 12 Hen. 4 (1411), and John Griffin, son of Richard, son of his sister Elizabeth (by sir Thomas Griffin of Weston Favell), was found to be his next heir[z]; but Wardon was (int. al.) held in dower by Margaret his widow, afterwards wife of Nicholas Merbury, on whose death in 9 Hen. 5 (1421), Margaret Hastings of the county of Devon was returned to be her sister and heiress, but Wardon, and all her dower, descended to the said John Griffin, as heir of her late husband[a].

Under the erroneous impression of William Latimer being summoned to parliament by virtue of the barony of Wardon, he has been adduced in proof of the right of primogeniture having been anciently recognised in the descent of baronies by tenure, to females[b]; but the case is founded in a radical error, for though, as husband of Alice the elder coheiress, he had certainly the privilege of pre-emption, it has been indisputably shewn in the preceding narrative, that on the partition of the inheritance of the sisters, Wardon was included in the purparty of Christiana the junior coheiress. William Latimer, senior, husband of Alice, William Latimer, junior, their son, and Thomas Latimer, son of Christiana, were all summoned to parliament in 28 Edw. 1 (1299). William Latimer, junior, it is rather remarkable, had been summoned in 27 Edw. 1 (1298-9), prior either to his father or uncle; and in the barons' letter to the pope in 29 Edw. 1 (1301) William Latimer, senior, signed himself "d'n's de Corby," a manor of which he held only a moiety at fee farm; from whence it is obvious to infer that the local addition appended to a parliamentary baron did not invariably designate the title of his barony, but often simply denoted the principal place of residence, whether held in capite, at fee farm, or by subinfeudation. The dignity of a baron of the realm, which vested in this branch of Latimer, descended by the heir general to Neville baron Latimer, whose pedigree has been introduced under STOWE.

But to return to the barony of Wardon. Writs of summons to parliament continued to be regularly directed to Thomas Latimer till 4 Edw. 2, when they ceased, though the ground of omission seems inexplicable, as he was summoned by writ to the performance of military service from 7 Edw. 2 to 7 Edw. 3, the year preceding his death. Similar writs were issued to his son and successor Warine Latimer, but he never occurs as a parliamentary baron, which naturally leads to, if it do not justify, the conclusion, that the parliamentary writs to his father neither arose out of a barony by tenure, nor created an hereditary personal barony; for in either case the son would have been entitled to succeed to the dignity. The sole representation of the Latimers of Wardon, on the failure of the male line, vested, agreeably to the subjoined pedigree, in the issue of Elizabeth Griffin, and the right therefore to the barony, if any, was undivided, but nevertheless unclaimed by any of her descendants; had there been coheirs, it would of course have fallen into abeyance, which would have accounted for the apparent extinction or non-claim of the barony. As, then, the privilege of peerage was not carried beyond Thomas Latimer, nor even enjoyed by him for life, but for a few years only, it may not be altogether unwarrantable to assume, that in this instance the honor was conferred, and subequently withheld, by an apparently capricious exercise of the royal prerogative, and without regard to any other qualification of title in the object of it, than a certain degree of wealth and importance attached to extensive possessions.

John Griffin, esq. the heir of Latimer, died in Feb. 23 Hen. 6 (1444-5), and having no issue his estates resorted to his nephew and heir Nicholas Griffin, esq.[c] Reserving the account of the Griffins for BRAYBROOK, their principal residence, to avoid repetition, the intervening period is passed over to 10 Dec. 4 Eliz. (1561), when, by an indenture tripartite, between sir Thomas Griffin of Braybrook, Thomas Markham, esq. of Allerton in Nottinghamshire, and Mary his wife, daughter and heiress of Rice Griffin, esq. deceased, son and heir apparent of sir Thomas, and Edward Griffin, esq. of Dingley (late attorney-general, and brother of sir Thomas), reciting that doubts and disputes had arisen whether the inheritance of dame Jane late wife of sir Thomas, and of sir Thomas or either of them, should descend after his decease to the heir male of sir Thomas and Jane, with remainder to the said Edward in tail male, or to the said Mary in fee, or fee tail, it was mutually agreed by the mediation of their friends, and for appeasing all suits, that the said Thomas and Mary should have the manors and lands in the counties of Somerset, Gloucester, and Pembroke, of the inheritance of dame Jane, from the decease of sir Thomas till the heir male of Thomas his son and heir apparent should attain the age of twenty-one years, with ultimate remainder to Mary in fee; and that the said Thomas and Mary should release, and assure by fine, if required, the castle and manor of Braybrook, and manors, &c. of "Chipping Wardon alias West Wardon," Weston Favell, and Thorp Lubenham in Northamptonshire, and Gumley in Leicestershire, of the inheritance of sir Thomas from Nicholas his father, deceased, to the said sir Thomas in tail male, remainder to the said Edward in tail male[d].

Sir Thomas Griffin, by will 25 Apr. 8 Eliz. (1566), devised this and other manors to his executors, in trust during the life of his son Thomas[d], and died in August following, seised (int. al.) of the manor and hundred of Chipping Wardon, held in capite by payment of 60s. (originally 75s.) yearly to the ward of Rockingham castle, for the reparation of the tower called Griffin's tower, then waste, leaving Mary, wife of Thomas Markham, esq. his heir general, aged 21 years, and Thomas Griffin, his son and heir male, aged 35 years, but who, for twelve years past, had been a dumb idiot and lunatic[e]. Markham and his wife, in Easter term 9 Eliz. (1567), pursuant to the covenant in the deed of settlement in 4 Eliz. levied a fine (int. al.) of the manor, advowson, and hundred of Chipping Wardon, the nominal cognisee being Clement Catesbye[d], one of the subscribing witnesses to sir Thomas's will.

Thomas Griffin, the son, did not long survive, for in 12 Eliz. (1569) his uncle

Edward Griffin, esq. died in possession of the settled estates in Northamptonshire and Leicestershire, and was succeeded by his son and heir Edward Griffin, esq.[f] afterwards knighted, who appears to have sold the manor, advowson, and hundred of Chipping Wardon to

Sir Richard Saltonstall prior to 17 Jac. (1619), in which year he died seised of them[g]. From him they descended conformably with the subjoined pedigree, to Ricarda Posthuma Saltonstall, first wife of

The Hon. George Montagu, afterwards 2nd earl of Halifax, by whom she had an only surviving daughter and heiress Lucy, first wife of Francis North 1*st earl of Guilford*. Their eldest son Frederick lord North filled the arduous and responsible situation of prime minister during the American war; which, combined with the circumstance of Sulgrave, the preceding parish, having furnished the descent of Washington, the hero of American independence in that eventful contest, presents such a singular and interesting coincidence, as the local pride of the historian cannot suffer to pass unnoticed. In 1792, by the death of his father, lord North succeeded to the earldom of Guilford, which has been successively enjoyed by his three sons, the youngest of whom, Frederick, is the 5th earl, and the present lord of this manor and hundred.

Castle. The site of the castle, or baronial residence of the ancient lords, is indicated by earth works, south of the church, in the grounds between the entrance lodge to Edgcote and the mansion.

The Manor House stands east of the church, and was built by the Saltonstalls in the seventeenth century.

The Village is on the turnpike road from Daventry to Banbury, about eleven miles from the former, and six from the latter place. In the time of Bridges it consisted of 'about eighty families[h].' On the 23d of May 1799, about 4 o'clock P.M. a destructive fire broke out in this village, occasioned by a man blowing asunder some logs of firewood with gunpowder. In the course of two hours 74 bays of building, including the Griffin Inn, were destroyed, together with household furniture, corn, &c. to the estimated value of nearly £1500, exclusive of the premises. By the census of 1801, Wardon contained 59 houses, and 294 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 92 houses and 438 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 91 houses and 488 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £171. 8s. 4d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2762. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £653. 3s. 1d. at 5s. 3d. in the £. The wake follows St. Peter.

MARKET. Wischard Ledet, in 4 Hen. 3 (1219) owed to the king a palfrey for the grant of a weekly market at his manor of Wardon[i]. In 11 Hen. 3 (1226) and 22 Hen. 3 (1237), mandates issued to the sheriff prohibiting the market at Wardon as injurious to the bishop of Lincoln's market at Banbury[k]; but before the expiration of the latter year Gerard de Furnival obtained a re-grant of the market at Wardon[l]. Sir Thomas Latimer established his right to a weekly market here every Tuesday, in plea to a quo warranto in 3 Edw. 3 (1329)[m]; and at his death the profit arising from it was returned at 3s. 6d. yearly[n]. In 12 Ric. 2 (1388) his grandson '[o] sir Thomas 'Latimer named Bouchard, brought an action against William Sleugh, the vicar of Blakesley, for disturbing the 'market which he held in Wardon. The vicar pleaded that he acted only as dean of Brackley to serve the summons 'of John bishop of Lincoln upon John Wodarde of Knebbeworth. This John Wodarde, it seems, was a capellan 'residing in Cheping-Wardon, and stood charged with maintaining and spreading abroad divers heresies and errors, 'and publicly preaching against the belief of the Catholic church in sundry parts of the diocese of Lincoln.' No further notice of this market occurs, and it probably soon after fell into disuse. The steps and base of the market cross are still remaining near the church-yard wall.

THE ADVOWSON has been always regardant to the manor. Robert Foliot, with the consent of Margaret his wife, between the years 1147 and 1166, granted to the churches of Burton (Latimer) and Wardon, and the lands thereto belonging, perpetual acquittance from all secular customs and services, except those due to the crown[p]. In 4 Edw. 2 (1310) Alicia widow of William le Latimer, and one of the heirs of Christiana Ledet, remised to Thomas le Latimer son of John le Latimer the other heir, in fee, her claim to alternate presentation to the church of "West Wardon" in Northamptonshire; in consideration of which he remised to her in fee his claim of alternate presentation to Sutton near Biggleswade in Bedfordshire, another of the Ledet advowsons. To the deed is appended an oval seal of dark brown wax, with the arms of Latimer and Ledet or Braybrook on separate shields suspended from a tree, and circumscribed "Sigillum Alicie le Latimer[q]." This advowson has since uninterruptedly attended the inheritance of the manor down to the earl of Guilford, the present patron.

THE RECTORY is in the deanry of Brackley. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[r], and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[s], it was rated at 24 marks (£16) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at £27. 0s. 7d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[t]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage presentative worth £88 per ann. in the patronage of Richard Saltonstall, esq. and that Richard Stanwick was incumbent[u]. The commissioners of inclosure allotted to the rector 14a. 0r. 31p. for the glebe land, and an annual rent-charge of £200 in lieu of the tithes; but by act of parliament 49 Geo. 3 (1809) the earl of Guilford granted to the rector 103 a. 1 r. 11 p. in Wardon, in commutation of the rent-charge. The rector receives £3. 5s. 8d. per ann. for the tithes of that portion of West Wardon which is this parish. The rectory house is a neat residence north-west of the church.

James Stanwix, and a native of Carlisle. From the free school there, he was admitted a servitor of Queen's college, Oxford. Having entered into holy orders he became successively chaplain to the lord keepers Coventry and Finch; but on the latter nobleman withdrawing to the continent from the approaching political storm, he retired to his college, where he remained till he obtained this rectory. He published "A Holy Life "here, the only way to eternal Life hereafter; or a dis-"course on 2 Cor. 10. 4. wherein this truth is especially "asserted, that a holy Life, or the habitual observing "of the laws of Christ, is indispensably necessary to "Salvation: with an Appendix, laying open the com-"mon neglect of the said laws amongst Christians, and "vindicating such necessity of observing them from "those general exceptions that are wont to be made "against it." 1652. 8vo. He also prepared a work on the Socinian controversy, which was never made public. He was buried here 10 Apr. 1656[y], and was succeeded by

Edward Bathurst, B.D. son of George Bathurst, esq. of Hothorp, who, after the restoration, to corroborate his title, was inst. 14 Nov. 1662, on the presentation of Richard Saltonstall, esq. He was buried here 21 Nov. 1668[y], and

Barnard Maunder or Mander was inst. 17 Dec. following. He was buried here 1 June 1703[y], when

John Evans, prebendary of Peterborough, was presented by Ricarda Saltonstall, spinster, and inst. 4 Nov. following; on whose decease

John Spencer of Wadham coll. Oxf. A.M. already noticed under Eydon, was inst. 27 Sept. 1719, on the presentation of George earl of Halifax. After enjoying this benefice between fifty and sixty years he was buried here 2 Feb. 1773[y] in his 80th year, when

Matthew Lamb of Queen's coll. Oxf. D.D. was presented by Francis 1st earl of Guilford, and inst. 29 May following. He was also chancellor of the diocese of Oxford, prebendary of Lichfield and Worcester, and rector of Harvington in the latter county. He was buried here 19 Apr. 1797[y], and

The hon. Henry Lewis Hobart of Christ. Ch. coll. Camb. A.M. 1797, D.D. 1816, son of George 3rd earl of Buckinghamshire, was inst. 19 Feb. 1798, on the presentation of his brother in law George Augustus earl of Guilford. He was rector of Edgcote from 1801 to 1815, and is now dean of Windsor and of Wolverhampton, and registrar of the order of the garter. His resignation introduced

John Lamb of Queen's coll. Oxf. D.D. rector of Charwelton, and vicar of Banbury in Oxfordshire, son of the rev. Dr. Lamb, the former rector of this parish. He was inst. 4 Nov. 1815, on the presentation of Francis earl of Guilford, and resigned the vicarage of Banbury, but continues to hold the rectory of Charwelton with this benefice.

The Registers commence in 1580.

The Church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, consists of a tower containing five bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, chancel, and north vestry. The tower is a neat specimen of the Perpendicular style towards the close of the fourteenth or beginning of the fifteenth century. It has plain diagonal buttresses of several stages, and terminates with crocketted pinnacles. The western entrance so nearly resembles the one described at Edgcote, as to leave little doubt of its being the work of the same architect; the division above has a handsome window between two canopied niches. In the north aisle are three beautiful Decorated windows of three lights, with four elongated flowing trefoils within a circle in the head, and the mouldings remarkably good. The dripstone springs from small corbel heads. The windows in the south aisle and chancel are various, some being of Decorated, and others of Perpendicular character. On each side of the clerestory are three windows of the latter period. The tower is 16 ft. long, by 15 ft. 6 in. wide; the nave 49 ft. 6 in. by 15 ft. 6 in.; the aisles 65 ft. 6 in. long, the north aisle 17 ft. and the south aisle 21 ft. 2 in. wide; the chancel 36 ft. by 16 ft. 8 in.; and the vestry 24 ft. 9 in. by 9 ft. 3 in. The interior is well paved and pewed. There is a low open arch on lofty pillars between the nave and the tower. Both aisles extend westward as far as the tower, from which each is divided by an open arch on demi-octagonal pillars, and from the nave by four lofty pointed arches on handsome clustered pillars with capitals of plain mouldings in series, and bases of the same with square plinths: the archivolt is of several mouldings, and the whole connected by a dripstone springing from demi-angels in the spandrils. At the east end of the north aisle is the burial place of the lords of the manor. On the south side is an oblique opening in the wall communicating with the vestry; and near it on a pedestal a piscina under a small trefoiled niche. At the east end of the south aisle are three parallel seats under arches on pillars with capitals, and to the eastward connected with them by the string course, a piscina. In the south wall of the chancel is another piscina.

BENEFACTIONS (p. 468). Bathurst's Charity arises out of certain lands in Thorp Mandeville devised to the master and fellows of Trinity college, Oxford, in trust for charitable purposes.

Bridges states that 'One messuage and an half yard land, let at about VIIIl a year, are settled upon the poor'. The commissioners of inclosure allotted to the trustees in lieu of the half yard land and commons, 25 a. 1 r. 21 p. which, with the messuage called the Inn, are now let for £80 per ann.

BRINAVIS,

One of the Roman stations in the eighteenth iter of Richard of Cirencester*, is placed by Stukeley at Banbury[a] in Oxfordshire, and by the rev. Mr. Leman, in his valuable commentary on Richard, at Black Grounds near Chipping Norton[b] in the same county—a misprint, as he has since admitted to me, for Chipping Wardon; and that this is its actual site, there will be found abundant evidence to prove. Brinavis was the intermediate station between Isannavaria (Burnt Walls near Daventry), and Ælia Castra (Alcester near Bicester in Oxfordshire); the given distances between each stage accord with Black Grounds; and Morton and Bridges, though unaware of the existence of this station, as it does not occur in any of the iters of Antoninus, have yet unconsciously assisted in its appropriation, by giving detached notices of the Port Way, by which name the road of this portion of the iter was designated.

The point whence this road diverged from the Watling street has been incidentally adverted to under Isannavaria*, as well as its subsequent course through Preston Capes†, by Woodford and Eydon‡, to Black Grounds. From hence to Ælia Castra the line of country points by Thenford and Rainsborough camp to the east end of Aynho, where the Port Way is again recognised in the direction of Souldern in Oxfordshire. Alcester stands east of the intersection of Akeman Street and the Portway, not far from Kirtlington, near which place, Plot, in his "Oxfordshire," states there are two branches out of the Akeman Street. "One at the Town's end, which though "presently discontinued, yet points just upon the Port way running East of Northbrook, the two Heyfords, Som- "merton, and Souldern, for six miles together; and another that by its pointing seems to have come out of "Akeman-street nearer the place where it passes the River Cherwell, crossing the Port way, and running at the "broadest place, scarce a mile distant from it, as far as Fritwell, where on the North side of the Town it inclines "towards the Port way, as if it joyned with it again, somewhere about Souldern, both of them pointing upon the "Fortification called Rainsborough near Charleton in Northamptonshire: whence in all probability it went to "Fennonis alias Bennonis, an old Roman station, by the Saxons after called Claycester, in the confines of Warwick "and Leicestershires: and so on to the Ratæ of Antoninus or Ragæ of Ptolemy now Leicester." "This second "branch of Akeman street about Fritwell they call Wattle-bank; but in an old Terrier of Sir Thomas Chamberlayne "it is called Avesdich, perhaps a corruption of Offa's ditch, the great King of the Mercians, whose Kingdom might "at first be terminated here, though I find he extended it at length as far as Benson, as thinking it for his honor "and profit both, that the West Saxons should have nothing North or West of the Thames. Or if ancienter than "Offa, it might perhaps be a prætentura or fore-fence of the Romans raised against the Britons (or vice versa), who "might possibly be possest of the Port way before. Yet I rather believe they might be both of them ancient ways, "though so near together, for we read that the Romans, where the way was not well laid out, or was longer than "needed, did commonly (to keep the people from idleness, and the Soldiers from mutinies) lay them straiter "and better[c].

Morton observes that "Chipping Wardon, as appears by the Name of it, was a Town of Resort in the Saxon "times; Chipping being derived from Ceapan, to buy or cheapen, and importing that it was a Market Town. "And that it was of earlier note, a place frequented by the Romans, appears by their Coins that are often met "with there; several of which I have seen. The Roman Money, which is there call'd Coster, corruptly I believe "for Caster Pence, and sometimes Danes Money, is chiefly found upon a Ground they call the Black Ground, as "being of a darker Colour than other Parts of the Field, upon 3 Furlongs, which are thought to contain nigh "40 Acres. In plowing upon and near the same Ground they have frequently met with Foundation Stones, and "other hewn Stones, and amongst them many Stones that are red and brittle, appearing plainly to have been "scorch'd or burnt: And with these they plow up Ashes; which is a Confirmation of the Tradition so current "amongst them, that on that Place stood the true Chipping Wardon where the Market was, about a quarter of "a Mile Eastward from the present Wardon, which they call West Wardon, with respect of its Situation to the "other; the true Chipping Wardon or East Wardon, being on the East side of Wallow Bank, and of the New "Wardon: and that the Market Town was burnt down[d]."

Though the epithet Cheping or Chipping Wardon be derived from the Saxon, it by no means follows that the market here was co-eval; the grant of it cannot be carried higher than the thirteenth century; the relative term West has been shewn to admit a very different correllate to the one just assigned; and the tradition might, unconsciously to the reporters, have originated in the destruction of the Roman settlement. Incontrovertible indicia of Roman occupation have continued to be discovered down to the present time; and amongst other Roman coins found here, I have in my possession two of the small brass of Valens and Victorinus. A few years since some foundations were dug up by some workmen immediately below Black Ground in a small meadow north of the Charwell on the estate of Thomas Carter, esq. whose kindness permitted me in 1824 to investigate the spot; but though no foundations were traced, the spade was scarcely ever put into the ground without throwing up fragments of Roman urns and pottery of different kinds; and a small lead-colored urn, found since in digging a trench in the same meadow, has been lately presented to me by the rev. Dr. Lamb. Black Ground or Brinavis is nearly a mile south-east of

Wallow Bank, with which it has been sometimes confounded*. The vallum known by that appellation—a compound probably of the Saxon pall, a wall, and lop, a tumulus or agger, with the modern re-duplication of bank—is now confined to a small portion, in a garden at the north entrance to the village. Its bearing is north and south; and its construction, as ascertained by a section cut through it in 1824, is a simple rampart of adventitious earth, nearly perpendicular on the west side, and sloping gradually on the east. In a field a short distance south-west of the village is Arbury or Arberry Bank, which Morton supposes to have been a camp formed by the West Saxons in their wars with the Mercians, or by the Danes prior to the battle on Danesmoor in Edgcote lordship; an opinion which has been implicitly adopted by succeeding writers. On a minute personal examination of the spot, however, it appears not to have been a camp, or inclosed intrenchment, but a line of vallum, which, if not a component part of, certainly coalesced with, Wallow Bank. At the northern extremity it makes a sharp angle to the east, traversing a field where it is clearly visible though reduced in height, and crossing the turnpike road to a clump of trees at the head of a small lane leading into the village: from these trees, which are planted upon it, its progress northwards is distinctly marked inside the wall to the right of the turnpike road, after quitting which, occasional slight indications may be observed at the back of the village in its way to the point of junction.

Morton conjectures Wallow Bank to have extended southward to the Charwell below Walton, "that is, the "Town upon the Bank or Wall" between Aynho and King's Sutton, and "Northward by Aston in the Wall to "the River Leam, each way about eight miles; and combats the opinion that "Our Wallow Bank is a part of "Wattle Bank or Aves-ditch in Oxfordshire," and that the whole was raised for a boundary betwixt the West "Saxons and Mercians[f];" adducing in conclusion various arguments to prove it was a "Pretentura or Forefence "of the Romans, constructed to secure their Conquests Eastward of that Vallum from the frequent Incursions of "the Natives of the Warwickshire Forests[g]." Whether the line of vallum under the different appellations of Wallow Bank, Arbury Bank, and Wattle Bank, was connected and contemporary, or to what period, or people to be attributed, I shall decline, at least for the present, hazarding an opinion, in the hope that my future local investigations for the ensuing portion of this work may throw some clearer light on the subject.

STONETON OR STAUNTON,

In domesday "Stantone," is evidently derived from the saxon stan, a stone, and tone, a town, though it has now lost all its significancy. This lordship is generally considered a member of Chipping Wardon parish, being assessed with it to the land and assessed taxes, and militia, but is in every other respect independent of it. The lord of the manor supports the poor, and pays a half-yearly stipend to the vicar of Priors Hardwick in Warwickshire; to which church the inhabitants of Stoneton resort for worship and other ecclesiastical purposes. Stoneton maintains its own roads, as well as poor, and pays no church rates. It is bounded on the north by Priors Hardwick; on the east by Boddington; and on the south and west by Wormleighton in Warwickshire. It is all old inclosure, and contains about 700 acres, the property of earl Spencer. The soil is a strong clay, and the whole is in permanent pasture.

MANORIAL HISTORY. STAFFORD FEE. Before the Norman conquest "Stantone" belonged to Ælieva, and was rated at 10s. yearly, but was trebled in value at the domesday survey, when it was held by Hugh, of Robert de Statford, for three virgates. The arable land was three carucates, of which one was in demesne with three servants, and the remaining two in the occupation of six villeins and five bordars. There were three acres of meadow[h].

Robert de Stafford had no other manor in this county, but his possessions in the counties of Stafford, Warwick, Worcester, Lincoln, and Suffolk, were very extensive, and descended to his great-grandson Robert de Stafford, on whose decease s. p. they devolved on his sister and heiress Milicent, whose husband Hervey Bagot in 5 Ric. (1194) had livery of the barony of Stafford, of her inheritance[i]. Antiquaries have differed in their appropriation of this individual, but the present noble representative of the Bagots, in his interesting memorials of the family, observes that "after the most attentive and repeated examinations of every document bearing upon the subject of this "Hervey Bagot's descent, it is evident, almost to demonstration, that he must have been the brother of Simon "Bagot of Bromley; and, consequently, like him, in the third generation from the Bagot who held that manor "at the time of the domesday survey[k]." His descendants adopted the maternal name of Stafford, and were paramount lords of Stoneton.

MANOR. 'In the account of Knights' fees in the reign of Edward 1. John Durevassall and Richard de 'Offington are said to hold each of them in Stoneton a moiety of one small fee of Hervey Bagot of Stafford.' In 9 Edw. 2 (1315) Robert Durevassall was certified to be lord of Stonton in the hundred of Wardon[m]. 'In the 'twentieth year of Edward III. the said Robert accounted for half a knight's fee in Stoneton, as held of the fee of 'Leicester; in which last record it is also assigned to the Hundred of Wardon in the county of Northampton.'

In 23 Hen. 8 (1531) sir William Spencer levied a fine of Stoneton manor[o], and died seised the year following, leaving John Spencer his son and heir aged 10 years[p], afterwards knighted, from whom it has descended by the same title as ALTHORP to George John 2nd earl Spencer, the present proprietor.

STONETON consists only of the manor-house and three detached cottages, but 'is supposed to have been 'formerly a town, as the foundations of walls, in ploughing and digging up the ground, have sometimes been met 'with[q].' The old manor-house was taken down in 1810, and a plain farm-house built on its site, which, 'including the garden, &c. occupies about two acres, and is surrounded by a deep wide moat fed by neighbouring springs.

WOODFORD,

In domesday "Wodeford," is probably compounded of the saxon wob, a wood, and ford, a ford, though the appellation no longer continues applicable. In modern times it has been frequently called Woodford Halse, from the manor of Halse, of which it is a member, and to distinguish it from Woodford in Huxlow hundred. The parish includes the hamlets of Farndon and Hinton, and a portion of West Wardon. Woodford, exclusive of its members, was inclosed by act of parliament in 32 Geo. 2 (1758), and contains about 1050 acres, of which about 55 acres belong to the vicar, in right of his church; about 230 acres to the rev. sir Henry Dryden of Canons Ashby, bart.; about 140 acres to Mr. Thomas Earl of Wedon Beck; about 105 acres to Mr. Richard Tew; and about 100 acres to Mr. Marshall of Solihull in Warwickshire. It is bounded on the north by Charwelton in Fawsley hundred; north-east by Preston Capes in the same hundred; south-east by Canons Ashby in Norton hundred; south by Eydon; and west by Byfield. The soil is a light loam on the hills, and a stiff clay in the valley, with some gravel near the village. The great oolite of this lordship, which, about half a mile east-south-east of the village, is extensively worked as limestone quarries, furnishes the following organic remains: *Belemnites. Manorial History. Grentemaisnil Fee†. Honor of Winchester‡. "Wodeford" was the freehold of Baldwin before the Norman conquest, and was rated at 40s. yearly, but was increased to 60s. at the domesday survey, when it was held by Richard of Hugh de Grentemaisnil. It contained two hides. The arable land was five carucates; two of which were in demesne with four servants and a maiden, and eleven villeins had the remaining three. There were two acres of meadow, and a mill worth 8s. yearly [a]. Parnel or Petronilla, the eldest coheiress of Grentemaisnil, married Robert Blanchmaines earl of Leicester, and on the partition of that earldom § the paramouncy of this manor was assigned (int. al.) to Saher de Quincy, and thus became annexed to the honor of Winchester, of which the capital manor in this county was Halse or Hawes in Brackley; and in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) Maud, widow of Robert Holand, in plea to a writ of quo warranto, recited her descent from Quincy, and substantiated her claim to view of frank pledge twice a year in "Wodeford" and the other members of her manor of Hawes [b].

Manor. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 Osmund [Basset] was returned to hold two hides in "Wodeford" of the fee of the earl of Leicester [c]; and by inquisition after the death of Roger de Quincy earl of Winchester, 54 Hen. 3 (1269), Richard Basset was found to have held one fee of him in "Wudeford [d]." In 9 Edw. 2 (1315) John Basset was lord of Woodford [e]; and in 16 Edw. 2 (1322) Henry Basset, son of Richard Basset, and brother and heir of John Basset, occurs in the cartulary of St. Andrew's priory [f].

In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) Thomas son of Thomas Boidin made an agreement with the prior and convent of St. Andrew respecting common of pasture in Woodford [g]; in 13 Edw. 3 (1339) Thomas Boidin levied a fine of Woodford manor [h]; and 'in the twentieth year of the same reign, upon collecting the aid for making the King's son 'a Knight', accounted for three parts of a Knight's fee in Woodford, as held of the honor of Winchester.'

In 13 Ric. 2 (1390) Ralph lord Basset of Drayton in Staffordshire‖ died seised of Woodford, held of John lord Lovell (the representative of Quincy), by service unknown, and

Thomas earl of Stafford¶, son of Hugh, son of Ralph, son of Margaret, sister of Ralph, father of Ralph, father of the said Ralph, was found to be cousin and heir [k]. From him it descended to his nephew Humphrey earl of Stafford, afterwards created duke of Buckingham, who in May, 16 Hen. 6 (1438), exchanged this manor and Whiston for the castle and manor of Maxtoke in Warwickshire, with John lord Clinton and Say [l].

A fine was levied of these manors of Woodford and Whiston in Michaelmas term following by Henry Drury [m]; and in 32 Hen. 6 (1453) by William Nevill lord Fauconberg [n]; and in 35 Hen. 6 (1457) by George Nevill bishop of Exeter [o].

In 6 Eliz. (1564) George Tyrell, esq. levied a fine of Woodford manor to John Fountayne [p], and in 41 Eliz. (1599) John Fountayne and others levied a fine of it to John Maryatt and others [q].

Bridges says 'the present Lord of the Manor is the Duke of Bridgwater [r]. It is merely a manor in gross; and its subsequent descent will be included under Halse in Brackley, of which it is a member.

St. Andrew's Priory Lands. Osmund Basset gave a hide of land in Woodford of his demesne called Buryhide, and the advowson of the church, subject to the interest of Richard de Buketon, to William Basset [s], by whom the hide was granted to the said Richard [t], and confirmed by Osmund with the addition of a virgate [u], and further confirmed by Robert earl of Leicester, the paramount lord [x]. William son of William Basset also confirmed the hide to Richard de Buketon, with licence to bestow it on a religious house[z]; in pursuance whereof Richard gave it to the monks of St. Andrew at Northampton, by a deed ratified and attested by his son Alexander de Buketon[a], and confirmed to them by Ralph son of Osmund Basset[b]. By a prior deed Richard de Buketon had given the hide of land in Woodford which William Basset gave him in the court of Richard Basset of Weldon Magna to Gilbert de Bramcote[c]; and by another deed gave him all his land in Woodford, viz. one hide and one virgate[d]. His son Alexander confirmed the donation by the description of five virgates[e], which, in connection with the preceding, proves the hide, at least in this instance, to have been synonimous with four virgates. Gilbert de Bramcote subsequently granted, or rather released, all his land in Woodford, viz. five virgates, to the monks of St. Andrew, for the health of his soul, and of the soul of Richard de Buketon[g]. Ralph son of Osmund Basset confirmed the donation of one virgate in Woodford, which Osmund his father gave Alicia his sister, in marriage with Richard Fitz Wale (of Eydon), and which Henry their son gave to St. Andrew's priory[f]. In the minister's accompts on the dissolution, the temporalities of this priory in Woodford were rated with Sulgrave; and in 30 Hen. 8 (1538-9) were included in the grant to Lawrence Washington, gent.[g]; whose son Robert Washington, esq. in 42 Eliz. (1600) levied a fine of lands in Woodford to Robert Spencer, esq.[h] of Althorp.

Canons Ashby Priory had twelve acres in Woodford of the gift of Ralph Basset[i]; which in 24 Hen. 8 (1542-3) were granted (int. al.) to Anthony Stringer and John Williams[k].

St. Ebrulf's Abbey in Normandy had view of frank pledge in Byfield, which extended into Woodford[l].

Wardon Abbey in Bedfordshire had lands in Woodford; being that portion of West Wardon which is within this parish*.

The Village is about seven miles from Daventry. In the time of Bridges there were 'sixty-one houses, 'exclusive of the Hamlets Hinton and Farndon, and two odd houses which are the water-mills of Woodford and 'Hinton[m].' By the census of 1801 "Woodford cum Membris" contained 120 houses and 629 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 146 houses and 653 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 171 houses and 766 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £115. 5s. 9d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £3836. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £1200. 9s. at 12s. in the £. The wake follows the feast of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary.

The Advowson was given by Osmund Basset in the reign of Hen. 2 to William Basset, subject to the conditions of a prior grant to Richard de Buketon[n]; and by another deed Osmund confirmed to the said Richard the church of "Wudeford," rendering yearly, if sanctioned by the bishop of Lincoln, 2 marks (£1. 6s. 8d.) to the convent of St. Mary of Rowcester (in Staffordshire), and, at the petition of the said William, granted the advowson to the convent after the decease of Richard[o]. Abbot Richard and the convent of Rowcester confirmed to "Ric̃ cl'ico de Bucketon" the church of Wodeford for his life, which William and Osmund Basset had granted to them, saving the first presentation to the said Richard after the death of "Witt capti de Wodeford," for which Richard was to pay them 2 marks yearly[p]. The advowson was subsequently confirmed to the abbey by William son of William Basset[q]. In 3 Joh. (1201) Ralph Basset claimed the advowson of Woodford against the abbot of "Roffens" (Roucester), who pleaded that he had possessed it above thirty years of the gift of Osmund and William Basset, and produced their charters, by which Richard de Buketon, lately deceased, was perpetual vicar, or proxy for the abbot, rendering to the abbey two marks yearly; but Ralph contended that he presented last, and the jury being of the same opinion, he had a writ to the bishop[r]. '"In Edward I's time the right of presenting 'to it was claimed by Richard Basset [great grandson of Osmund], and the cause decided in favor of the prior and 'convent of Roucester. 'In the year 1230 the first year of the episcopate of Robert Grosthead bishop of Lincoln 'a pension of lx^s per annum was granted to the convent out of the rectory, under the name of a perpetual benefice. '"But the monks, not satisfied with so small a portion, applied to Rome, and in 1328 procured from Pope 'John XXII. a bull for the appropriation of this church to themselves. This appropriation was confirmed by 'Henry Burgherst bishop of Lincoln in 1331, and the vicarage at the same time ordained.' In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[s] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[y] this rectory was rated at 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.) per ann. deducting a pension of 40s. to the prior of Rowcester, and 6s. 8d. to William de Holcote; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it was returned as an appropriation of the abbey of Rowcester at £13. 6s. 8d. per ann.[z]. After the dissolution it was granted out in fee, and passed to the Dryden family. The commissioners of inclosure for Woodford allotted 228 a. 2 r. 10 p. to sir John Dryden, bart. in lieu of his impropriate tithes, glebe, and open field land.

The Advowson of the vicarage still remains in the crown.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Brackley. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 it was valued at £6. 10s. per ann.[a] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a vicarage worth only £30 per ann. in the patronage of the lord protector, and that Richard Plumley was incumbent[a]. It is a discharged living, returned under the act 5 Anne (1707) to be of the clear yearly value of £40. In 1721 it received an augmentation from queen Anne's bounty of £200 to meet benefactions to the same amount, viz. Mrs. Anne Pigot of Shrewsbury, daughter of sir John Dryden, bart. £100; Robert Pigot of Chetwynd in Shopshire, esq. her son, £50; rev. John Davies, rector of Kingsland in Herefordshire, £25; and rev. Cornelius Hopkins, the vicar, £25; and in 1765 the consolidated amount was expended in the purchase of 50 a. of land in Morton Pinkeney. Besides which, the vicarage consists of 54 a. 3 r. 37 p. in Woodford, 12 a. 1 r. 4 p. in Farndon, and 18 a. 1 r. 38 p. in Hinton, allotted by the respective commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the vicarial tithes, with the exception of about 60 a. of old inclosure, still remaining tithable; and an annual payment of £8 for the tithes of that portion of West Wardon which is within this parish.

The Registers commence in 1602, but are very imperfect about the middle of the seventeenth century.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Virgin, stands on a gentle slope, and consists of a low tower, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. The windows are small and uninteresting, except the eastern one of the chancel, which is early English, composed of three lancet lights under one general arch and dripstone. The tower is 10 ft. 1 in. long, by 7 ft. 7 in. wide; the nave and aisles 42 ft. 6 in. long, the nave 16 ft. 10 in. the north aisle 13 ft. 3 in. and the south aisle 10 ft. wide; and the chancel 37 ft. 11 in. by 15 ft. 3 in. The font is a plain octagon. The nave is divided from the south aisle by four pointed arches on octangular pillars with plain mouldings, and from the north aisle by four similar arches on circular pillars, two of which have capitals of plain mouldings, and the western one a shallow capital with narrow volutes, probably late Norman. The chancel is entered under an open pointed arch.

5. Sarah wife of George Hitchcock 5 Feb. 1802 æt. 35.

Within the altar rails are two uninscribed grey slabs for Mr. William Dryden of Great Preston, and sir John Dryden, 4th bart.

The Moravians or United Brethren have a chapel here built in 1799, of brick, 35 ft. 8 in. long, by 22 ft. 9 in. wide. Attached to it is a house for the minister, and a burial ground.

The congregation was formed in 1796, and
David Collis appointed first minister. He removed to Ockbrook near Derby in 1806.
Ignatius Tranaker, removed to Plymouth Dock in 1808.
Ralph Shuffiebotham, removed to Baildon in Yorkshire 1815.
Richard Edwards, removed to Kingswood near Bristol 1821, and was succeeded by Benjamin Beek.

Benefactions (p. 468). Garner's bequest of £20 purchased a tenement, and about half an acre of land in Woodford, now let for £3. 18s. per ann.

Of the £25 arising from the bequests of Hawkins, Checkley, and Baker, £15 belonging to Woodford was expended in purchasing a cottage at Farndon, now let for £2 per ann.; £5, belonging to Hinton, is placed at interest; and the remaining £5 has been lost.

The Roman Road from Benaventa or Isannavaria to Brinavis passed through this lordship *.

FARNDON

Forms the southern division of the parish of Woodford. It was inclosed by act of parliament 33 Geo. 2 (1759), and contains about 580 acres; of which about 60 acres belong to Thomas Carter, esq. of Edgcote, lord of the manor, and about 170 acres to Mr. George Hitchcock of Hinton.

Manorial History. Moreton Fee †. Honor of Berkhampsted ‡. In the time of Edward the confessor the largest portion of "Ferendone" was held by Ordric of archbishop Stigaud, and rated at 5s. yearly, but was quadrupled in value at the domesday survey, when it was held under the earl of Moreton, by Ralph, the presumed ancestor of the Chenduits. It contained one hide and a half, and one bovate or oxgang. The arable land was two carucates, one of which was in demesne with two bordars [a]. This estate was the only local possession or interest, which either the archbishop or his tenant had in this county. Stigand was translated from Winchester to the archiepiscopal see of Canterbury in 1052, from whence he was expelled by the Norman conqueror in 1069.

Grentemaisnil Fee §. Honor of Leicester ‖. Hugh de Grentemaisnil, at the domesday survey, held one virgate and a half in "Ferendone." The arable land was one carucate in the occupation of two villeins. It had been, and still was rated at 5s. yearly [b].

In the hydarium of Hen. 2 Simon Chenduit ¶ was returned to hold in Farendone one hide and a half and one small virgate of the fee of Berkhampsted; and the earl of Leicester four small virgates [c]. By the inquisition after the death of Edmund earl of Cornwall in 28 Edw. 1 (1299) Farndon was found to be of the barony of Chenduit, parcel of the honor of Berkhampsted[d]. In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) queen Isabel claimed view of frank pledge in Farndon as parcel of the honor of Berkhampsted; and Maud, widow of Robert de Holand, the representative of Quincy, as a member of the manor of Halse or Hawes[e].

MANOR. In the Testa de Nevill about 27 Hen. 3 (1242) William de Farendon was certified to hold one fee in "Farendon" of the honor of Berkhamsted, and a quarter of a fee there of Roger de Quinci of the honor of Leicester[f]. In 3 Edw. 2 (1309) Michael de Farndon levied a fine of Farndon manor[g]; and in 12 Edw. 2 (1318) obtained a grant of free warren in "Farendon" near Byfield[h]. His son Richard de Farndon, in plea to a quo warranto, in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) produced the charter to his father for free warren, and Farndon being found not within the metes of the king's forest, the privilege was confirmed[i].

By the survey of the lands of Alice Perers, the mistress of king Edward 3rd, on her attainder in 1 Ric. 2 (1377), it appears that she was enfeoffed in the manor of Farndon by Woodford in 48 Edw. 3 (1374), and afterwards conveyed it to

Robert Brome of Warwick, in fee, in reward for his services, and in exchange for his manor of Compton Murdak in Warwickshire[l]. In 3 Ric. 2 (1379) the king restored to sir William Windsor and Alice his wife, late Alice Perrers, all the lands forfeited by her attainder, including this manor[k]; but in 4 Hen. 4 (1416) William Offchurch and Elizabeth his wife recovered one moiety of Farndon manor[l], and the year following Robert Brome recovered the other moiety[m].

In 7 Hen. 4 (1419) Richard Beauchamp earl of Warwick levied a fine of the manor of Farndon near Byfield[n], and died seised in 17 Hen. 6 (1439), with remainder to his three daughters and coheiresses[o] by his first wife Elizabeth Berkeley *. Margaret, the eldest, probably obtained this manor on partition, for in 7 Hen. 7 (1492) Edward Grey viscount Lisle died seised of it in right of his wife Elizabeth, eldest sister and coheiress of Thomas Talbot 2nd viscount Lisle, grandson of Margaret, leaving John viscount Lisle his son and heir aged 11 years[p], who died s. p.; and in 13 Hen. 8 (1521-2) John Smallbone was found to hold two virgates and an half in Farndon of sir Arthur Plantagenet, afterwards created viscount Lisle, in right of his wife Elizabeth, sister and coheiress of the said John viscount Lisle[q].

In 1695 George Holman, esq. of WARKWORTH sold the manor and estate of Farndon in Woodford to

John Haines, then of Mollington, but afterwards of Wigginton in Oxfordshire, gent. who in 1699 alienated the manor-house, with the seats in the church of Woodford thereto belonging, "the chapel yard and pightele," and certain lands, but retained the manor till 1712, when he conveyed it to

John Gibbs of Farnborough in Warwickshire, gent. whose nephew and heir William Gibbs of Blakesley, gent. sold it in 1725 to

George 2nd earl of Halifax, of whose son George Dunck 3rd earl of Halifax† it was purchased in 1750-1 by Richard Chauncy, esq. of EDGCOTE, from whom it has passed with the other family estates to Thomas Carter, esq. the present proprietor.

THE VILLAGE consists of 15 houses, exclusive of the water mill.

HINTON

Occupies the western portion of the parish of Woodford, and was inclosed by act of parliament 26 Geo. 2 (1752). It contains about 880 acres, of which sir Charles Knightley, bart. of Fawsley, lord of the manor, has about 480 acres, and Mr. George Hitchcock about 165 acres. The stone of this lordship belongs to what is called the inferior Oolite; it is of a coarse texture, and is only worked for the repair of the roads. The superincumbent clay furnishes the following shells: Ammonites annulatus, T. 222‡. A. laviusculus, T. 451. f. 1. 2. *Serpula. MANORIAL HISTORY. MANDEVILLE FEE§. At the domesday survey Ulbert held of Geoffrey de Manneville (Mandeville) two hides in "Hintone." The arable land was five caracates; of which two were in demesne with two servants, and three in the occupation of ten villeins and three bordars. There was a mill worth 2s. yearly, and three acres of meadow. The whole had been rated at 40s. yearly, but was then raised to 60s.* In the hydarium of Hen. 2 Robert was returned to hold these two hides in Hintone, of the fee of earl William[t]. This nobleman was William de Mandeville earl of Essex; and by various inquisitions Hinton near Woodford was found to be held by the service of one fee, of the Bohuns and other representatives of the domesday lord[u].

MANOR. Robert de Hinton died seised of the manor of "Hinton jux. Woodford," which was divided between Margery, Emma, and Agnes, his daughters and coheiresses. The purparty of Margery descended to her son and heir Hugh, who purchased Emma's share, and was succeeded by his son John, whose son John (probably the John de Hinton, lord of this vill in 9 Edw. 2 (1315)[x] demised his two parts of the manor to John de Staunford of Northampton for life[y]. Agnes the youngest daughter gave her share to John de Bray, who enfeoffed Henry de Bray, whose brother and heir Richard de Bray enfeoffed Thomas son of Thomas de Bray, who settled the third part of this manor on himself and Joan his wife, for life, remainder to their son William de Bray; which John de Staunford and the Brays, in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) substantiated their claim to view of frank pledge and wayf in Hinton by prescription[y].

In the fifteenth century this manor was in possession of the Catesbys of Althorp. John Catesby, esq. after alienating Althorp in 1508 removed to Hinton, where his descendants continued to reside till the close of the seventeenth century; but the manor was sold by Robert Catesby, esq. in 42 Eliz. (1600) to Erasmus Dryden, esq.[z] of CANONS ASHBY.

Sutton Hundred.

So designated from the parish of that name, is bounded on the north by Wardon hundred; north-east and east by Norton hundred; south-east by Buckinghamshire; and south-west and west by Oxfordshire, from which it is divided for a few miles by the river Charwell,

This hundred in its present state contains the parishes and hamlets of Aynho; Brackley (including Halse or Hawes and Siresham Hatch); Chacombe (including Huscote); Croughton; Culworth; Evenley or Imley (including Astwick and Ploughman's Furze); Farthingho; Helmdon; Hinton in the Hedges; Marston St. Lawrence (including Westhorp); Middleton Chenduit or Cheney; Newbottle (including part of Charlton and Purston); Radston; Siresham; Stean; Stotesbury; Sutton, King's (including Astrop, Twyford, and Walton, and part of Charlton and Purston); Thenford; Thorp Mandeville; Wappenham (including Astwell and Fawcote); Warkworth (including Grimsbury, Netherthorp, and Overthorp); and Whitfield.

In the saxon æra this hundred was divided into two, which were thus surveyed in the curious certificate of Northamptonshire hundreds taken in the interval between the death of Edward the confessor and the Norman conquest: in "Suttuner" hundred are 100 hides, as in the days of king Edward; whereof 21 hides and two parts [ꝑpabel] of an hide are rated or taxed; 40 hides are inland or demesne; 10 hides are the king's own farm land; and 28 hides and the third part [ꝑpabel] of an hide are waste.[a] In "Eadbolber ꝥrope" hundred, are 100 hides as in the days of king Edward; whereof 23½ hides are rated or taxed; 45 hides are inland or demesne; 5 hides are the king's; and 26½ hides are waste.[b]

The same division of the hundreds occurs in domesday, but Eadbolde's Stowe, i. e. the place of, or belonging to Eadbold, where the hundred court was kept, is varied to Elboldeston, Elboldestow, Holeboldest', Odboldeston, Edboldeston, Otboldeston, and Atboldeston. Under the heading of "Sudtone" hundred, in domesday, are surveyed "Finmere, Hedha', Scildeswell, Glintone, Oitone, Hortone, and Eyforde,"[c] all in Oxfordshire.

The names of both hundreds were retained in the hydarium of Hen. 2, when Sutton hundred included Aynho, Charlton, Croughton, part of Evenley, Farthingho, "Gildeby," qu. Grimsbury? Middleton, Newbottle, Purston, Sutton, Thenford, and Walton;[d] and "Albodestowe" hundred, Brackley, Chacomb, part of "Chelverdescote,"* Culworth, part of Evenley, Hawes or Halse, Helmdon, Marston, Radston, Siresham, Stean, Stotesbury, Thorp Mandeville, and Whitfield.[e]

When these hundreds were consolidated is not exactly known, but in 25 Hen. 3 (1241) William Longspée, lord of Sutton, gave that manor, with the hundred thereto belonging, to his brother Stephen Longspée; and in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) Emmeline Longspée was expressly stated to hold the hundreds of "Sutton and Abbotstowe," under the name of the hundred of Sutton, by the yearly payment of £4. 1s. 4d. called sheriff yield,[f] which is still continued in the sheriff's accounts.

The fee of this hundred was immemorially appendant to the manor of Sutton till 40 Eliz. when the manor was sold to Richard Kenrick, esq. by William earl of Derby; but the hundred was retained by him, and has subsequently descended with Brackley.

[p] Astwell is partly in Syresham parish, partly in Wappenham parish; Falcott is in Wappenham parish. [q] Including Old Brackley and Halse hamlets. [r] Including Grimsbury hamlet.

AYNHO,

In domesday "Aienho," and in early records variously written "Ayno, Ainho, Aynhio, Eynhoo," &c. points to an obvious etymology in the saxon œa or ea, water, and hoh, a hill; forming a combination very characteristic of the place, abounding in springs, and occupying an elevated site. The lordship, except about 700 acres of old inclosure called the demesne lands, was enclosed by act of parliament 32 Geo. 3 (1792), and contains in the whole about 2355 acres: of which about 2245 acres, including about 210 acres of leasehold under Magdalen college, Oxford, belong to William Ralph Cartwright, esq. M.P. lord of the manor; and about 60 acres to the rector in right of his church. It adjoins Walton in King's Sutton parish and Charlton in Newbottle parish on the north, and Croughton on the east; on all the other points it is surrounded by Oxfordshire, being bounded on the south-east and south by Cuttle-brook, which divides it from Fritwell and Souldern; on the west by Clifton, a hamlet to Deddington; and on the north-west by the river Charwell, which separates it from Adderbury. The soil under the hill is a deep loam, but proceeding eastward it is a lighter loam on a substratum of excellent limestone. The pasture rather exceeds the arable, and there is some rich meadow land on the banks of the Charwell.

There are some good quarries in the lordship, but principally used for the repair of the roads. In the field called Stonepit ground, near the village, on the Buckingham road, the junction of the great oolite with that thick calcareo-argillaceous formation denominated the fuller's earth beds may be distinctly traced, and presents little more than a mass of decomposed shells: those which chiefly abound are, casts of Trochus. Pholadomya lirata, T. 197, f. 3.[a] Isocardia. Modiola Hillana, T. 212, f. 2. Ostrea acuminata, T. 135, f. 2, 3. Terebratula rostrata, T. 537, f. 1. Terebratula concinna, T. 83, f. 6.

Several birds of unusual occurrence in this neighbourhood have been shot here. Scolopax arquata (Lin.), or Curlew. Fulica atra (Lin.), or bald Coot. Rallus aquaticus (Lin.), or Water Rail. Strix otus (Lin.), or horned owl. Falco cyaneus (Lin.), the Hen Harrier. Motacilla regulus (Lin.), or golden-crested Wren; and Columba saxatilis (Lin.), or rock Pigeon.

The river Charwell has already been noticed as one of the boundaries; and the Oxford canal traverses the lordship nearly two miles, from Nell bridge to Souldern. A brook which rises near Tusmore in Oxfordshire divides the counties till it joins the Charwell; another runs from Astwick through Aynho park into the same river, and abounds with fine trout, some of which have reached the weight of six pounds. The principal springs are, the Town-well, by the road side, nearly opposite the hospital farm-house, which yields a copious and constant supply; Friar's-well, which is walled round, and gives name to a close under the garden terrace; Puckwell, a never-failing and strong chalybeate spring; and Painter's well, a petrifying spring at the south-east extremity of the lordship.

MANORIAL HISTORY. MANDEVILLE FEE. "Aienho" was the freehold of Asgar in the time of Edward the confessor, and rated at £6 yearly; but at the domesday survey, when it was in the hands of Geoffrey de Manneville (Mandeville), the valuation was increased to £8 yearly. It contained three hides and the fifth part of a hide. The arable land was eight caruscates. Of these lands an hide and the fifth part of an hide were in demesne, with eight servants who had three caruscates; and twenty-three villeins and nine bordars had the remaining five caruscates. There was a mill worth 10s. yearly, and twenty acres of meadow.[b]

Asgar was one of the most distinguished thanes in the saxon court, and exercised the honorable office of the royal standard-bearer, being expressly styled "Asgar' stalr' regis Edw." under the domesday survey of Enfield in Middlesex.[c] After Aynho, entries follow of Mandeville's lands in Croughton, Culworth, and Hinton in Sutton hundred, Aston and Hinton in Wardon hundred, Silveston in Norton hundred, and Flore in Newbottle hundred, and at the close is added, all these belonged to Asgar.[b] His possessions in other counties were still more extensive, particularly in Middlesex and Essex,[d] and the whole, on their seizure by the Norman conqueror, were transferred by one sweeping grant to

Geoffrey de Manneville, Magnaville, or Mandeville—so denominated from a town in Normandy—who constituted Walden in Essex, one of Asgar's manors, the head of his fee or barony. The forfeited estate of Asgar formed part only of the reward of his active services in the battle of Hastings, for domesday records under his name one manor in Surrey,[e] four in Berkshire,[f] seven in Middlesex,[c] nineteen in Hertfordshire,[g] three in Oxfordshire,[h] nine in Cambridgeshire,[i] eight in Northamptonshire,[b] two in Warwickshire,[k] forty in Essex,[d] and twenty-six in Suffolk.[l] His grandson, Geoffrey de Mandeville, though advanced to the earldom of Essex by king Stephen, seduced by additional honours and the most lavish gifts, deserted to the empress Maud; who, besides confirming to him the prior grants from Stephen, with the earldom of Essex, and the entire possessions of his father and grandfather, including the constableship of the tower of London and the hereditary sheriffalty of London, Middlesex, and Hertfordshire, granted him all the lands of Eudo Dapifer in Normandy, and, conditionally, in England, together with various manors and knights' fees, and numerous privileges and exemptions. Stephen, apprised of his apostacy, arrested him at St. Alban's, but, obtaining his liberty, he ravaged the royal demesnes, till an arrow in the head, whilst besieging Burwell castle, put a period to his life in 1144. Ernulph, the eldest son, being implicated with his father, was banished by Stephen: but Geoffrey, the second son, was fully restored to his patrimony, and re-created earl of Essex by Henry 2. His next brother and heir, William, 3d earl of Essex, and earl of Albemarle in right of his wife, was certified in the hydarium of Hen. 2 to hold three hides in "Ayno,"[m] but afterwards gave the whole vill to his maternal aunt, Adelicia de Essex.[n] As Aynho was the only manor retained in demesne by the Mandevilles their immediate connection with the county now ceased, but the paramouncy of the Northampton-shire fees, parcel of the honour of Mandeville, still remained, and on the decease of earl William without issue, passed (int. al.) to his aunt and heiress, Beatrice, wife of William de Say, whose eldest grand-daughter and co-heiress, Beatrice, married Geoffrey Fitz Piers, who obtained a confirmation of the earldom of Essex with the inheritance; and from whom the representation of the family descended agreeably to the subjoined pedigree.

MANOR. Adelicia or Alice de Essex, grantee of Aynho from William de Mandeville earl of Essex, was sister of Aubrey Vere earl of Oxford, and wife of Henry de Essex, hereditary standard-bearer of England; but basely deserting his colours in the Welsh war, he forfeited both his office and estates, and the sentence of death was commuted for a monastic life in the abbey of Reading. Alice married, secondly, Roger Fitz Richard of Warkworth in Northumberland, on whom the king (Hen. 2) bestowed Clavering in Essex, one of de Essex's manors, and who, with the assent of his wife and her nephew earl William, the lord of the fee, assured to her the manor of Aynho in exchange for Cuncton (qu. Canewdon?) in Essex, her first dowry.[o] Her son, Robert Fitz Roger, was succeeded by his son John Fitz Robert, who, taking an active part with the barons against king John, was chosen one of the twenty-five conservators of the rights of the people to secure the observance of Magna Charta. His lands were subsequently seized by the king and committed to Thomas St. Walerie,[p] but restored on his return to fealty in 1217 (1 Hen. 3).[q] In the Testa de Nevill about 27 Hen. 3 (1242) Ada his widow was certified to hold one fee in "Eynho" of the fees of the earl of Hereford, of the honor of Mandeville, with the custody of Roger his son and heir.[r] This Roger Fitz John died in 33 Hen. 3 (1249), leaving an infant son Robert Fitz Roger,[s] whose wardship was given to William de Valence, the king's brother, though Ada de Balliol, the mother (grandmother), offered 1200 marks (£800) for the purchase of it.[t] In 6 Edw. 1 (1277) Robert covenanted that his eldest son, John, should marry Hawise, daughter of Robert de Tibetot, before St. Martin ensuing, and that he would endow her on the wedding day at the church door with lands worth £100 yearly in his manor of Aynho, or supply the deficiency, if any, out of his manor of Bliburgh in Suffolk; in consideration of which, Tibetot engaged to give his daughter 600 marks (£400) for her portion.[u] He was summoned to parliament from 23 Edw. 1 to 3 Edw. 2, in which year he died, John, his son and heir, being then forty-four years of age.[x] Edward the 1st, disliking the iteration Fitz to the father's christian name, by which this family had been hitherto distinguished, is said to have commanded this John to adopt the permanent surname of Clavering, the capital seat of his barony,[y] and by which appellation he was summoned to parliament from 28 Edw. 1 to 5 Edw. 3. In 9 Edw. 2 (1315) John de Clavering was certified to be lord of Aynho.[z] About the same time, he and Hawise his wife jointly levied a fine of the manors of Clavering in Essex and of Aynho to Stephen de Trafford, who re-conveyed to them in tail male, remainder to Ralph de Neville in fee; and in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) he and Hawise were summoned by writ of quo warranto to shew their right to view of frank pledge, assize of bread and beer, with tumbril and pillory, infangtheof and gallows, warren, wayfs and strays, weekly market and annual fair, at their manor of Aynho; when (reciting the above fine and settlement) they pleaded prescription for all the privileges except the market and fair, for which they produced the royal charter. Richard de Aldborough, on behalf of the king, alleged that at the last iter the view of frank pledge and wayf were taken into the king's hands, and neither infangtheof nor warren were claimed. John gave the king £4. 10s. for a writ of replevin, and the jury substantiated all the privileges, but presented that, though he had tumbril and pillory, instead of using them, he punished offenders against the assize of bread and beer by fine of 40d. contrary to law; the view was consequently taken into the king's hands, but restored again on petition for a fine of half a mark.[a] In January 6 Edw. 3 (1332-3) he died at Aynho, and was buried with his ancestors in Langley abbey, Norfolk, leaving, according to Dugdale[b] and Blomefield,[c] &c. an only daughter and disinherited heiress Ece; but the former author, in his account of the Nevilles, mentions another daughter, Euphemia, wife of Ralph lord Neville,[d] which match would explain and justify the apparently capricious settlement of a portion of the Clavering estates, including this manor; but a comparison of dates establishes the impossibility of this connection, and renders it more probable that she was his sister.

CLAVERING BARON CLAVERING.

From Dugdale's Baronage, Monasticon, public records, and other authorities.

Ralph lord Neville, son of Ralph and Euphemia, died in 41 Edw. 3 (1307) seised (int. al.) of the manor of Aynho, with the advowson of the hospital of St. James and St. John there; 300 acres of land, worth 50s. yearly; 200 acres of waste land, worth 12d. yearly; 80 acres of meadow, worth 116s. yearly; a water-mill, worth 40s. yearly; rents of 25 messuages and virgates of land in villeinage, worth £20 yearly; 18 cottages, worth 47s. 10d. yearly; a common oven, worth 6s. 8d. yearly; aid or services of villeins, worth 70s. yearly; fishery in the Charwell, worth 12d. yearly; and profits of view of frank pledge or court leet, worth 3s. 4d. yearly: the manor held of the earl of Hereford by homage and fealty, and the view of frank pledge of sir Robert de Holand, lord of Sutton hundred, by the service of 6s. 8d. yearly,[c] as a commutation for the privilege of holding his own court, instead of doing suit and service to the hundred court. John lord Neville, his son and heir, by deed 30 June 50 Edw. 3 (1376) conveyed all his manor of Aynho to

Sir John de Arundel, and the following day appointed Richard de Aynho, master of the hospital there, his attorney to deliver seisin of the said manor, with the advowson of the hospital, and the churches and chapels thereto belonging.[f] On the demise of sir John de Arundel in 3 Ric. 2 (1379), John de Arundel was found to be his son and heir,[g] but did not enter into possession of Aynho, his father having granted it, subject to the dower of his wife, who afterwards married sir Reginald Cobham,[h] to William de Clinton (son of John Clinton earl of Huntingdon) for life, remainder to his brother Thomas de Arundel, then bishop of Ely, and others,[g] in trust, as subsequently appears, for his younger son, sir Edward de Arundel, who, in 10 Hen. 4 (1408), appointed Henry Haylesham bailiff and warrener of his manor of Aynho;[f] and in 13 Hen. 4 (1411), vested it in feoffees to the use of himself and Elizabeth his wife for their respective lives, with remainder to his own heirs and assigns.[f] In May, 2 Hen. 6 (1424), sir John de Arundel received seisin of the manor of Aynho and advowson of the hospital.[f] He was son, I presume, of sir Edward, and the same individual who married Elizabeth, daughter of Edward lord Despencer.[i] A brass plate in the church records the death of Elizabeth Arundel, lady of Aynho, formerly wife of sir John Arundel, to have happened 30 Apr. 1479 (19 Edw. 4), when the reversionary grant contingent on her life interest, made in 7 Hen. 6 (1428) to sir John Arundel lord Arundel and Maltravers,[f] who on petition to parliament in 11 Hen. 6 (1433) was confirmed in the earldom of Arundel by tenure of Arundel castle,[k] became vested in William de Arundel or Fitz Alan, as the family was indifferently designated, earl of Arundel.

Upon the death of Thomas earl of Arundel in the sixteenth year of Henry 8 (1524),[l] the king being willing to grant William earl of Arundel, his son, special livery of all such castles, honours, lordships, manors, lands, and tenements, rents, reversions, and other hereditaments, which to the said William earl of Arundel descended from Thomas late earl of Arundel deceased, the said William, in the account of his father's possessions, mentions the manor of Aynho as amounting in its yearly value to liil. xis. vijd.

In June, 32 Hen. 8 (1540), "Harry Matravers, knyght, lord Matravers," son and heir apparent of earl William, levied a fine of, and mortgaged this manor;[f] and in Jan. 36 Hen. 8 (1544-5), his father being then dead, he, by the style of "Harry erle of Arundel," in consideration of £1060, conveyed the manor of "Aynhoo, with all its lands, rights, and pertinences, to Rowland Shakerley, gent. by will 9 Mar. 7 Eliz. (1564-5) devised his manor of Aynho to his grandson and heir Rowland Shakerley, son of his deceased son Ralph, in tail male, remainder to his five daughters in fee tail,[m] Rowland Shakerley, junior, died in May, 12 Eliz. (1570), leaving Anne his sister and heiress, aged seven years,[n] who afterwards married sir Paul Tracy, bart. and to whom descended one-third of Aynho manor, by reason of the tenure in capite, which made the devise of the grandfather to his five daughters void for one-third part.

Thomas Marmion, esq. having one-fifth of the other two parts of the manor, in right of his wife Mary, youngest daughter and coheiress of Rowland Shakerley, senior, purchased in Nov. 17 Eliz. (1574), another fifth part or share from John Longe of Burlee, co. Derby. and Katherine his wife, the second daughter and coheiress; in Feb. 18 Eliz. (1575-6), another share from Giles Love of Broughton, co. Oxon, gent. and Alice his wife, the fourth daughter and coheiress; in Nov. 18 Eliz. (1576), another share from sir Ambrose Nicholas and dame Elizabeth his wife, the eldest daughter and coheiress; and in Nov. 20 Eliz. (1577), the only outstanding share from Christian Harding, widow, the third daughter and coheiress;[m] and dying in Aug. 25 Eliz. (1583), was succeeded in two parts of the manor, thus consolidated, by his son and heir

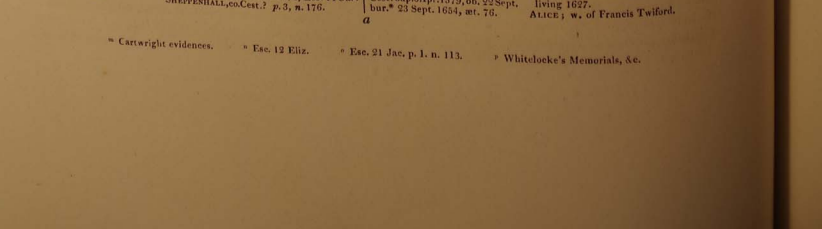
Shakerley Marmion, esq.[o] who in Nov. 13 Jac. (1615), in consideration of £5250, conveyed his estate here, by the description of "the manor of Aynhoo, alias Aynehoo, alias Ayno, alias Aynhoo on the hill, alias Eynhoo," with capital messuage and lands, to Richard Cartwright, of the Inner Temple, London, esq.[m]

SHAKERLEY AND MARMION OF AYNHO.

From Cartwright evidences, and the parish register of Aynho.*

Richard Cartwright, esq. having acquired two-thirds of the manor from Marmion, purchased the remaining third in Mar. 14 Jac. (1616), for £3000, of sir Paul Tracy, bart. and sir Richard Tracy, knt. his son and heir apparent.[m]

John Cartwright, esq. his only son and successor, was a considerable sufferer in the parliamentary cause. In 1645 the king's forces burned down his house at Aynho, and plundered him to the amount of £800;[p] and in 1647, when the earl of Northampton was summoned to compound for delinquency, as it was termed, Mr. Cartwright petitioned for £10,000 out of his estate, for losses he had sustained whilst the earl had the command of the royalists in that neighbourhood.[p] In the same year he was appointed one of the parliamentary visitors of the university of Oxford; but disapproving the proceedings of the committee, he declined acting. He was a learned man; and for the encouragement of learning, gave to Brasen-nose college, Oxford, a rent charge of £10 per ann. out of lands in Bloxham, to found two scholarships for natives of Cheshire, Northamptonshire, or Oxfordshire, but more especially to be chosen from the free grammar school of Aynho, or the parishes of Budworth or Wrenbury in Cheshire.



From him the manor and advowson have descended, agreeably to the subjoined pedigree, to the present proprietor, William Ralph Cartwright, esq. who has had the honor of representing the county in parliament for more than thirty years.

The family of Hanslope had a considerable estate here from the reign of Henry the 8th, if not earlier, and entered a pedigree in the visitation of 1619. In June 1697 Thomas Hanslope, gent. sold his capital messuage and lands in Aynho to Thomas Cartwright, esq.

THE OLD MANOR HOUSE was burnt down by the royalists in 1645. The present mansion, probably erected on the site of the former one, stands at the northern extremity of a park well stocked with deer, and enlarged, as well as ornamented with extensive plantations, by the present proprietor. It is a spacious and handsome stone edifice of two fronts; the north consists of a centre with two deeply projecting wings for offices, and the south presents an unbroken line of 220 feet, comprising the library, vestibule, dining-room, saloon, drawing-room, and conservatory. The interior is enriched with some beautiful bronze figures and vases, and a choice collection of pictures, principally imported from the continent by John Blackwood, esq. and bequeathed to the present possessor by his maternal great aunt Mrs. Blackwood. Drawing-room: the woman taken in adultery, N. Poussin; our Saviour appearing in a vision to St. Antony of Padua, Murillo; the assumption of the virgin Mary supported in the clouds by cherubim, Murillo; St. John arising from his seat at the divine call, Murillo; Abraham going to sacrifice Isaac, Murillo; Tobit and the angels, Murillo; two sea pieces, Vandervelde and Backhuissen; two portraits, Reubens; a Magdalen repenting, supported by Faith, Hope, and Charity, Carlo Cignani; portrait of Mrs. Desaguliers, grandmother of W. The Village is remarkably neat, and of considerable extent, stretching eastward from an acclivity fronting the west, which commands an extensive view into Oxfordshire. It is six miles distant from Banbury on the turnpike road through Buckingham to London; and about the same distance from Brackley on the turnpike road leading to Northampton.[q] By the census of 1801 it contained 124 houses and 623 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 128 houses and 631 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 141 houses and 719 inhabitants. In the time of Bridges there were 'one hundred houses.'[r] The annual quota of land-tax for this parish is £238. 10s. 10d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property-tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £5031. The poor's-rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £750, at 3s. 6d. in the £. The wake follows the feast of St. Michael.

Market and Fair. In 17 Edw. 2 (1324) John de Clavering, for a fine of £10 to the king, had a grant (int. al.) of a weekly market at his manor of "Eynho" every Tuesday, and a yearly fair on the vigil and day of St. Michael and two days following;[s] and in plea to a writ of quo warranto in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) produced the said charter in support of his claim.[s] The following year Ralph de Neville, on whom Clavering had settled this manor in reversion, had a confirmatory grant from the crown of the market and fair;[t] and in 20 Jac. (1623) Richard Cartwright, esq. had a re-grant of them, with the addition of another yearly fair on the Monday and Tuesday after Pentecost.[u] Bridges says, 'this market hath been discontinued for sixty years and upwards. The market-'house is yet standing, but the cross hath been taken down long since.'[x] Both the fairs also have sunk into desuetude.

Advowson. Geoffrey de Magnaville or Mandeville, the domesday lord of Aynho, about 1090 (3 Will. 2), founded a priory at Hurley in Berkshire, as a cell to Westminster abbey, and endowed it (int. al.) with the third part of the tithe of his "annonæ," two parts of the tithes of ...., and all the tithes of his pannage in swine and in pence [denariis], cheese, flax, wool, foals, horses, calves, orchards, vineyards, and of all other things whatsoever of which the tithes ought to be rendered to God, in all his demesne manors;[y] a grant in which, though expressed only in general terms, Aynho was comprehended. In the charter of Richard (de Belmeis) bishop of London, between 1152 and 1162, confirming the grant of the said Geoffrey and his successors, the tithes of the demesne of "Heynho" are (int. al.) specifically named;[z] and they appear to have been commuted for an annual pension of two marks (£1. 6s. 8d.) out of the rectory, prior to the taxation of 1291.[a]

The church or advowson of "Aynho" was bestowed on another monastic foundation of the family; being one of the nine churches included in the dotation charter of Geoffrey de Mandeville first earl of Essex, grandson of the above Geoffrey, to the abbey of Walden in Essex,[b] and successively confirmed by his son Geoffrey, the second earl, and William, the third earl, son of earl Geoffrey, senior, and brother of earl Geoffrey, junior.[c] Geoffrey Fitz Piers earl of Essex, reciting a suit in the king's court between him and abbot Robert and the convent of Walden, respecting the advowson of "Ainho" and eight other churches, agreed to quit-claim all his right, on condition that he and Geoffrey, his eldest son by his wife Beatrice de Say, should have the presentation to the said churches when vacant, during their lives; but if the abbot and convent should be able to obtain the appropriation of the churches, he would not offer any impediment, and after the decease of himself and his son, the churches should return to the abbot and convent quit and free from them and their heirs for ever.[d] Notwithstanding these repeated confirmations, the abbey was not permitted to retain quiet possession; for in 40 Hen. 3 (1256) Isabel, widow of Roger Fitz John, impleaded Absolon, abbot of Walden, for the next presentation to the church of Aynho, then vacant, which she challenged as her right because she held the manor in dower, and William de Mandeville, on whose presentation Robert de Stratford, the last incumbent, was admitted and instituted in the time of king Henry (2nd), grandfather of the present king, afterwards, by a charter deposited in Langley abbey in Norfolk, gave the vill of Aynho with all its pertinencies in Aynho and Compton (in Warwickshire) to William Fitz Roger, antecessor of her late husband, by service of one fee and a half; to which the abbot replied, that Geoffrey de Mandeville earl of Essex, ancestor of William de Mandeville, gave (int. al.) the advowson of "Aynho" to the monks of Walden by a charter which he produced, as also the confirmation charter of William de Mandeville earl of Essex; and after this gift Roger abbot of Walden presented Robert de Stratford, who was thereupon instituted, and died rector. A verdict was given in favor of the defendant;[e] and in 1307 (35 Edw. 1) John de Clavering, son and heir of Robert Fitz Roger lord of Clavering (and grandson of the above Roger Fitz John), quit-claimed all right in the advowson to the abbot and convent of Walden.[f] 'In the reign of Richard II. their 'right was again disputed by sir Richard Abberbury and sir John Arundel, but upon trial confirmed by a judgment 'in the court of King's Bench.'[g]

After the dissolution, the advowson of Aynho, with a yearly pension of 4s. out of the rectory, passed under the general grant in 30 Hen. 8 (1538) of all the possessions, as well spiritual as temporal, of the late monastery of Walden in Essex, to sir Thomas Audley, lord chancellor,[h] afterwards lord Audley; from whom it descended to his grandson Thomas Howard earl of Suffolk, lord treasurer, who, in June 16 Jac. (1618), sold it for £300 to Richard Cartwright, esq.[i] lineal ancestor of the present patron.

THE RECTORY is in the deanry of Brackley. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[k] and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1),[l] it was rated at 25 marks (£16. 13s. 4d.) per ann. deducting a yearly portion of two marks to the priory of Hurley.

In Oct. 1317 (11 Edw. 2) the king at the request of Humphrey de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Essex, gave licence to the abbot and convent of Walden to appropriate the church of "Aynho" for ever, in augmentation of alms for the soul of Elizabeth late countess of Hereford, his sister.[m] The royal permission however was not acted upon; no vicarage was endowed; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) the rectory was valued at £26 per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton, and a pension of 4s. to the abbey of Walden.[n] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be worth £180 per ann. "or thereabout," in the patronage of John Cartwright, esq. and that Mr. Robert Wilde, the incumbent, supplied the cure.[o] The commissioners of inclosure awarded 59 acres in lieu of the glebe land; and an annual corn rent, to be regulated every seven years by the average price of wheat in London, in lieu of the tithes of the new inclosure; besides which, the rector receives an annual payment of £60 for the tithes of the old inclosure called the demesne lands. The rectory house is a respectable residence adjoining the north side of the church-yard.

RECTORS. Ralph de Diceto,—a name familiar to antiquaries as one of the early chroniclers whose annals are incorporated in "Anglicanæ Historiæ Scriptores decem," edited by sir Roger Twysden in 1652. He was successively archdeacon of Middlesex and dean of London, and died about 1210. On his resignation of this benefice and the appointment of his successor, a singular contract is recorded between the patron, rector, and perpetual vicar, a term in the present instance synonymous with curate, the office and stipend being personal only, and not permanent or endowed. Hugh bishop of Lincoln, on the presentation of the abbot and convent of Walden, institutes

Ralph de Vireneto to the church of "Aynho" under an annual pension of 2s. to the abbot and convent, and at the petition of the said Ralph confirms to Turbert, son of Turbert, "in perpetuam" the vicarage of the said church, to which he had been appointed by Ralph de Diceto, with the consent of William then prior of Walden, and by the institution of Robert then bishop of Lincoln; so that Turbert shall possess the said church with all belonging to it, perpetually, paying to the said Ralph de Vireneto yearly "duos aureos," one at Easter and one at St. Michael, saving episcopal customs, which shall be rendered by Turbert. And by a separate deed Ralph engages to pay the stipulated 2s. yearly to the abbot and convent during the life of Turbert, or so long as he ministers in the said church as perpetual vicar; but if he should survive Turbert, then he engages to pay the said abbot and convent a yearly pension of one mark at Easter.[p]

Robert de Stratford died in 1256, as appears by the suit between Isabel, widow of Roger Fitz John, and the abbot of Walden respecting the next presentation.[e]

Brother John Sabrisfort, abbot of Walden, by papal dispensation, 13 May 1498, on the presentation of Robert Bradbery, esq. by grant from the abbot and convent of Walden. He died 8 June 1509.[t] On his resignation he was succeeded by William Gylbank, A.M. 30 Jan, 1506-7.

Richard Peerson, priest, 12 Oct. 1508.

Robert Bright, LL.D. 22 Apr. 1532. He was also rector of St. Peter's, Northampton.

Stephen Ferrard, B.D. 24 Feb. 1533-4. On his decease

Richard Gabell was presented by Rowland Shakerley, gent. p. h. v. by assignment from Richard Winwood, esq. of the grant of sir George Norton, of co. Essex, and instituted 26 June 1555.

Robert Scolfeld, inst. 6 June 1573, on the presentation of the queen.

Thomas Drope, B.D. presented by the queen, and inst. 30 Nov. 1588.[u] He was buried here 19 Nov. 1633,[x] and Reginald Burdyn was inst. May 1635, on the presentation of Richard Cartwright, esq. and again 25 Oct. following on the presentation of the king by lapse. He was buried here 28 Sept. 1643,[x] and

James Longman, of New coll. Oxf. B.D. was presented by John Cartwright, esq. and inst. Feb. 1643.[x]

Robert Wilde, "intruded by the parliamentary visitors," and was inducted 22 July 1646,[x] on the presentation of John Cartwright, esq.[y] and by order of the house of lords.[z] It is related of him, that he and another divine having preached as candidates for this living, on being asked whether he or his competitor had been successful, he answered, "we have divided it; I have got the Ay, and he the No." Wood describes him as "a fat jolly man, and a boon presbyterian." The celebrated Baxter, taking offence at some alleged instances of his injudicious facetiousness, called on him, on his way from Kidderminster to London, to reprove him. When he reached Aynho, the divine had just gone to church, on a day observed by him and his people as a fast. Mr. Baxter placed himself in an obscure corner, and, after the service, thanked him for his sermon, adding, "rebuke me sharply, for I deserve it." Being desired to explain himself, he answered, "for my great uncharitableness and folly in regarding reports;" and then told him the occasion of his visit. Wilde was a native of St. Ives in Huntingdonshire, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge; proceeded A.M. at Cambridge in 1639, B.D. at Oxford in 1642, and D.D. at Cambridge, by the king's letters, Nov. 1660. Two years after, he was ejected from his living for nonconformity, when he retired to Oundle, where he died in 1679, aged 70. He left two sons, both of whom conformed, and were beneficed clergymen. His principal publications are: "The arraignment of a sinner at the bar of divine justice," an assize sermon, preached at Oxford, Mar. 1655, and dedicated to John Cartwright, of Aynho, esq. high sheriff of co. Oxford, 1656, 4to. Sermon on Romans, i. v. 32, 1656, 4to. Poems; including "Iter Boreale; attempting something upon the successful march of General Monk from Scotland to London," (reprinted); the Tragedy of Christopher Love at Towerhill, (reprinted), &c. 1661, 8vo. A collection of all his Poems hitherto published, 1665, 8vo. 1668, 18mo. 1670, 8vo. A letter to Mr. J. J. on his Majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience, 1672, 4to. A panegyric addressed to his Majesty on his speech to parliament, 1673, fol. The Benefice, a comedy, 1689, 4to. On his expulsion,

James Longman, B.D. the former incumbent, re-entered. He was buried here 21 Oct. 1677,[x] and

Matthew Hutton, of Brazennose coll. Oxf. B.D. was inst. 2 Mar. following, on the presentation of his aunt, Ursula Cartwright, widow. He obtained the rectory of Croughton in 1689, and proceeded D.D. in 1690. He was buried here 30 June, 1711,[x] when

Joseph Wasse, B.D. formerly vicar of Swavesey, co. Camb. was presented by Thomas Cartwright, esq. and inst. 29 Nov. following. He was born in Yorkshire, completed his studies under Dr. Davies, at Queen's coll. Camb. of which he was sometime fellow, and took the degrees of A.B. 1694, A.M. 1698, and B.D. 1707. He had so high a reputation as a classical scholar and critic, that, according to Whiston, Dr. Bentley said, "When I am dead Wasse will be the most learned man in England." He materially assisted Kuster in his edition of Suidas; published an edition of Sallust, from a careful collation of early editions and near 80 MSS. and illustrated with selected and original notes, Camb. 1719, 4to.; and, jointly with Andrew Decker, an edition of Thucydides in Greek and Latin, Amsterdam, 1732, fol. and Glasgow, 1758-9, 8 vols. 12mo. He published "Reformed Devotion," on the principles of Dr. Clarke, about 1717, 8vo.; and contributed several papers to the "Bibliotheca Literaria," and the Philosophical Transactions. He was a facetious man in conversation, but a heavy preacher: a very deserving charitable man, and universally esteemed.[a] He died of an apoplexy 19 Nov. and was buried here 24 Nov. 1738.[x] His successor,

Francis Yarborough, of Brazennose coll. Oxf. A.M. 1719, B. and D.D. 1746, was inst. 19 Apr. 1739, on the presentation of Thomas Cartwright, esq. He purchased most of the books collected by his learned predecessor, and, dying intestate, his heirs presented his entire library to Brazennose coll. of which he had been principal from 1745. He died 24 Apr. 1770, and

Francis Mapletoft, of Pembroke coll. Camb. A.M. already noticed under Fawsley, was presented by the same patron, and inst. 13 May following. He was buried here 19 Dec. 1807,[x] and Thomas Fawcett, of Christ Ch. coll. Oxf. A.M. rector of Bradden, was inst. 11 Feb. 1808, on the presentation of William Ralph Cartwright, esq. He resigned Bradden in 1818, and obtained the rectory of Greens Norton with Whittlebury, which he holds with Aynho.

The Registers of baptisms commence in 1562, of marriages in 1573, and of burials in 1570.

The Church, dedicated to St. Michael, stands at the east end of the village, and is described by Bridges[b] as consisting of 'a body with two iles,[c] a burial place joining to the south ile, a chancel all leaded, and a vestiary 'which is covered with slate. At the west end is an handsome embattled tower, with a small pinnacle at each 'corner; in the tower are six bells, two of which, with the clock, were given by the family of Cartwright. At the 'west end of it was formerly placed, in a niche within the wall, the image of St. Michael combating with the dragon. 'The figure of the dragon is still [partially] remaining, but that of St. Michael, and also two other figures, sup- 'posed to be St. Peter and St. Paul, were demolished long ago. This tower is sixty-three foot high, the length of 'of the church and chancel is eighty-one foot; the breadth of the body and iles forty-five foot; and the height of 'the roof from the middle ile twenty-seven foot.' The old tower is still preserved, and presents a pleasing specimen of the decorated period; but the church was taken down in 1723, and rebuilt of one pace in the grecian style. The interior is lofty and spacious, and neatly fitted up. The tower is 14 ft. 10 in. long, by 11 ft. 2 in. wide; the chancel, north recess or vestry, and south recess or burial place, 20 ft. 2 in. long; the chancel 20 ft. and the recesses 11 ft. 4 in. each wide.

[c] 'In Mrs. Shakerley's will this is called the New Chapel, and in some court rolls Ladies Chapel. It is a late addition to the church.'

VI. On the south wall is a neat tablet of white and veined marble. Arms: quarterly, 1 & 4, Hussey; 2 & 3, Barry of six Erm. and G.

Here lies interred the body of Mrs Jane Hussey
Her parents were Thomas and Rhoda whose pedigree you have at large upon the neighbouring monuments.
But what her personal qualities were you best will know by representing to your mind a true piety towards God, good will towards Mankind, & such innocency of life as a continued study of the Sacred Writings and the Examples of the primitive Age ought to inspire.
A maiden state of Life was Her choice, for her Soul being got loose as it were from the entanglements of flesh, & aspiring after an Heavenly Society, every day lookd forward in earnest expectation of that time, when she should meet Her Lord, be called to the Marriage of the Lamb, & partake of the purest joys such as make angels happy.
The whole aim & business of her Life was to prepare for a blessed Eternity, which she enter'd upon the 24th day of April mdccxx. in the lxxxiii^d year of her Age.
Mrs. Mary Balle becoming by her Death, as it were a Widow the second time, dedicates this Marble as the last present She can make to her Sister, not as any wise answering Her Virtues, or expressive of her own love and concern.

VII. Collateral to the last is a neat square monument of white and veined marble, with pilasters and pediment.

The Hospital for the relief of poor and sick passengers, was dedicated to the apostles St. James and St. John, and stood at the west end of the village. It was founded as early as the twelfth century, by Roger Fitz Richard, Adelicia his wife, and William their son, whose grant was ratified by William de Mandeville earl of Essex, lord of the fee.[d] Robert Fitz Roger confirmed his father's grant of a hide of land in Aynho, and added to it a certain messuage. Hugh Wells bishop of Lincoln confirmed these donations, and in 14 Joh. (1212) annexed to this hospital, with the assent of the patron, Guy de la Haye, the chapel of Crouleton,[e] by which must be understood the tithes of that portion of Croughton which was of the Mandeville fee, as the advowson of the rectory belonged to the mesne lord of the Constance fee. Wido de Haye, son of Baldwin de Boloin, confirmed one virgate of land in Byfield of the gift of his father and of Adelicia his mother, to the hospital of St. James at "Heyno."[d] In the reign of Hen. 3 the lands of Hugh de Compton in Aynho were given to the hospital.[f] By deed without date sir John Clavering, lord of "Eynho," gave to the hospital a walled fish-pond in "Eynho;"[d] and in 13 Edw. 2 (1319), by license from the king, a messuage, half a virgate of land, and a mill called Goldesbolte milne, with the meadow called the milne-mead, the water-course, and the custom of his tenants in Aynho at the said mill.[g] An inquisition relating to the state of the hospital was taken in 1281,[h] and another in 1423.[i]

Turbert rector of Aynho, by a deed without date soon after the foundation, renounced all claim to the patronage or custody of the hospital in right of his church;[d] and it was governed by a master, nominated by the lord of the manor, and instituted by the bishop of Lincoln, till Oct. 1 Ric. 3 (1483), when Willliam earl of Arundel granted the advowson and patronage of the hospital to William Wainflete, bishop of Winchester, and other feoffees, in trust, to be united to Magdalen college, Oxford, for ever, on condition that the president and fellows should keep Arundel's mass at Arundel's altar, and after his decease keep yearly an obit, dirge, and mass, by statute and oath, and recommend him in their prayers at Oxford, and at Paul's Cross in London.[d]

The president and fellows receive 10s. per ann. from the rector of Croughton for tithes, and 4s. per ann. from Westhorp farm in Byfield, and pay 2s. 6d. per ann. to the see of Lincoln pro indemnitate, and a quit-rent of 5s. per ann. to the lord of the manor of Aynho, and do suit at his court, in which they were amerced, as appears by the court rolls 21 Hen. 7, for making default. The hospital estate consists of a house and about 210 acres of land, which are now on lease to William Ralph Cartwright, esq. M.P. lord of the manor. In the time of Bridges the house was the residence of the lessee, Mrs. Watkins, relict of Charles Watkins, esq.: it has been recently modernized, and is now in the occupation of Mr. Gardner.

He was also rector of this parish, and 'by 'a will bearing date 4 Mar. 1497, bequeathed eighteen 'marks to a priest to sing for his soule by the space of 'two years in the church of Aynho. This priest, during 'these two years was to say every month a Placebo and 'Dirige, with nine lessons and commendations and masse 'of Requiem on the day following. He left also to the 'church a cope of red velvet, with the image of St. 'Michael (the patron saint of the church) embroidered 'on it, the vestment belonging to it, a banner cloth of 'blue silk, with vj s. iv d. yearly towards the repairs of 'the said church.'[k]

Benefactions (p. 540). [l] 'On the twenty-fifth of June, 5 Edw. 6 (1551), a deed of feofment was made by John Marsh and William Dalby to Rowland Shakerley and his heirs, of one acre of meadow, towards the maintenance of a lamp in the church.'

Cartwright's Charity. Richard Cartwright, esq. by will, 1 Feb. 1638, charged the manor of Deddington, and lands there and at Hempton and Clifton, Oxfordshire, with a yearly annuity or rent-charge of £23. 8s. for the benefit of several parishes therein named; of which sum he directed £5. 4s. yearly to be bestowed in bread, every week after divine service, amongst six of the poorest and most aged people in Aynho, who should come to church every sabbath day if they were able, to be nominated by his son and his heirs, or, in default, by four of the most able and religious men of the parish. This sum is annually paid by Mr. Cartwright to a baker in Aynho, who supplies 2s. worth of bread, which is distributed every Sunday amongst poor widows nominated by Mr. Cartwright.

FREE SCHOOL. John Cartwright, esq. son of the above Richard Cartwright, esq. in pursuance of the will of his mother Mary, built a school-house in Aynho, and endowed it with a yearly rent-charge of £20 out of an estate at Milcomb, Oxfordshire, now the property of Robert Curling, esq. for the education of 25 free scholars, from the age of eight years and upwards, in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and afterwards (if not removed from the school) in the Greek and Latin tongues; and the master is enjoined not to take more than 25 other scholars unless he engage an usher to assist him. The present master, the rev. Richard Weston Leonard, vicar of Newbottle and King's Sutton, was nominated by Mr. Cartwright, and is required to teach 10 free scholars. The school premises consist of a respectable house and school-room, with a garden and play-ground adjoining. Bridges mentions in addition to the £20 for the master, 'xl. yearly to put out apprentices in this and the neighbouring villages;'[m] but this latter sum does not appear to be included in the rent-charge upon the estate.

POOR'S LAND. 'Thomas Drope, formerly rector, purchased land in the mead of the yearly value of il. xs. for the use of the poor. Sir Ralph Winwood gave xxl. lady Winwood xl. sir Edward Richardson vl. and Mr. Drope vl. of the purchase money.'[n] An allotment of one acre or thereabouts was awarded by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of those pieces of meadow called doles, and is now let for £2 per ann. The rent is added to the communion money, and distributed with it at Christmas among the poor of the parish, at the discretion of the minister and churchwardens.

BAKER'S ALMSHOUSES. John Baker, late of Oxford, glazier, by will dated 3 Feb. 1816, bequeathed all his personal estate, not otherwise disposed of, to William Ralph Cartwright, esq. and two other trustees, in trust to invest the proceeds in the purchase of stock in the public funds, and to apply the dividends, subject to two annuities for life of £40 thereby given, in the payment of so many annual stipends of £35 each as the said dividends would amount to, for the use and benefit of the same number of poor men and poor women for life, after deducting the charges of furnishing and providing to each of the poor men a new suit of clothes of uniform colour, materials, and make, and to each of the poor women a new suit of clothes in like manner uniform, and of furnishing for the poor men and women a competent stock of coals or other fuel; he desired that the objects of his charity should consist of an equal number, as nearly as might be, of poor men and women of the age of 50 years or upwards when chosen, and either unmarried persons or widowers or widows of the established church of England, and parishioners and inhabitants of Aynho, if proper objects could be found there, and in default to be chosen from the parishioners and inhabitants of the parish of St. Alldates, otherwise St. Olds, in the city of Oxford; but that all persons chosen to the charity should thenceforth reside permanently at Aynho, each of them in a separate house if opportunity should serve, and unless prevented by illness attend divine service twice every Sunday, and on holidays and festivals, in the church of Aynho, and should abstain from entering into the marriage state; and he authorised the trustees to amove any of the poor persons for misbehaviour, and to fill up any vacancies by amoval or death within one month, or as soon after as might be, and to enact rules and regulations for the better administering the charity as they in their discretion should think fit; and that the last survivor of the original trustees should, within one month after becoming the only survivor, transfer the stock and trust premises to the mayor, bailiffs, and commonalty of the city of Oxford, who should thenceforward stand possessed thereof for the purposes aforesaid; and he further directed that, upon the death of the last survivor of the original trustees, the lord or lady of the manor of Aynho, and the rector, churchwardens, and overseers of the poor of Aynho for the time being, should be the trustees of the charity (the lord of the manor having in all cases of an equality of voices the casting vote), and should nominate the objects of the charity, and manage and govern it according to the said regulations. The funds appropriated to this charity now consist of £800 new four per cents., and £4352. 6s. 4d. three per cent. cons. producing together a yearly dividend of £161. 10s. 7d. One of the annuities is still subsisting; but the trustees have proceeded to establish the charity by erecting a neat range of almshouses of excellent stone from a quarry on the lordship in the Magdalen college estate near Walton; the whole consisting of eight separate dwellings, each containing two apartments, and having a garden in front of the whole. The dwellings are now occupied by four poor men who receive 6s. weekly, and four poor women who receive 5s. weekly.

THE ROMAN ROAD from Benaventa or Isannavaria* (Borough Hill), through Brinavis† (Cheping Wardon) to Ælia Castra (Alcester near Bicester), entered this lordship by the road, now nearly deserted, but evidently an ancient trackway, through Walton grounds into the lane running north of the village, which in early court rolls, and in an old plan before the enclosure, is expressly designated the Portway. Bridges too calls it the 'Roman PORTWAY,'[n] though evidently unconscious of the line of stations with which it was the medium of communication. Crossing the turnpike to Buckingham its course is continued southward till it quits the county at Souldern, but it has been partially levelled, and reduced to the narrow pathway, walled in, which intersects Mr. Cartwright's park. In levelling the ground for this alteration the workmen disinterred a skeleton, with the legs gathered up, and inclosed between four stone slabs placed at right angles, which is considered the most ancient mode of interment. Similar discoveries have recently been made in the same direction by the side of the road to Bicester. Near the portion of the Portway north of the village a grooved brass celt was found a few years since, with a number of skeletons lying north and south. These are strong indications of residence anterior to the arrival of the Romans, and lead to the inference that the Portway in this district, as in some others, adopted the original trackway of the Britons. From the angle of the Portway, north-east of the village, it is not improbable but a military way branched off to the camp at Rainsborough, about a mile to the north.

Sir Ralph Winwood, a diplomatist and statesman of the seventeenth century, was a native of Aynho. As there is no evidence of the family ever enjoying a freehold here, it may be presumed that his father, Richard Winwood, gent. became resident as lessee of the Magdalen college estate. By the parish register it appears that Joan Weeks, of Buckingham, widow, was buried in the chapel of the church of Aynho, in the tomb of Richard Winwood, gent. her first husband, 28 May 1617. Ralph was born here in 1565, and was first admitted of St. John's college, Oxford, whence he was elected a probationer fellow of Magdalen college in 1582. He took the degree of A.M. in 1587, and LL.B. in 1590. He was proctor of the university in 1592, and soon after travelled on the continent for improvement. In 1599 he accompanied sir Henry Neville, ambassador to France, as his secretary, and in 1602-3 was sent on an embassy to the states of Holland. In 1607 he was knighted, and in conjunction with sir Richard Spencer appointed ambassador to Holland. In that capacity he delivered the remonstrance of James 1st to the assembly of the states against the heresy of Vorstius. In 1614 he became secretary of state, and he retained that situation till his death in Oct. 1617. He married Elizabeth, daughter and coheiress of —— Ball, of Totness, and on the death of his son, Richard Winwood, esq. the representation of the family passed through his daughter Anne to the ducal house of Montagu. His integrity was unquestioned, and he had a considerable knowledge of commercial and military affairs; but though accustomed to courts his manners are said to have been somewhat harsh and supercilious. More than a century after his decease a posthumous publication was edited by Edmund Sawyer, esq. under the title of "Memorials of affairs of state in the reigns of queen Elizabeth and king James 1st, collected chiefly from the original papers of sir Ralph Winwood, comprehending the negociations of sir Henry Nevile, sir Charles Cornwallis, sir Dudley Carleton, sir Thomas Edmondes, Mr. Trumble, Mr. Cottington, and others, at the courts of France and Spain, and in Holland, Venice, &c. wherein the principal transactions of those times are faithfully related, and arranged chronologically." Lond. 1725, 3 vols. fol. A second edition appeared in 1727. To this work is prefixed a portrait of sir Ralph, by Vertue, from a painting by Mierevelde. There is also another engraved portrait of him by Henry Hondius.

Shakerley Marmion, a poet and dramatist, son and heir of a father of the same names, was born in the manor house here, and baptised 21 Jan. 1602-3. From the free-school of Thame in Oxfordshire he was entered a gentleman commoner of Wadham college, Oxford, in 1617, and proceeded M.A. in 1624. His father having dissipated the means of providing for his family, young Shakerley was sent into the low countries as a military adventurer under sir Alexander Zinzan; but, not obtaining the promotion he expected, he returned to his native country; and, being known and esteemed by sir John Suckling the poet, was taken under his protection, and had a commission in the troop which he raised for king Charles 1st in the expedition against the Scots in the beginning of 1639. On his march northwards, being taken ill at York, he was conveyed at the expense of his friend to London, where he soon after expired. The charge of extravagance implied in Anthony Wood's statement of his having been in possession of £700 per ann. at least, and yet dying poor and in debt, ought to be transferred to the father, who probably had an income to that amount, prior to alienating this estate.

Young Shakerley early acquired a reputation amongst his contemporaries for poetic and dramatic talent; besides fugitive pieces dispersed in different publications, he wrote, "Holland's Leaguer, or a discourse of the life and actions of donna Britannica Hollandia, the arch-mistress of the wicked women of Utopia; an excellent comedy, as it hath been lately and often acted with great applause." 1632, 4to. A moral poem, in two books, intitled, "Cupid and Psyche; or an epic poem of Cupid and his mistress, as it was lately presented to the Prince Elector." 1637, 4to. "A fine Companion;" a play, 1633, 4to. "The Antiquary;" a comedy, 1641, 4to. He also wrote "The crafty Merchant, or the souldiered Citizen," a comedy never printed.

BRACKLEY,

Is written in domesday "Brachelai," and in early records "Brackele." No other etymology need be sought than that which naturally presents itself to every mind, brake ley or field, from the fern which formerly abounded in the lordship. The parish of Brackley, including the chapelry of St. James, Halse or Hawes, and the insulated woodlands of Whistley and Siresham Hatch, contains about 4000 acres. Of these, only about 1505 acres belong to Brackley properly so called; nearly 200 acres are old inclosure; and the remainder, inclusive of about 360 acres which constitute the chapelry of St. James, are open field, but a bill for inclosure is now in contemplation. The principal proprietors are, the lessees of Magdalen college, Oxford, who possess about 805 acres; the trustees under the will of the late duke of Bridgwater, lord of the manor, about 305 acres (inclusive of about 175 acres of leasehold under Magdalen college); Mr. Thomas Arnold about 165 acres; and Mrs. Elizabeth Loveday, of London, about 130 acres. It is bounded on the north by Gretworth in Wardon hundred, Stotesbury, and Radston; on the east by Whitfield, and south-east by a brook which divides it from Turweston in Buckinghamshire; on the south the river Ouse separates it from Evenley, and on the west from Hinton in the Hedges and Steane, and, partially, from Farthinghoe. The most prevalent soil is a deep strong loam on a calcareous substratum. The old inclosures are chiefly in permanent pasture; a considerable part of the open field is mowing land, and the rest is in the usual course of common field culture. Morton makes three leading divisions of heaths, and observes, "the Third Tract of Heaths is in the farthest Western part of the county beyond Brackley, by some called Bayard's Green, a heathy ground of perhaps several hundred acres within the lordships of Croughton, Imley, and Hinton; which yet is only a side of a much larger heath, extending into Oxfordshire."[a] The whole of this district is now brought into cultivation by inclosure. Pitt states that Brackley field has many curious agricultural plants growing spontaneously.[b] The town is plentifully supplied with copious springs. "There be 2 faire Springs or Wells a little West North West from St. Peter's churche. The one of them is caullyd St. Rumoaldes Well, wher they say that with in a fewe Dayes of his Birth he prechid. The other is caullyd [Gold] Welle. There issuithe a very little Streamelet out of eche of them, being not the Cast of a Coyte distant, and straite cum to one Streamelet, not so abundaunt of Water as it hathe bene. For the sayenge is, that it hath driven in tymes past a Cutler's Myll thereby. There is also a faire spring in the High Streate of the Towne, and out of it issuith a litle Pirle."[c] Two others also are deserving of notice; one at the entrance of the town from Northampton; and another called Linch spring, which rises at the back of the town, and flows under the hedge of the castle close. There is a mill on the Turweston stream.

MANORIAL HISTORY. AUBREY FEE. The great saxon manor of Halse or Hawes, with its dependencies in Brackley and Siresham, was the freenold of Azor.[d] He was probably the same person described under THORP BY NORTON as Azor son of Lefsi; and he had a son, Ulf, whose possessions in this county will be noticed under HOUGHTON PARVA. The Northamptonshire estates of Azor—for it will be seen he had lands in other counties—were differently disposed of by the norman conqueror; Thorp by Norton to the earl of Moreton;[e] Newton Bromswold and Addington to the bishop of Constance;[f] Wicken to Robert D'Oyley (de Oilgi);[g] and Halse with its dependencies was thus surveyed in domesday: Earl Aubrey (Albericus) held of the king two hides in "Hasou," two hides in "Sigresha'," and one hide in "Brachelai," with a church, and a mill worth 10s. yearly. In these five hides the arable land was twelve carucates and a half; of which two were in demesne with six servants; and twenty villeins with a priest and ten bordars had six carucates, leaving four carucates waste or unaccounted for. The meadow was twenty acres; and there was a wood two furlongs and a half long, and one furlong and a half wide. Of these lands Osmund held a third part in "Sigreha'." The whole was valued when received by earl Aubrey at £12, but at the survey was reduced to £9 yearly.[d]

The earl had another portion of "Brachelai," worth 100s. when received by him, but at the survey rated at only £4 yearly. It contained two hides. The arable land was five carucates; two in demesne with six servants; and three in the occupation of ten villeins and eight bordars. The meadow was ten acres.[d] Then follow the other lands of the earl in Lilbourn, Evenley, and Farthingho; and at the foot of the record is noted, these lands were earl Aubrey's, but now in the hands of the king.[d]

Who was this earl Aubrey? is a question which has given rise to much genealogical doubt and discussion. Dugdale, in the Baronage,[h] thus introduces him immediately after Aubrey de Vere. "Of this name, viz. Alberic, there was also an Earl in that age; for by that title he is recorded in the same survey (Domesday), though of what place it appears not; which earl possessed divers fair lordships in those days, viz. in Warwickshire six, in Leicestershire fourteen, in Northamptonshire six, in Oxfordshire two, and in Wiltshire ten: some of which, viz. those in Com. Wilts, he likewise held in King Edward the Confessor's time, which shews that he was an Englishman."[h] This conclusion, however, is erroneous, and evidently originated in an insulated reference to the first entry of the earl under that county; but in domesday it is not uncommon where several consecutive estates of a saxon lord occur, to reserve the name for the last, and in the present instance, at the close of the sixth entry, it is added, these six lands were held by Harding in the time of Edward the confessor.[j] The seventh estate had been earl Harold's; and the remaining three, it is observable, had belonged to Azor,[l] as also did one of the earl's manors in Oxfordshire.[k] The same distinguished antiquary, in treating of the earl's manors in Warwickshire, uniformly represents him as the progenitor of the Veres earls of Oxford,[l] though most if not all his manors passed to the earl of Mellent and Leicester. The indefatigable historian of Leicestershire, in his Introduction, considers earl Aubrey a different person from Aubrey de Vere, but confounds the earl's Northamptonshire estates with those of the Veres of Twywell and Addington.[m] In other portions of his work he assumes the two Aubreys to be the same individual;[n] and adduces the earl as "a rare example of an English nobleman holding lands under the Conqueror;"[o] but on this point the previous observation on Dugdale will apply with equal force. None of earl Aubrey's manors being inherited by the Veres, coupled with Aubrey de Vere being specified by name in domesday as lord of various manors in the counties of Middlesex,[p] Cambridge,[q] Huntingdon,[r] Essex,[s] and Suffolk,[t] which continued in his lineal descendants for many generations, involves an insuperable objection were there no other to their identity; but the name of earl Aubrey, with the temporary possession of his property and its resumption by the king, completely harmonizes with and corroborates the account of the imbecile earl of Northumberland by whom Walcher the warlike bishop of Durham was succeeded. "After whose death," says Dugdale, "one Alberic (a Norman by birth as it seems) was constituted Earl by King William (the Conqueror); who being a man unfit for public business, soon returned hence into his own country."[u] He had not quitted England at the commencement of the domesday survey, in which Northumberland is not included, or his name would not have stood in the list of tenants in capite; and if his departure had taken place long prior to its completion, his lands would probably not have remained in the hands of the king, but have been wholly or in part granted out again.

Mellent or Leicester Fee. The possessions of earl Aubrey in this county, thus abandoned, were subsequently bestowed on Robert de Bellomont, earl of Mellent in Normandy, but whether of the gift of the conqueror or of one of his sons is uncertain. He was created earl of Leicester in 7 Hen. 1 (1107), and dying at the abbey of Preaux in Normandy, in 18 Hen. 1 (1118), was buried there. He married two wives, Emma, daughter of Roger de Breteuil, and Isabel—or its synonym Elizabeth—daughter of Hugh earl of Vermandois, but genealogists are not agreed by which he had his children, Burton[x] and Nichols[y] assigning them to the first, and Dugdale[z] and Anderson[a] to the second. Waleran his eldest son had the earldom of Mellent and the Norman estates. Robert the second son, surnamed Bossu, enjoyed the earldom of Leicester and the English estates. Two wives have been attributed to him; Uta[b] or Amicia,[c] daughter and heiress of Ralph de Waet, or Guader, earl of Norfolk, and Amicia, daughter of Ralph de Montfort, but which was the mother of his family is uncertain. His son and heir Robert, surnamed Blanchmains, earl of Leicester, was certified in the hydarium of Hen. 2 to hold "Brackele" and "Hausho" for seven hides and a half,[d] exclusive of Siresham, which was separately entered. In 19 Hen. 2 (1173) he actively abetted the unnatural conspiracy of the young princes against their father; but being defeated and taken prisoner in Suffolk at the head of a body of troops with which he had recently landed from Normandy, his estates were seized, and in 21 Hen. 2 (1180) Hugh de Gundeville, sheriff of the county, rendered an account of £12. 3s. 8d. for the farm of Brackley before the earl returned to his allegiance.[e] He died on his return from a pilgrimage to Jerusalem in 1190 (2 Ric. 1);[f] and on the decease of his son Robert, surnamed Fitz Parnel, earl of Leicester, without issue in 1204 (6 Joh.),[f] his immense patrimony was divided between his two sisters and coheiresses, Amicia, wife of Simon de Montfort, earl of Montfort and Rochfort in Normandy, and Margaret, wife of Saher de Quincy of Buckby. Simon had for his wife's purparty one moiety of the honor of Leicester, with the barony of Hinckley in Leicestershire, and was soon after confirmed hereditary high steward of England and earl of Leicester. Saher, in right of his wife, had the other moiety of the honor of Leicester, with the barony of Groby in Leicestershire, and Brackley; and being in 1206-7 (8 Joh.) created earl of Winchester,[g] this portion of the honor of Leicester was henceforward denominated the Honor of Winchester. In the Testa de Nevill, about 12 Joh. the earl of Winchester was certified to hold "Halso and Brachel" of the king in capite by barony, but the "caput" or head of his barony was in Leicestershire.[h] Engaging in the baronial confederacy against king John, he continued in hostilities after the accession of Henry III. and was taken prisoner at the battle of Lincoln; but returning to fealty the same year, had restitution of his lands in the counties of Northampton, Wilts, Warwick, Leicester, Oxford, Cambridge, Huntingdon, Hertford, Essex, Norfolk, and Suffolk.[i] He died in his progress to Palestine in 1220 (4 Hen. 3),[k] but Robert his eldest son being then absent in the crusade, Roger the second son obtained livery of his father's lands; but Margaret his mother retained Brackley till her death in 19 Hen. 3 (1234); in which year he entered on her inheritance and had a confirmation of the earldom of Winchester.[l] He died in 1264 (48 Hen. 3),[m] leaving three daughters and coheiresses, between whom a partition of the knight's fees of the honor of Winchester was made in 5 Edw. 1 (1277);[n] and in the distribution of the earl's demesne manors, Brackley fell to the share of

Elen the youngest daughter, wife of Alan la Zouch, whom she survived many years; and in 4 Edw. 1 (1276) it was found, by presentment of the jurors of the hundred, that she and her ancestors had the return of writs and estreats, pleas of excessive distress, a gallows, and assize of bread and beer in Brackley from the time of king John.[o] She died in 24 Edw. 1 (1296) seised (int. al.) of the manor of "Hausho," with capital messuage, 425 acres of arable and 100 of meadow in demesne, 15 virgates in villenage, two woods within the forest, profits of courts, and the "villata" or great town of Brackley, parcel of said manor, with view of frank pledge, courts, market, and fairs, held of the king in capite by service of half a fee, and was succeeded by her grandson and heir Alan la Zouch.[p] He was summoned to parliament from 25 Edw. 1 till his death in 7 Edw. 2 (1314),[q] when his inheritance devolved on his two eldest daughters and coheiresses,[q] the younger having taken the veil, and in the following year the manor of Halse and Brackley, with the advowsons of Yelvertoft and Brackley hospital, were (int. al.) assigned to

Robert de Holand and Matilda his wife, the second daughter, for her purparty.[r] In 15 Edw. 2 he joined the insurrection raised by his patron the earl of Lancaster, whom, however, he treacherously deserted, and in 1 Edw. 3 (1327) petitioned the king for the restitution of his lands, which he complained had been seized by the late king without reasonable cause. A writ of inquiry into the facts was directed to the court of exchequer, and in the following year a return was made into parliament of his estates, including the manor of "Brakle cum Halis;"[s] but it is doubtful if he lived to resume them, as he was beheaded in a wood near Windsor the same year, by some partizans of the earl of Lancaster, in revenge for his ingratitude to the late earl.[t]

In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) Matilda de Holand, his widow, in plea to a writ of quo warranto, claimed in her manor of "Hals," of the honor of Winchester, view of frank pledge twice a year; in "Brackele," a member of the said manor, once a year; in Farthingho, Woodford, Maidford, Astrop, Farndon, and Adston [Atteneston], hamlets and members of the said manor, twice a year in either of them indifferently at her pleasure; and in the hamlets of Spratton, Haselbech, Holdenby, Walgrave, Nortoft (in Clipston), and Pitsford, members of the said manor, twice a year in either of them indifferently at her pleasure: weyfs and strays, tol and theam, infangtheof, soc and sac, gallows, tumbril, pillory, return of writs, pleas of withernam, and acquittance from suit to shires, hundreds, or sheriff's aid, money given for murder or theft, and from pontage, passage, toll, pedage, stallage, talliage, stangeld, danegeld, blodwit, fredwit, and works of castles, walls, and bridges throughout the kingdom; free warren in her demesne lands, and free chase in Whistley wood [Wyssele]; and a market every Wednesday, and a fair on the vigil, day, and morrow of St. Andrew every year in her borough of "Brackele." For all these privileges she pleaded that her manor of "Hals" and other lands were formerly in seisin of Robert de Mealan or Mellent earl of Leicester, after whose death they descended to Amicia and Cecilia as daughters and heiresses; the purparty of Amicia descended to Robert as son and heir; from Robert to Roger de Quincy as son and heir; from Roger to Elen as daughter and heiress; from Elen to Roger la Zouch as son and heir; from Roger to Alan as son and heir; and from Alan to the present claimant and Elen as daughters and coheiresses; and she offered to produce the inspeximus charter of the present king, reciting and confirming the charter of king John granting the aforesaid privileges and acquittances to the said Robert earl of Leicester, and the charter of king Henry 3rd, in which, reciting the charter of king John, he granted and confirmed the said privileges and acquittances to the said Roger de Quincy earl of Winchester for his moiety of the honor of Leicester as fully as if he held the whole honor, of which moiety the manor of Halse was parcel, and was then held by her in right of inheritance. It is obvious to remark here, and the observation may be applied generally to ancient records, that the remote descents in these pleadings cannot be implicitly relied on. The Robert earl of Leicester alluded to above must have been Robert Fitz Parnel, as he was the only one cotemporary with king John, but the two coheiresses were his sisters, not daughters, and the youngest is named Cecilia instead of Margaret; Robert Quincy is derived from Amicia the eldest instead of Margaret the youngest sister; Roger is made son and heir of Robert instead of brother; and Elen is represented as daughter and heiress of Roger instead of the youngest of three daughters and coheiresses. To this point therefore, though the leading course of descent is correct, the details are erroneous; but from this point the descent is correctly deduced. The king's attorney alleging that neither Matilda nor her ancestors had claimed these privileges at the last iter, she was admitted to claim them by replevin for a fine of 20s., and the jury presented that she was entitled to and had duly exercised all the said privileges, except in amercing offenders against the assize of bread and beer in 2s. instead of punishing them with tumbril and pillory, for which breach of law the view of frank pledge was taken into the king's hands, but restored to her again on petition for a fine of one mark.[u]

On the decease of her son Robert lord Holand in 47 Edw. 3 (1373), the family estates passed to his granddaughter and heiress Matilda, aged 17 years, wife of John lord Lovell,[x] of whose family an account will be given under TITCHMARSH, the head of their barony, and in whose line it continued down to Francis, the last lord Lovell, created viscount Lovell by Edward the fourth. He was one of the unpopular triumvirate whose influence over Richard the third gave rise to the well known distich;* and on the accession of Henry the seventh was attainted in parliament and his estates confiscated.

Baron and viscount LOVELL. Vide TITCHMARSH.

The manors of Brackley and Halse, parcel of the forfeited possessions of viscount Lovel, were granted in 4 Hen. 7 (1488) to George (Stanley) lord Strange of Knockyn,[y] in right of his wife, and son and heir apparent of Thomas 1st earl of Derby. He narrowly escaped falling a sacrifice to the political jealousy of Richard the 3d; for the earl having married the countess of Richmond, mother of his competitor, the tyrant demanded lord Strange as hostage for his father's fidelity, and suspecting the earl's movements at Bosworth, had actually issued orders for beheading the son before the commencement of the battle, and was with difficulty persuaded to postpone the execution. He died in 1497 (13 Hen. 7) during his father's lifetime, and was succeeded by his son and heir Thomas, who on his grandfather's decease in 19 Hen. 7 (1504) became 2d earl of Derby. His son Edward, the 3d earl, was a most exemplary nobleman both in his public and private relations, and lived in such a style of splendour, that Camden remarks, "with Edward earl of Derby's death the glory of hospitality seemed to fall asleep." His grandson Ferdinando, the 5th earl, enjoyed his dignities scarcely two years. Hesketh, an agent of the jesuits and english fugitives, tempted him to assume the crown in right of his grandmother Alianore, daughter and coheiress of the princess Mary, sister of king Henry 8th; promising him powerful foreign aid to assert his claim, and threatening him with sudden death if he hesitated, or divulged the project. He rejected the offer with indignation, revealed the plot, and the instigator was convicted of treason: the menaced vengeance proved too prophetic, and he died shortly after in the vigour of life, not without suspicion of poison. His brother William succeeded to the earldom, but the estates not settled in tail male descended to his three daughters and coheiresses; and on partition the manor and borough of Brackley with Halse were assigned (int. al.) to

Frances the second daughter, wife of John Egerton, 2d viscount Brackley and 1st earl of Bridgwater. He was second but eldest surviving son of the celebrated lord chancellor Ellesmere, and it was doubtless in contemplation of, or subsequent to this marriage, and with a view to this succession of the title, that the chancellor adopted Brackley for the designation of his viscountcy, as he himself had no property or interest in the place, and it would be difficult therefore to divine any other motive for the selection; nor is it improbable but the match itself originated in the previous connection of the families, the chancellor being father-in-law to his son's wife, as will be seen by reference to the subjoined pedigree. From John, the 1st earl, this property regularly descended down to Francis, the 6th earl, and 3d and last duke of Bridgwater, whose noble spirit and unshaken perseverance, combined with the genius of Brindley, by adding Inland Navigation to the other sources of commercial wealth, entitle him to be considered one of the greatest benefactors of his country. On his decease, unmarried, 8 Mar. 1803, the marquisate of Brackley and dukedom of Bridgwater became extinct, but the barony of Ellesmere, viscountcy of Brackley, and earldom of Bridgwater, resorted to general John-William Egerton, M.P. for this borough; and from him, on his death without issue in Oct. 1823, to his only brother Francis Henry, the 8th and present earl. In the disposition of the duke's property by his will, the family seat of Ashridge, with the estates in Bucks, Herts, Salop, and Yorkshire, were devised to the earl; and his town-house in Cleveland-row, with his canal property in Lancashire, and the Brackley and Halse estate, were vested in trustees to the use of his nephew, George Granville Leveson earl Gower, now marquis of Stafford, for life, remainder to his second son, lord Francis Leveson Gower, in tail male, with divers remainders over.

Leicester Abbey Lands. Robert earl of Mellent re-founded the saxon church of St. Mary ad Castro in Leicester, placing in it a dean and twelve secular canons, and endowing it (int. al.) with all the churches of the soke of "Schepesheved" (Shepeshead) in Leicestershire, and of the soke of "Halso,"[z] in which was included Brackley with Halse, Siresham, Farthingho, and a portion of Evenley and Lilbourn. His son Robert de Bossu earl of Leicester, converted this establishment of secular canons, with its endowment, into a monastery of the Augustine order at Leicester, called the abbey of St. Mary de Pratis, which he founded in 1137[a] or 1143.[b] In one of the monastic narratives of the foundation, the grant in Shepeshead and Halse is represented as originating in the son and not the father, and to have consisted not merely of the churches, but of whatsoever Osbert the chaplain held of him in those sokes, as well as of the churches of both sokes, with the church of "Sygresham" (Siresham), which was an acknowledged member of the parish of "Brachaleia," with lands, tithes, and all pertinencies, and the tithes of his pence, and of pannage in both sokes.[a] In the confirmation charter of king Henry II. the latter clause of this grant, so far as relates to Brackley and Halse, is thus varied and explained; the church of Brackele, with the chapels of Alsou (Halse) and of Sigresham, with their pertinencies, and with the tithes of the pence of the rents of Brackele and of the soke of Alsou.[c] Saher de Quincy gave to the abbot and convent six librates of rent in "Brakley and Halso," in return for seisin of eight librates of rent in the suburbs of Leicester, which they had of the fee of the bishop of Lincoln.[d] Margaret de Quincy confirmed all the grants of her ancestors the earls of Leicester; gave to the abbot and convent a virgate of land in Shepeshead, with a mill, and certain privileges in Charnwood forest, in recompense of 60s. for the tithes of Leicester, and for the tithes of pence of both sokes (of Shepeshead and Halse) which they had been anciently accustomed to receive at the exchequer of Leicester, reserving to them all the tithes of pannage and of the sale of wood in both sokes; and farther granted to them that all their men and tenants in "Brakley, Sygresham, Westcote, Halso, Farnigo" (Farthingho), and other places in her fee, should be quit from all secular services, suit at court, view of frank pledge, and foreign service.[d] Roger de Quincy confirmed these privileges, and the tithes of all sales in his woods of "Acle" (Oakley) and of "Wiffeley," an evident misnomer for Wisseley or Whistley wood in this parish.[d] In 1 Edw. 1 (1272), the abbot of Leicester had a grant of common of pasture in Brackley;[e] in 7 Edw. 2 (1313) the abbey was found to have the fourth part of a fee in Brackley, of the fee of Alan la Zouch deceased;[f] and in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) the abbot, in reply to a writ of quo warranto which will be more particularly detailed under Farthingho, substantiated his claim to view of frank pledge and other privileges here.[g] From the customs of the abbot's tenants, as recorded in "Charyte's Rentale" about 1477, it appears that in the days of the earls of Leicester every virgate in Brackley rendered aid; three "maturas," or mattresses, probably of rushes, at the feast of St. Michael, three mowings in seed-time, three "levationes," and carriage of hay to the earl's house, three weedings, and three mowings or reapings of corn in autumn; but the customs then at the will of the abbot were, that every virgate should render 12s. yearly, and be free from all service except frank-pledge, and also 13s. 4d. yearly, and a heriot, except "marcheta," or a fine on the marriage of children.[h] It was also certified that the tenants in Brackley ought to give to the abbot two heriots, as appeared in divers court rolls by agreements made between the cellarer and the tenants.[i] The total received by the abbot in 1477 from Brackley was £17. 7s. 9d. and from Halse 4s. besides grain:[k] the average produce of the abbey lands in Brackley was returned the same year at three or four quarters of wheat, three quarters of rye, thirty quarters of barley, twenty quarters of pease, and half a quarter of oats; and the abbey lands in Halse at three quarters of wheat, three or four quarters of rye, twenty quarters of barley, six or seven quarters of pease, and four or five quarters of oats.[l] At the time of the dissolution the temporalities of the abbey of Leicester here had dwindled down to £3. 8s. 6d. yearly in rents of messuages and lands, and 4s. in common fines.[m]

Bittlesden Abbey had two messuages and an acre of land in Brackley, and three acres and a half in Evenley, of the gift of Thomas Mayo of Bittlesden in 4 Hen. 8 (1512).[n]

The Castle, the original residence of the feudal lords, was early deserted; for, in the reign of Henry III. Roger de Quincy earl of Winchester remitted to the hospital here 20s. which they ought to render for the site of the castle, with the pool of the upper vivary or fish-pond;[o] probably, as Bridges suggests,[p] the meadows, now part of the Magdalen college estate, called the "Fische weeres" in the following description by Leland: "There was a fayre Castle in the Southe West End of the Towne, on the left Hand or Ripe of the Riveret. The Site and Hille where it stode is yet evidently sene, and berithe the name of the Castle Hill; but there is not sene any Peace of a Waull stondinge. There ly 2 praty smaul low Medowes hard by West of this Castle Hill, and beare the name of the Fische-weeres: and a great likelyhode there is that they were sometyme Fishe Pooles. Divers Rowes of Howsynge hath bene about the Quarters of the Castle, now clene doune."[q] Quincy also granted to the hospital the castle mill with its service;[r] and in 30 Hen. 6 the master of the hospital demised to John Thorne a close called "the castell."[s] The outline of the works is still visible.

The Manor-house which succeeded the castle has disappeared; the present building, plain in character and moderate in size, was probably formed out of the offices. It stands in the upper part of the high street, and is still used for holding the manorial courts.

Municipal Government. The earliest notice of the burgeses of Brackley occurs in the reign of Hen. 3, when Roger de Quincy, by a charter without date, granted certain liberties and privileges to the "burgensibus de Brackley;"[t] and in the 56th of the same reign a composition with the master and brothers of the hospital was entered into by the "burgenses de Brackley, seu communitas gentium villæ."[u] Bridges says,[x] 'In the time of 'Edward II. it was made a staple town for the wool trade, and had the honour of a mayor conferred on it in the 'seventh year of the same reign'—citing 'Pat. 7 Edw. 2. p. 1. inter MSS. Hatton,' for his authority; but I can find no reference to such a grant either in the Hatton MSS. or in the calendar of the patent rolls. In the plea to a writ of quo warranto in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) against Matilda de Holand, narrated in a previous page, it is distinctly styled the borough of Brackley; and it is so described in some of the inquisitions post mortem of its lords.[y] It was a place of considerable commercial importance as a staple for wool in the fourteenth century: when the principal towns were summoned in 11 Edw. 3 (1337) to depute three or four of their citizens to attend a royal council at Westminster on matters connected with trade, a writ issued to the "bailiffs of Brakkele,"[z] who delegated John de Astwick, John de Well, and William le Rich; and in two other councils, in the 16th[a] and 17th[b] years of this reign, Robert Sondan of Braklee was summoned amongst the leading merchants of the time. Its prosperity however had vanished long prior to the time of Elizabeth, as is evident from Leland, who says, Brackley "was a staple for Wolle, privileged with a Major [mayor], the which Honor yet remayneth to this pore Towne;"[c] and Camden expresses himself still more strongly, "Brackley was antiently a famous staple for wool, but now only boasts how great and wealthy it once was by its ruins, and by a Mayor it retains for its chief magistrate."[c] Though both these antiquaries concur in stating that this borough was then governed by a mayor, yet I can find no record of a charter of incorporation till 11 Nov. 2 Jac. 2 (1686), when the king, for the amelioration of the borough of Brackley, willed that it should have a certain or established manner of keeping the peace for better governing the people, and should be and continue a borough; and granted that the town commonly called Old Brackley, and every part and member thereof, with the fields adjacent, and the said borough of Brackley—meaning, I apprehend, the new town as distinguished from the old—should be a free borough of itself, and all the burgesses and inhabitants of the said town and borough should be one body corporate and politic by the name of the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Brackley. The charter then ordains that they shall have a common seal, and a mayor, recorder, seven aldermen (of whom one shall be mayor), eight capital burgesses, eighteen burgesses, a common or town clerk, and a sergeant at mace; that Matthew Mashbourn shall be the first mayor, till Tuesday before Michaelmas day next ensuing, when another shall be elected out of the aldermen; that John earl of Bridge-

Lawrence Jackman, and Robert Wilkins, gents. the first aldermen; John Trulocke, Thomas Wilkins, John Taylor, Philip Gibbons, Richard Watts, Philip Shore, Conway Rand, and William Major, the first capital burgesses; and Robert Bradford, William Squerrell, the said Philip Gibbons, Moses Loveday, the said John Trulocke, Bartholomew Atton, John Stone, George Loveday, Robert Thonger, Thomas Freeman, John Evans, John Garland, the said Philip Shore, James Griffin, esq. the said Thomas Wilkins, the said Richard Watts, John Leaper, William Clarke, the said William Major, the said Conway Rand, Thomas Evans, Edward Hunton, Charles Loveday, Samuel Jackman, the said John Taylor, and Abel Hall, the first burgesses; Philip Style, gent. the first common clerk; and the said John Garland the first sergeant at mace; to continue in their respective offices during life, unless removed for bad government, misbehaviour, or other reasonable cause; that the mayor, recorder or deputy recorder, aldermen, and capital burgesses, shall be called the common council, and they and their successors for the time being, or the major part of them, the mayor or recorder or deputy recorder being one of them, on public summons to be notified by their officers, shall assemble in the town-hall or elsewhere in the borough, and shall have power to make bye laws for the regulation of the borough, and to enforce penalties for non-observance; that the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, or the major part of them, the recorder or deputy recorder being one, shall have power and authority, for reasonable cause, to remove any of the corporate body and elect others in their stead; that the recorder or his deputy shall, on Tuesday before Michaelmas day, nominate two of the aldermen, out of whom the mayor, recorder or his deputy, aldermen, and burgesses, or the major part of them, shall elect one to be mayor for the year ensuing, and in case of death or removal from office the vacancy shall be supplied for the remainder of the year at the next court in manner aforesaid; that on death or removal of an alderman, the recorder or deputy recorder shall nominate two of the capital burgesses, out of whom the mayor, recorder or deputy recorder, aldermen, and burgesses shall elect one in manner aforesaid; that on the death or removal of a burgess, the vacancy shall be supplied out of the inhabitants, to be elected in manner aforesaid; that after the death of the earl of Bridgewater, the present recorder, the heirs of the said earl shall from time to time elect, nominate, and constitute another person to be recorder during the pleasure of the said heir; that on death or removal of a capital burgess, the recorder or deputy recorder shall nominate two of the burgesses, out of whom the mayor, recorder or deputy recorder, aldermen, and the residue of the capital burgesses shall elect one in manner as aforesaid; that a chamberlain shall be elected by the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses out of the capital burgesses, to continue in office during their pleasure; that the earl of Bridgewater and his heirs may and shall appoint one person to be sergeant at mace and keeper of the gaol during pleasure; that the mayor for the time being, and the mayor immediately preceding for one year after his departure from office, and the recorder or deputy recorder, shall be justices of the peace within the borough, with like powers as the justices of the county; that the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses may hold a court of record on Tuesday in every second week before the recorder or his deputy; that the inhabitants shall not be empannelled on juries out of the borough; that the sheriff, or gaoler of the county shall receive all felons or malefactors committed to their custody by the justices of the borough; that the earl of Bridgewater or his heirs shall appoint a deputy recorder in case of absence or sickness of the recorder; that the crown shall have power to remove any of the corporate body or their officers at pleasure; and that there shall be three fairs in the borough yearly, viz. on the Wednesday in Easter week, on the feast of St. Barnabas, unless on a Sunday, and then to be held on Monday, on the Wednesday before the feast of St. Michael, and also an ancient fair on the feast of St. Andrew; and a market on Wednesday in every week.[c]

By another, dated 17 Sept. 4 Jac. 2 (1688) the king, reciting as before, ordains and grants that Henry Hinde, esq. shall be the first mayor till Tuesday before Michaelmas day next ensuing; that Henry earl of Peterborough shall be recorder; Henry Farmer, esq. Bartholomew Holmes, esq. the said Henry Hinde, Edward Goge, Francis Hinde, Edward Hardinge, and William Gill, gentlemen, shall be aldermen; Nathaniel Jones, Robert Thonger, Robert Hilton, jun. William Major, John Taylor, and William North, shall be capital burgesses; John Leper, Thomas Freeman, William Clark, William Squirrell, Thomas Preswell, Conway Rand, Abel Hall, Nicholas Bell, Robert Mynn of London, William Hastings of Towcester, Sir Benjamin Bathurst, knight, Edward Griffin, John Needham, William Hastings, sen. and William Hastings, jun. John Hastings, esquires, Daniel Needham, and John Bray, shall be burgesses; John Bray shall be common clerk by himself or deputy; and John Garland shall be sergeant at mace; to continue in their respective offices for life, unless removed for bad government or misbehaviour, or by the king or his successors as after mentioned; and that the mayor, recorder or deputy, aldermen, capital burgesses, and burgesses, shall be the common council of the said borough. All the other provisions correspond with the preceding charter, except, instead of the recorder being appointed by the heirs of the earl of Bridgewater, the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses are empowered, after the death of the earl of Peterborough, to elect any fit person to be recorder for life. A power is reserved in this charter of removing the mayor, recorder, deputy recorder, chamberlain, common clerk, sergeant at mace, justices of the peace, aldermen, capital burgesses, and burgesses at pleasure, by order in council, with a proviso that if within twenty days after such removal, or after the decease of any of the said officers, the rest of them shall be commanded by letters mandatory of the king or his successors to admit and swear others in their room of the nomination of the king, that then the said mayor and other officers, however few in number they may happen to be, are required to elect and admit the persons so to be nominated, and any other election or admission to be null and void. This charter contains also a dispensation to all the corporation and officers from taking the oaths of supremacy and allegiance, and the oath prescribed in the act of 13 Car. 2 for well governing corporations, and from receiving the sacrament of the Lord's supper, and from making and subscribing the declarations in 13 Car. 2 and 25 Car. 2; and it provides, lastly, that no recorder or common clerk be admitted unless with the consent and approbation of the king, his heirs, and successors, to be signified under the royal sign manual.[d]

Seal. Edward third earl of Derby, as a special mark of his favor, gave to the corporation the crest of his family for their common seal, circumscribed "Sigillum Burgi de Brackley." The seal now in use has the arms of Egerton and Stanley quarterly, surmounted by the crests, and with the same circumscription as the preceding one.

The Town-hall is a handsome stone building, 60 ft. long by 30 ft. wide, and being supported on open arches, the basement story is appropriated to the use of the market. It was erected by the first duke of Bridgwater in 1705, 'and is said to have cost upwards of two thousand pounds.'[e]

Borough Representation. Brackley is what is colloquially termed a close borough, and did not send representatives to parliament till the reign of Edward VI. when it probably obtained that honor through the influence of the earl of Derby. The electors are thirty-three in number. The mayor is the returning officer, and the right of voting, as confirmed by a decision of the house of commons in 1714, is vested in the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, whether resident or not within the borough.

1 Dec. 1710. John Burgh, esq. petitioned against the return of Charles Egerton, alleging that one William Thonger having by indirect practices got possession of the precept, gave it to Richard Watts, who was not the legal mayor; yet Francis Neale the steward swore him as such, and refused to swear in William Mason, who was duly elected mayor on the 2d of Oct. last; and that by bribery and other undue practices the said Charles Egerton had procured himself to be returned in wrong of the petitioner. The numbers on the poll were, C. Egerton 17, J. Burgh 16. As to bribery, Thomas Durant said he had been offered ten guineas by Mr. Price, and £5 by Mr. Frewen for his vote for a common councilman or burgess, and the same for Mr. Burgh, but that he had refused both, and voted for Mr. Egerton. Elizabeth Watts said, after the writs were out Mr. Frewin offered a treat at her house, or any thing else, if her husband would vote for Mr. Burgh; and three weeks before the election Welchman offered Hilton to pay a debt of £8 if he would be for Mr. Burgh. The house resolved that Charles Egerton was not duly elected, and that

12 Nov. 12 Anne (1713).

Hon. William Egerton, re-elected.

Paul Methuen, esq.

John Burgh, esq. and Henry Watkins, esq. severally petitioned, alleging that the sitting members were unduly returned by means of bribery, and at the instigation of a peer of the realm. The petitioners contended also that the right of election was in the corporate body generally, while the sitting members insisted it was in those only who were resident within the borough. In support of the charge of bribery and unparliamentary influence, the petitioners' counsel called several witnesses. John Welchman deposed that Robert Wilkins, sen. told him before the election that he was for the sitting members, because (the late) lord Bridgwater, the last time he renewed his lease, gave him a life upon a promise to vote for the candidates his lordship recommended, and that his farm was £40 per ann. and the adding a life was worth £100: that the present lord Bridgwater came to Brackley a fortnight before the election and staid till it was over: that Clare, a poor taylor, told the witness that he intended voting for the petitioners, but the morning of the election the agent of the sitting members promised to pay his debts to the amount of £35, but the lord's steward advised him not to pay the money till after the election, as he was apprehensive of a petition. Robert Lydall deposed that Magdalen college had a great estate in Brackley, and used formerly to recommend one of the members; that he was deputed by the college to use his influence for the petitioners, and asked Thomas Frewin for his vote, but he answered he was under obligation to vote for the sitting members, as he held an estate of £50 or £60 per ann. of lord Bridgwater, and had but one life in it, and my lord had promised for his vote to give him one life, and add another upon easy terms, upon which representation the witness went to lord Bridgwater and desired his lordship not to insist upon both Frewin's votes, but his lordship would not release him. Joan Hunter deposed that she asked John Howes to vote for the petitioners, and he said they should have it for 60 guineas, but the next day he came to her and told her she need not trouble herself any further, for he was engaged for the sitting members; she did not hear him say he had any money, but that whoever he served should give him sixty guineas. The sitting members recriminated by calling William Thonger, who said that he voted for the sitting members, but that Mr. Buck, Mr. Collis, and Mr. Walton, who made interest for the petitioners, told him if they could get his vote they should carry the election, and desired him to take 100 or 200 guineas, or write down what he wished and he should have it, for they had money enough in town and would not lose the election for want of it. And Robert Hilton deposed that, being in Brackley street, a fellow of Magdalen college asked him to go and drink a glass of wine with him; he went, was made drunk, and carried away he could not tell whither, and was kept without seeing any light till the election was over, when he was attended home with four horses, but knew not where he was nor any of the company, except Mr. Jackson, bishop Crewe's gardener, and that he would have voted for the sitting members had he been at the election.

ANNALS. According to Leland, "this Toune florished in the Saxons' tyme, ontyll the Danes rasid it;"[l] but the name of Brackley does not once occur in the Saxon Chronicle, and its claim to so remote an origin rests merely on a vague tradition. The same antiquary, in another portion of his work, says, "Master Paynell told me that he saw at Brakley, in the Parts by Bukyngham, manifest Tokens that it had bene a Wallyd Towne, and Tokens of the Gates and Towres in the Walles by the halfe Cirkles of the Foundations of them (I sowght diligently and could find no Tokens of Walles or Diches). And that there hathe bene a Castell, the Dyke and Hills whereof do yet appeare. (I saw the Castle plott.)"[m] The other reports of "Master Paynell" are either too unfounded or too trivial to deserve notice. To proceed from conjecture to facts, Brackley will be found historically associated with the commencement of three of the most memorable civil contests in the annals of our country; the baronial wars in the reigns of the despotic John and his imbecile son Henry; and the yet more eventful struggle between the parliament and the crown in the seventeenth century.

[k] Commons' Journals, vol. 17.

1215 (17 John.) The tyranny of John having roused the barons to resistance, they assembled in Easter week at Stamford, with two thousand knights and a powerful army in their train. On the monday following they rendezvoused at Brackley, and the king being then at Oxford, and apprised of their movements, despatched the archbishop of Canterbury and William Mareschall earl of Pembroke to ascertain their claims. The barons delivered to them a schedule founded on and comprising the ancient laws and customs of the realm, and threatened if the king refused to confirm them under his seal they would proceed to compel him by seizing his castles, lands, and possessions. John, when the articles were read to him, in a fit of rage asked why they did not demand his kingdom, and swore he would never grant such liberties as would make him a servant or a slave. With this peremptory denial of their demands the royal delegates returned to the barons at Brackley, who immediately elected Robert Fitz Walter their general, styling him the marshall of the army of God and of holy church. They then marched to Northampton, but after ineffectually investing the castle for fifteen days they raised the siege.[n] "Magna Charta," the boasted bulwark of English liberty, it is perhaps needless to add was the successful result of this struggle.

1264 (48 Henry III.) The king and the barons having agreed to refer their differences to the arbitration of the king of France, the latter were dissatisfied with his decision, and resumed a warlike attitude. On the 26th of March (1264) the king, by letters patent dated at Oxford, gave the bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, and Nicholas archdeacon of Norfolk, on the part of himself and his nobles, full and free power to treat at Brackley with Simon de Montfort earl of Leicester and the barons adhering to him, in the presence of sir John de Valencinis, nuncio from the king of France, for the security, tranquillity, and firm peace of the kingdom; engaging to ratify and confirm whatever might be done by the bishop and archdeacon with the counsel and assent of the said nuncio.[o] The negociation failed; and prince Edward joining his royal father at Oxford, they united their forces, and marching to Northampton, made a breach in the town wall and took it by assault.

1642 (18 Charles I.) The differences between the king and the parliament having become irremediable, both parties appealed to arms. The royal standard was erected at Nottingham on the twenty-second of August, and three troops of horse, amounting to two hundred men, under the command of sir John Byron and his two brothers, were immediately detached to Oxford. They reached Brackley on the twenty-eighth, intending to halt for refreshment, but were so closely pursued by the country people, to the number of four or five hundred, that, whilst their supper was preparing, an alarm was given and the trumpet sounded a march. The colonel and his brothers with about half their men effected their escape towards Oxford; but before the remainder could get clear of the town they were attacked by the inhabitants and countrymen with pikes, bills, and pitchforks, and completely routed, with the loss of "above 60 horse; two hatsfull of gold; about 2000 pounds in silver; a trumpet; a box with great riches and wealth; a packet of rich cloaths of sir John Byron's, worth 200 pounds; about fourteen or fifteen pair of pistols; a sumpter horse of sir John Byron's, very rich; and betwixt 60 or 70 men. The value of all the gold, money, horse, and apparell could not be worth lesse than 6 or 8000 pounds." One of the narrators gives a simple but striking picture of the spirit of selfishness and plunder which doubtless actuated both parties in these civil contentions. "Whatsoever any particular man hath tooke, he hath it to himselfe, insomuch that many in Brackley have each of them a horse, and many of the country have gotten them horses and ride home on them. I myselfe being this morning at Brackley, having intelligence of a couple of cavalliers that were hid in the towne all night, and conveyed away out of the towne by two ill affected persons, five of us pursued them and overtooke them in Evenly field with those two that conveighed them away; two of our company got each of them a sword; and I searching under one of their coates, found a pistoll charged with a brace of bullets, which I tooke from him, and that I keepe." In the hurry and confusion "the captain" (Byron) sent away a cabinet and packet of writings, and other things of great value, by a servant to Oxford, who, mistaking his way, hid his treasure in a "close of oats" near Pimlico house, and wandered to Croton, where he was taken by Mr. Clarke and the constable; and the forces of Banbury and the country round coming to Croton, forced him to discover all, and he brought them to the place where the packet was hidden, which they took and carried to Banbury.[p]

1643 (19 Charles I.) The king, flushed with the success of his arms in the west, commenced the siege of Glocester in person on the twentieth of August; and the parliament determining to make a grand effort for the relief of that city, dispatched the earl of Essex, their general in chief, who appointed Brackley heath for the rendezvous of his army. Here he waited a reinforcement from London of the trained bands or militia and other auxiliaries, which arrived on the first of September; "whereat," one of the officers of the red regiment writes, "was great shouting and triumph as the lord general passed by to take a view of our regiment: the whole army being drawn up in their several regiments, continued there about an hour, and then we marched away. It was a goodly and glorious sight to see the whole army of horse and foot together; it is conceived by those that viewed our army well that wee did consist of (to speak the least) 15000 horse and foot, and some speak of many more.

From hence we marched this day to a village called Souldern, 4 miles from Banbury, where our 6 regiments that came from London were quartered; and my lord Generall and the rest of the army were quartered about a little mile from us, at a market town called Ano on the hill."[q]

Tournaments, or military exercises of armed horsemen to improve their strength and activity in war, originated in France in the eleventh century, and were not introduced into England till the reign of Stephen; nor were they legally authorised till the fifth of Richard I. when that martial monarch, by writ directed to Hubert archbishop of Canterbury, appointed them to be held between Salisbury and Wilton, Warwick and Kenilworth, Stamford and "Warniford" (Wansford), Brackley and Mixbury, or Blythe and Tickhill; and imposed a fine of twenty marks on an earl, ten on a baron, four on a knight with a landed estate, and two on a knight without land, for licence to enter the lists as combatants.

The mischiefs and contentions which arose out of these dangerous and often sanguinary conflicts became so serious that they were prohibited in three councils, by three several popes, under the penalty of being refused christian burial; and were restrained by act of parliament under the reign of Henry III. under the penalty of the heir of the offender being deprived of his estates; but they were not wholly abolished till the reign of the third Edward. Inhibitions of intended tournaments at Brackley are recorded on the patent rolls in 7 Hen. 3 (1222),[r] and 29 Hen. 3 (1244);[s] but in 33 Hen. 3 (1249) a celebrated one was held here, which was attended by many of the knights throughout the kingdom who were desirous of ranking as bachelors. In this tournament Richard de Clare earl of Gloucester, contrary to his usual custom, and much to his dishonor, allied himself to the aliens or foreigners, whereby the English were overcome; and William de Valence, the king's brother, following the example of the earl, ill treated sir William de Odingsells, a worthy knight, for espousing the cause of the bachelors.[t] In 51 Hen. 3 (1267) another tournament was held here, when several persons of distinction entered the lists.[u] In 7 Edw. 2 (1313) the king issued the following writ: "The king to his beloved and trusty earls, barons, knights, and all other men at arms who shall come to tourney at 'Brackele,' greeting. Whereas we have oftentimes caused it to be publicly proclaimed and firmly forbidden on our behalf, throughout divers counties of our realm, that no earl, baron, knight, or other whomsoever, shall exercise any deed of arms within our aforesaid realm without our special permission, under forfeiture of all things which he can forfeit to us. And now we having understood that ye are come to the said Town of 'Brackele' for the purpose of holding a tournament, whereat we are very much surprised and not unjustly offended, we send to you our beloved clerks Hugh de Burg and John de Merton, and our beloved serjeants at arms Arnald de St. Martin and Owen Gogh, to forbid you on our behalf that ye presume to tourney or exercise any other deed of arms at the said town of 'Brackeleie,' or elsewhere within our realm, without our licence abovesaid. Also we give to our aforesaid serjeants at arms, by the tenor of these presents, full power to arrest and safely keep all those whom they shall find armed against our aforesaid proclamation and inhibition, in manner as to our aforesaid serjeants it hath been by us more fully enjoined. In witness, &c. Witness the king at Windsor the 16th day of Sept."[x]

The scene of the tournaments was Bayard's green, corruptly called Bear's green, an elevated spot of table land on the south bank of the Ouse, near the mill in the parish of Evenley. It retained its name, which is synonymous with Horses' green, within memory, and was not improbably so denominated from these exhibitions of military horsemanship. In later times it was probably the theatre for equestrian skill of a more peaceful character, and celebrated for its

Races. The following agreement for a match between two gentlemen of the same family is dated 13 July 1612: "It is agreed on betweene Henry Throgm'ton [Throgmorton] and Thomas Throgm'ton, the daye and yeare above written, that the above named are to meete together the Twesday after Michelmas next at Brackley Cwoorse, and thether to bringe a graye mare and a gray shorne mane nadgge, and each of them to ridde the same coursse uppon equal wate in there one parsones, for x quarter of oates." (Signed) "Henry Throckm'ton, Thomas Throckmorton." The friend[y] who furnished me with this curious notice pertinently remarks that "there is something appropriate and characteristic in riding a horse race for ten quarters of oats, and if the horses themselves could have been conscious of the nature of the prize it would certainly have rendered whip and spur unnecessary."

Anthony Wood remarks that when sir Edward Bisshe, Clarencieux king of arms, came on a visitation to Oxford in March 1668-9, "few gentlemen appeared, because at that time there was a horse race at Brackley."[z] The races have been discontinued many years.

The Town of Brackley is 8 miles from Buckingham, 20 miles from Northampton, and 21 miles from Oxford. Leland, with his characteristic circumstantiality, says, "I enteryd into Brakeley by a litle Stone Bridge, in a Botom, of one Arche, undar the whiche Ue riveret rennithe, there being a litle Streame. From this Bridge the greate Streate of the Towne goith up apon a pratie Hille: at the Pitch whereof there turnithe a nothar Streat by Este to Seint Peters, the Head Churche of the Towne. The Towne of Brakeley by Estimation of old Ruines hath had many Stretes in it, and that large. The Lengthe from S. James Churche at the Southe End of the Towne to Chapelle of Seint Leonard hathe bene halfe a Mile in Building. The Compas hath bene almost 2 Mills[a] [Miles]." "There were 3 goodly Crossis of Stone in the Towne, one by Southe at the End of the Towne, throwne down a late by Theves that fowght for Treasure. A nothar at the West End of Seint James churche. The third very antique, faire and costly, in the inward parte of the High Streate. Ther be dyvers Tabernacles in this with Ladies and Men armyd. Sum say that the Staplears of the Towne made this: but I thinke rathar sume Noble Man Lorde of the Towne."[b] To this minute description it may be added, that the principal street is unusually wide; and every antiquary will join in regretting the destruction of 'this last mentioned cross,' which 'was about eight and twenty foot in height, with an octagonal pillar in the 'midst, having images on each side of it. It was taken down about the year 1706 to make room for the town-'hall, which is built upon part of the ground where this cross stood.'[b] In the time of Bridges, 'the new town, 'which is the chief, contained two hundred and fifty four houses or families; and the old town, which lies beyond 'St. Peter's church, about twenty.'[b] By the census of 1801 Brackley St. Peter's contained 150 houses, occupied by 173 families and 801 inhabitants; Old Brackley (or Halse) 17 houses, occupied by the same number of families and 75 inhabitants; and Brackley St. James' 106 houses, occupied by 127 families and 619 inhabitants; total 1495 inhabitants: by that of 1811, Brackley St. Peter's (including Halse), 174 houses, occupied by 211 families and 895 inhabitants; and Brackley St. James 112 houses, occupied by 144 families and 685 inhabitants; total 1580 inhabitants: and by that of 1821, Brackley St. Peter's (and Halse) 218 houses, occupied by 231 families and 1072 inhabitants; and Brackley St. James' 123 houses, occupied by 135 families and 779 inhabitants: total 1851 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for Brackley (exclusive of Halse) is £261. 4s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property in Brackley St. Peter's as assessed to the property tax of ten per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £1402, and in Brackley St. James' to £1185. The poors' rates for Brackley St. Peter's, for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £1041. 3s. 4d. at 10s. in the £, and for Brackley St. James' £815. 18s. 8d. at 28s. in the £.

Markets, down to the early part of the thirteenth century, were not unfrequently kept on Sunday; and in 2 Hen. 3 (1217) the market at Brackley was transferred from that day to a week day.[c] Roger de Quincy earl of Winchester, by deed without date, but in the same reign, granted to Roger "Aurifabro"—the goldsmith—a certain piece of ground in the market place of Brackley. On the death of Elen la Zouch in 24 Edw. 1 (1296),[d] the yearly profit of the market and fair at Brackley was 40s.; and in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) Matilda de Holand substantiated her claim to a market here every Wednesday, the day on which it still continues to be held, and an annual fair on the vigil, day, and morrow of St. Andrew.* Leland observes, "Brakeley market is now desolatyd. It was wont to be kept on Wednesday."[e] The charter of incorporation by king James II. re-granted and confirmed the market on Wednesday and the ancient fair on St. Andrew's day, with three additional ones every year, on Wednesday in Easter week, on St. Barnabas's day—unless it happen on a Sunday—then on Monday, and on Wednesday before Michaelmas day.† In the beginning of the last century, Scroop earl and afterwards duke of Bridgwater, took a lively interest in promoting the trade and prosperity of the town; and, besides building the town-hall, obtained a grant for four annual fairs, on Wednesday after St. Valentine's day, on the second Wednesday in April, on the Wednesday after St. Barnabas's day, and on the Wednesday in the week preceding Michaelmas day.[f] In 1803 an effort was made to increase the market and fairs, by abolishing the tolls paid on those days, and rendering the town toll-free;[g] but the market is notwithstanding at a very low ebb, and the fairs have nearly fallen into disuse, except the ancient fair on St. Andrew's day, which is of considerable celebrity for the sale of cattle and articles of clothing, particularly shoes.

The Deanry of Brackley is co-extensive with the four hundreds of Wardon, Sutton, Norton, and Towcester, with the exception of King's Sutton, which is a peculiar in the diocese of Lincoln, and Canons Ashby in Norton hundred, which is exempt from episcopal jurisdiction.

The Advowson, with its dependent chapels, formed part of the original endowment of Leicester abbey.‡ In 1190 (1 Ric. 1) pope Celestine III. confirmed an amicable composition respecting this church, between the abbot of Leicester and the prior of Trentham in Staffordshire;[h] but on what ground the latter preferred his claim there is now no clue even to conjecture. In Michaelmas term, 23 Edw. I. (1295), the abbot of Leicester recovered ten marks damages against John de Ferrers, Elen la Zouch, and Elizabeth countess of Boghan, for forcibly presenting to the vicarage of Brackley.[i] After the dissolution, the impropriate rectory and advowson of the vicarage remained in the crown till 21 Eliz. (1579), when they were granted to sir Christopher Hatton.[k] In 1579 William Lyle of Brackley presented to the vicarage,[l] and in 1606 William Lyle, of Evenley, gent. and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine (int. al.) of the mansion-house in Brackley where he then or lately dwelt, and the rectory of Brackley, with the glebe lands and tithes thereto belonging in Brackley and Hawse, alias Halse.[m] From the Lisles the impropriate rectory and advowson of the vicarage passed either immediately or by mesne conveyances to the Bridgwater family, and have subsequently attended the descent of the manor.

The Rectory was valued in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3),[n] and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1),[o] at 36 marks (£24) per ann. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it was returned as an appropriation of the abbey of Leicester at 110s. per ann.;[p] and after the dissolution, in the minister's accompts, at £13. 3s. 4d. per ann. and the tithes of Halse at 8s. per ann. The "Tithe-house," after it was deserted for Evenley by the Lisles, was occupied many years by the Wenman family, who occasionally represented the borough in parliament. Various entries respecting them occur in the parish register from 1623 to 1685; and in an epitaph at Twyford in Buckinghamshire Philip viscount Wenman is described "of Brackley." The impropriation includes the rectorial tithes throughout the parish, but Halse being the freehold of the impropriator the tithes merge in the estate by unity of ownership.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Brackley. It was endowed by Hugh Wells bishop of Lincoln in 1223 with the third part of the tithes of the corn (garbarum) of "Brachel and Halso," and a moiety of the altarage, with a manse assigned to the vicar; and also two parts of the tithe of corn of eight virgates of land in the field of "Evenle," the tithes of two virgates in "Parva Whitfield," with the court of Thomas de Ermenters, and the tithes of hay and of a mill.[r] In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3),[s] and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1),[t] it was rated at 10 marks (£6. 13s. 4d.) per ann. From "Charyte's Rentale" of Leicester abbey in 1477, it appears, amongst the "Resolutiones," that the abbot paid to the archdeacon of Northampton for procurations for "Brakley" 7s. 3¾d.; to the vicar of Brakley by ancient composition 100s. and 46s. 8d. by later composition as an augmentation, and two quarters of barley, two loads of hay, and a load of straw.[u] In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) this vicarage was valued at £20. 8s. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton;[x] and the parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified that "Brackley cum Hauls" was one vicarage, with a parish church at the north end of the town, where was a general burying place, and a chapel at the south end thereof used for service; that William Lisle, esq. of Evenley, was the patron, and that Mr. Henry Hickman the incumbent supplied the cure, which was worth about £70 yearly.[y] It is a discharged living, being returned under the act 5 Anne (1707) to be of the clear yearly value of £30. 7s. 5½d. The vicarage now consists of the tithes of all the woods and coppices of underwood, with all the privy tithes in kind or upon alterable compositions, with the tithes of two ancient mills, and a yearly pension of £7. 13s. 4d. paid out of the exchequer, —doubtless the ancient pension from the abbey of Leicester, though now varying a few pence in the amount. The vicar is also in the receipt of £10 per ann. charged on certain lands in Brackley by Mr. John Welchman for officiating in the collegiate chapel of St. John and St. James; and the rent of three closes and a meadow in Evenley, containing by estimation seven acres, given by Mrs. Browne in 1755 for duty to be performed in the chapel of St. James three Sundays in every month.

When Dr. Sibthorp succeeded to the vicarage in 1622, he preached every Sunday for four or five years in the forenoon at St. Peter's church and in the afternoon at St. James's chapel; but finding that many of the inhabitants of St. James's end made it a pretext for absenting themselves from the sermon at St. Peter's, and when reprehended justified themselves because they had attended prayers at the chapel, which they endeavoured to style a church, he desired all the parish to come to St. Peter's both to prayers and sermon in the forenoon, and to St. James's in the afternoon, "which St. Peter's was flexible unto, but St. James's would by no means condescend, but howsoever they did for sermon, they would have service [prayers] twice every day." The doctor therefore discontinued preaching at St. James's from 1628 to 1629, but on the submission of the inhabitants "was contented to preach there again sometimes at his own pleasure, they acknowledging the same to be courtisie and not duty, and they being thankful therefore, but not endeavouring to claim it as a custom, nor thereby to draw a burden on himself or his successors."[z] The services now performed by the vicar, are, full morning duty at St. Peter's church throughout the year, and an alternate full afternoon duty at St. James's chapel and the College chapel. Four Sundays in the year, viz. Sunday after Christmas, Sunday after Easter day, Trinity Sunday, and the second Sunday after Michaelmas day, the sacrament is administered twice at St. James's chapel and twice at the College chapel, on which days there is not any morning service at St. Peter's, but the afternoon service is performed there.

The vicarage-house stands north-west of the church, and has been modernized and improved by the present incumbent.

Henry Walden was presented by William Lyle of Brackley, and inst. 26 Mar. 1590. He had also the vicarage of Evenley.

John Clarke occurs vicar in 1599.[b]

Oliver Edwards, vicar, 1601,[c] but he could only have been curate, as

Richard Lewis was inst. 5 Nov. 1600.[d] Bridges introduces also Robert Marsh, vicar, 1611,[c] but in the parish register he is simply styled "minister,"[b] or curate. Richard Lewis, the vicar, was buried 28 Dec. 1620,[b] and

Walter Clarke, A.M. was inst. 2 Mar. following, on the presentation of William Lisle, esq. On his cession,

Robert Sibthorp, D.D. of whom an extended notice will be introduced under Burton Latimer, was presented by the same patron, and inst. 8 Apr. 1622. His benefices were sequestered by the parliamentary committee, and Henry Hinckman, a native of Worcestershire, having obtained a fellowship of Magdalen college, Oxford, and the degree of A.M. in 1650, "became a preacher without any orders from a bishop, and exercising his function in St. Aldate's church in Oxon, and then at Brackley in Northamptonshire, was much resorted to by the men and women in the time of interruption and usurpation."[e] He was certified by the parliamentary commissioners to be the resident incumbent here in 1655, and probably continued till the act of uniformity in 1662, when he was "outed of his fellowship," and took refuge in Holland. Returning to England, he retired to a village near Stourbridge in his native county, where he opened a seminary, but finally settled in Holland, and died at Leyden in 1692. He was a leading man and pillar of the presbyterian party, and wrote several controversial tracts, which are enumerated in Wood's Athenæ Oxonienses.

Whether Sibthorp was re-instituted to this vicarage as well as to his rectory of Burton Latimer is uncertain. He died in 1662, and

Thomas Hilton, of Magd. hall, Oxf. A.M. was presented by George Lisle, esq. and inst. 23 Sept. 1678, on the death of the last incumbent. He published a funeral sermon, preached at Middleton Cheney 26 Sept. 1699, on the death of John Barksdale, gent. Eccles. xii. 5. London, 1700, 4to. He was buried here 15 May 1729,[b] and

Thomas Bowles, of Magd. coll. Oxf. B.D. was inst. on the 30th of the same month, on the presentation of Fermor Lisle, esq. He proceeded A.M. 1719, B.D. 1729, D.D. 1734; and was author of a sermon on Hebr. i. 1, 2, 1728, 8vo; "The end and design of civil Government," a sermon on Romans xiii. 1, 1741, 4to; and "Aristarchus, or a compendious and rational institution of the Latin tongue, with a critical dissertation on the Roman Classics in a chronological order, 2d ed. 1750." During his residence here he had a private classical establishment, and in 1764 was appointed headmaster of the free grammar-school at Beaumaris. On his cession

Henry Manifold, of St. John's coll. Camb. A.B. 1757, A.M. 1775, was presented by Francis duke of Bridgwater, and inst. 15 Apr. 1766. He had also the rectories of Ivingho in Buckinghamshire and Aldbury in Hertfordshire; the former of which he resigned, but continued to hold the latter with this vicarage till his death He was buried here 15 July 1803,[b] and

Thomas Bartholomew Woodman, of Trin. coll. Camb A.B. 1781, A.M. 1784, was inst. Dec. 1803, on the presentation of George marquis of Stafford. He was also rector of Daylesford in Oxfordshire, prebendary of York, and chaplain to the duke of Clarence. He died at Cheltenham, 30 May 1825, when Charles Arthur Sage, of Trin. coll. Camb. A.B. was presented by George marquis of Stafford, and inst. 18 June following.

The Registers commence in 1560.

The Communion Plate consists of two chalices, one plate, and a paten, belonging to St. Peter's, with the following inscriptions on each of them; on the upper surface, "For the use of St. Peter's Church, Brackley, instead of a chalice (&c.) given by William Hayton, Esq. stolen out of this church in 1774;" and underneath, "The gift of William Hayton his Son, one of the Aldermen of the Town and Borough of Brackley." Belonging to St. James's are two old chalices without inscriptions, and an old paten, on which is rudely engraved, "Given to the Parish of St. James in Brackley by Matthew Cadle, William Maiior, Bartholomew Cadle, John Stokes, Richard White, William Bartolomew, and Martin Barfoote." The above seven persons are said to have been the lord and servants of the Whitsun Ale, or the morris dancers.

The Church, dedicated to St. Peter, stands at the north-east extremity of the town, and consists of a tower, containing five bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, chancel, and south chapel. The tower is a good specimen of the early pointed style of the thirteenth century, but the kindness of my friend Mr. Blore in furnishing the accompanying vignette renders verbal description unnecessary. The entrance to the south aisle is Norman, and has circular shafts with rude capitals, supporting two arched mouldings of chevrons, and an exterior moulding of an uniform ornament enclosed in circles; the windows of the north aisle are decorated with rather peculiar tracery. The tower is 16 ft. 9 in. long, by 10 ft. 5 in. wide; the nave and aisles 70 ft. 6 in. long, the nave 21 ft. 10 in. the north aisle 16 ft. and the south aisle 12 ft. 4 in. wide; and the chancel and south chapel 34 ft. 6 in. long, the chancel 19 ft. 5 in. and the south chapel 17 ft. 4 in. wide. The interior is indifferently paved and pewed. There are north, south, and west galleries, and an upper gallery at the west end of the choir. The open timber roof is remaining, and springs from stone corbels; the arch framing has trefoiled arches, which were formerly painted. Attached to the western pillar of the south aisle is a font of the Edwardian period; the shaft is square, flanked at each angle by a circular column with plain capital, and having on each face a trefoiled arch under a straight-sided crocketted canopy with finial. The nave is divided from each aisle by four large and lofty pointed arches and a smaller one at the east end, resting on octangular pillars with capitals of plain mouldings. The foliated abacus of one of the capitals of the original norman structure is retained in the east end of the wall on the north side of the nave. The south chapel is divided from the chancel by two arches on pillars, smaller, but of the same character as those in the aisles. At the east end of the south wall are a trefoil-headed piscina, square locker, and large bracket; and towards the west end is an ogee-arched entrance into a crypt of eight groined arches springing from a central octangular pier.

CHURCH-YARD. West of the north aisle lies the rude figure of an ecclesiastic, of whom Leland relates the following tradition: "In the Churche Yard lyeth an Image of a Priest revestid; the whiche was Vicar of Barkeley [Brakeley] and there buried quike by the Tyranny of a Lord of the Towne for a Displeasure that he tooke with hym for an Horse taken, as some say, for a Mortuarie. But the Lord, as it is there sayde, went to Rome for Absolution, and toke greate Repentauns." [f]

ST. JAMES'S CHAPEL stands at the lower extremity of the town, near the bridge. Leland thus notices it: "There is a Churche as a Chaple of Ease of Seint James in the Southe end of the Towne, an old pece of Worke, and on the Southe Syde of the Chaunsell of it is a faire Chapell or Isle, and there be in the Wyndow Sydes, in Stone, Imagis beringe Woll Sakks in theyr Hands, in token that it was of the Stapeler's Makyng." [g] The "Imagis" have disappeared; as has also the 'low coped tower at the west end, fronting the north ile, and having 'in it two bells and a saint's bell.' [h] The present building, which is in a very dilapidated state, consists of a north porch, north aisle or nave, south aisle, chancel, and south chapel. The south aisle has lancet windows; but the windows on the north side are of the perpendicular style. The nave and aisle are 57 ft. 7 in. long, the nave 25 ft. 2 in. and the aisle 12 ft. 4 in. wide; and the chancel and south chapel 32 ft. 11 in. long, by 18 ft. each wide. The interior is very damp, and badly paved and pewed; but there are north and west galleries, and an east gallery over the chancel arch. At the west end is a circular Norman font; the shaft is surrounded with interlaced circular arches rising out of foliage and reversed heads, and the top bordered round with the dog-toothed ornament. The nave is divided from the aisle by four arches on low octangular pillars with capitals of plain mouldings. The north pillar between the nave and chancel has a curious capital, in which three grotesque human heads are introduced. Nearly opposite against the pulpit stairs, is a small trefoiled piscina. The chancel is divided from the south chapel by two arches on low octangular pillars; contiguous to the eastern pillar within the altar rails is a beautiful little confessional window with a trefoil-headed mullion, and two elongated trefoils and a quatrefoil in the head of the arch; under the window are two stone seats divided by plain arms, and eastward is a piscina under an ogee crocketted arch, with the head filled with the same tracery as the window. In the north wall is a large rich bracket. In the south chapel are two uniform early pointed windows, connected by a running hood mould springing from corbel heads; each window has a single mullion with a quatrefoil in the head, and the principal mouldings rise from circular bases. Eastward of these is a piscina under a trefoil-headed ogee arch with crockets and finials; and in the south-east angle of the wall is a locker under a trefoil-headed arch.

THE HOSPITAL, originally dedicated to St. John, and subsequently to St. James and St. John, stood near the centre of the town. Dugdale,[i] quoting the authority of Knighton, states that Robert de Mellent, who came into England with William the conqueror, founded the hospital of Brackley, where his heart, preserved with salt and cased in lead, was deposited; but on reference to the chronicler it is evident that the term "de Mellent" was used as the general patronymic of the family, and, from the context, was intended to apply, and can only apply, to Robert (Blanchmains) earl of Leicester,[k] grandson of the misappropriated Robert, and son of the real founder, Robert (le Bossu) earl of Leicester, who, for the love of God, and the health of the souls of himself and his countess, their son Robert, and their other children, their successors and ancestors, granted to Salomon the clerk, and his successors, an acre of land in "Brakele" in free alms, to construct an house in which the poor should be received and hospitably entertained; and further directed that, in honor of St. John the apostle and evangelist, a chapel should be erected with a cemetery, as free as his demesne chapel, and quit from all subjection, for the celebration of divine offices for the souls of himself, his ancestors, and his heirs.[l] He had previously founded the abbey of Leicester; and Richard the first abbot being one of the attesting witnesses to this charter, fixes the date between 1144 (8 Steph.) and 1167 (14 Hen. 2).

Robert (Blanchmains) earl of Leicester, for the souls of Robert his father and Amicia his mother, and for those of himself, his countess Petronilla, and their children, confirmed the donation which Robert his father made for the construction of a hospital at Brackley, and confirmed also the free church which his father commanded to be built there, receiving it under his hand and protection, and directing that Salomon and his successors, with the other chaplains residing in the hospital, should celebrate divine service in it to the honor of God, and for the souls of himself and his wife, his ancestors and successors. In augmentation of his father's grant he gave them two acres and a half near the house of the hospital; a portion of his grove or wood near their court, nineteen perches and eight feet wide to the foss which inclosed the wood, and thirteen perches wide from the wall which inclosed their court against the wood; and two virgates of land, one which was of the land of "Halsow" (Halse), with a messuage belonging to it in "Brakele," at the head of Goldewell, and another virgate which belonged to Brakele, with its messuage, under the head of the well near the rivulet, which virgate Swerman, father of master Salomon, held, free from all terrene services; and directed that the brothers of the hospital and their tenants should be quit through all his lands from toll and passage, and all works and customs to him and his heirs.[m] The abbot and convent of Leicester, in whom the advowson of the rectory was vested, gave to Salomon, chaplain of the hospital of Brackley, and with the right of sepulture, and all the tithes arising within the circuit of the hospital.[n] St. Hugh bishop of Lincoln, between 1186 and 1200, in a general confirmation charter, reciting the grants of earls Robert senior and junior, ratified the foundation of the church (ecclesiæ) of St. John in the hospital of Brackley, and granted to Salomon, master of the hospital, and his successors, and the brothers of the said hospital, the order of priesthood, that they might officiate in the said chapel (capella), and so that during the vacancy of the parish church it should be lawful for the said brothers, without excommunication or interdict, to celebrate divine service according to the authority given them by pope A. (Alexander) the third, which he had inspected.[o] King Henry III. in an inspeximus charter dated 19 June, 12 Hen. 3 (1228), confirmed various grants in Whitfield and Siresham, and a wood called Little Hay, with the land and herbage, of the gift of Saher de Quincy earl of Winchester.[o] Margaret de Quincy, his widow, gave to the hospital yearly one mark of the farm of her mill of "Halso," and twenty-five "carucas" from the wood of "Awhes," or Halse;[p] by another charter, two virgates, and the mill of "Halso," rendering four marks yearly;[q] and by a third, the mill of "Halso," with suit, reducing the reserved rent to one mark, to be rendered to the nuns of Godstow.[r] Her son, Roger de Quincy earl of Winchester, gave a place for the enlargement of the cemetery of the hospital;[s] ten marks (£6. 13s. 4d.) yearly out of the profits of the market and fair of Brackley;[t] another rent-charge of two marks; and a virgate of land in Markenfield.[t] After giving three several rent-charges out of the castle mill of Brackley, five marks yearly to support a chaplain for the soul of John earl of Ewe,[u] five marks yearly for the soul of his wife Matilda Mareschall countess of Winchester,[x] and one mark yearly without any specific appropriation,[y] he granted the mill itself, with the suit attached to it, and the water course, at an annual rent of £10 saving 40s. reserving the fish-pond and swans, and covenanted that no other mill should be erected within the territory of Brackley, except by, or with the consent of, the master and brothers of the hospital;[z] which privilege was subsequently confirmed by his daughter Elen la Zouch.[a] By deed in 26 Hen. 3 (1241) the earl gave to the prior and brothers of the hospital all his demesne "de Gast"—a place which cannot now be identified—with four acres of meadow, and pasture for twenty-four oxen, fifteen cows, and one hundred sheep, in exchange for 40s. yearly rent, and for the support of three chaplains;[b] and by deeds without date he released them from 20s. which they ought to have paid for the upper fish-pond and for the site of the castle of Brackley, and half a mark in "bracino suo de Gast;"[c] gave them a virgate in Brackley for a lamp to be kept constantly burning;[d] two marks yearly out of two virgates in Brackley in exchange for 24s. yearly rent in the town of "Perte" (Perth) in the kingdom of Scotland;[e] four quarters of wheat yearly out of the produce of "Halso;"[f] and 'farther ordered a measure to be made for corn in the shape of a coffin, and gave directions 'that it should be placed on the right side of the shrine in which the heart of Margaret his mother was intombed, 'with provision for the filling it thrice in a year for ever out of the grange of Hawes for the use of the said hos-'pital.' He conveyed three virgates of land at Brochampton in Gloucestershire to his wife Margaret Mareschal, for the express purpose of her granting them to the prior and brothers of this hospital,[h] which she did by a separate deed,[i] and the donation was confirmed by her father Humphry de Bohun earl of Hereford.[k] Richard de Harecourt settled all his lands and tenements in Brackley which he had received from Margaret Quincy countess of Winchester in free marriage with Orabilla her daughter, except a certain wood, and 32s. yearly rent from the Templars in Sibford and Evenley, on John, son of Ralph de Hay, in free marriage with his daughter.[l] Sir John de Hay and Margaret his wife transferred the whole of their estate here to the hospital by the service of a pair of gold spurs, with warranty, under the description of two carucates and six virgates of land in Brackley, Evenley, and Sibford.[m] In 1266 (50 Hen. 3) the master and brothers of the hospital demised the church of "Gaffknes"—probably in Scotland—to Robert bishop of Dumblain;[n] and in 1272 (56 Hen. 3) the bishop entered into an obligation to copy certain deeds and instruments concerning lands and chattels which the hospital had in Scotland, and certain grants from Roger de Quincy and others to the hospital.[o] In 10 Edw. 1 (1282) the master of the hospital obtained the royal licence to acquire and hold in capite ten librates of land and rent yearly;[p] and in 19 Edw. 2 (1325) Thomas Luton levied a fine of eight messuages, one hundred acres of land, six acres of meadow, and 8s. 10d. yearly rent in Brackley, to Gilbert de Middleton, clerk,[q] who granted them in 2 Edw. 3 (1328) to the hospital;[r] and in 5 Edw. 3 (1331) they were confirmed to the hospital by Matilda, wife of Robert de Holand,[s] the lady of the fee. In 4 Hen. 6 (1425) the abbot of Leicester and the burgesses of Brackley released to the hospital all right in a common pasture in Brackley called le Groves.[t] In February, 1 Ric. 3 (1483-4), Francis viscount Lovell granted the advowson and patronage of the house or hospital of St. John and St. James in Brackley to William (Wainflete) bishop of Winchester,[u] in trust for the president and fellows of Magdalen college, Oxford, in fee;[x] and in May following John (Russell) bishop of Lincoln annexed this hospital, together with Aynho hospital (of the grant of William earl of Arundel), to Magdalen college for ever.[y] The muniments of the college include one thousand two hundred and sixty deeds relating to the possessions of Brackley hospital in Brackley, Helmdon, Siresham, and Whitefield, of which nearly nine hundred and fifty relate to Brackley alone!

The hospital 'originally consisted of a master and fellows, who were a kind of secular chaplains, and subject to 'no ecclesiastical rule. The master indeed was obliged to be in holy orders, but under no obligation to resi-'dence.'[z] The master was sometimes styled prior, as in two grants from Roger de Quincy earl of Winchester,[a] and in various inquisitions.[b]

In 8 Hen. 5 (1420) Matilda, widow of John lord Lovell, reciting that she had by a prior deed enfeoffed Thomas (Langley) bishop of Durham and others in her manors of Bagworth and Thornton in Leicestershire, who had, at her request, granted fifteen small annuities payable out of the said manors, declared her meaning and will to be that the hospital of St. James and St. John of Brackley, with all its possessions, which was of her advowson, should be changed or transferred by her or her heirs within ten years next ensuing, into a house of the order of Friars Preachers, to consist of thirteen of the said order, of whom ten should be chaplains, and one of the chaplains be the prior, to celebrate divine service for her welfare while she lived, and for her soul when she should depart this life, and for the souls of John her late husband, and of their ancestors and heirs; and when this change and translation was completed, her feoffees should re-infeoff her or her heirs in the said manors, subject to those annuities which had not then determined; but, if the hospital could not be so changed, then, after the term of ten years, the feoffees should provide four chaplains as the annuities fell in, or three, two, or one chaplain, if the means would not suffice for more, to celebrate divine service for the purposes before stated, until she or her heirs should settle on the master of the hospital and his successors £20 per ann. in temporal or spiritual possessions for the support of the said four chaplains.[c] Lady Lovell died in 1 Hen. 6 (1423),[d] before the expiration of the ten years, and her intentions were never carried into effect. The annuitants were evidently the inmates of the hospital, pensioned off preparatory to transforming the establishment; for 'in 1423, the first year of Henry VI. upon 'the death of the master, John Brokehampton, it was left without inhabitant.'[e] The hospital was speedily re-established; and in Aug. 4 Hen. 6 (1425), its statutes and ordinances were ratified by Henry (Chicheley) archbishop of Canterbury, with the approbation of William lord Lovell and Holland, the patron.[f]

Of the two annexed representations of the hospital seals, one is copied from an engraving in the Gentleman's Magazine,[i] and exhibits under canopies, figures of St. James and St. John, the two patron saints. The other was communicated by my friend John Caley, esq. and has the same patron saints differently represented, and transposed in their positions, St. John taking the precedence.

The hospital was situated near the centre of the town, on the east side of the street, and, according to Bridges, 'was composed of two quadrangles, with the several offices belonging 'to it.'[k] 'This hospital,' he says, 'now in lease from Magda- 'lene college to Mr. John Welchman of Brackley, lies in a ruinous 'condition. The old hall was taken down about fifty years 'since. In the modern hall are one hundred and five shields, which were removed thither out of a garret, and 'contain the arms of many of the nobility and gentry, and of eleven bishops' sees.'[l] The 'modern hall' has shared the fate of the old one, and the heraldic memorials are lost and dispersed. A few detached traces of arches in the house and back garden south of the chapel are now the only remaining indications of the former buildings, except

The Chapel, which consists of a north-west tower, 'in which was a pretty large bell, taken down some years 'ago and carried to Oxford, for the use of Magdalene college,'[k] and a nave and chancel of one pace. In the belfry stage of the tower are two lancet windows of equal height, connected by columns with bell capitals. The west end of the nave presents in the gable front an interesting illustration of the transition from the Norman to the early pointed style about the commencement of the thirteenth century. The door has the semicircular arch of the former period. Over it are three lancet windows, the head of the centre one elevated, each having a separate architrave, with an inner moulding of the dog-toothed ornament, and the arches connected by slender circular shafts having bell capitals. On the dexter side of them, within a niche, is a full sized statue of St. John, despoiled of his emblem; and on the sinister, within a similar niche, is St. James with his staff. The interior is well paved, and pewed, and has a west gallery. The nave is 104 ft. 5 in. and the chancel 16 ft. 9 in. long, by 22 ft. 9 in. wide. The original lateral windows were of three lancet-headed lights under a general arch on slender circular shafts having foliated capitals; the principal mouldings round, with a fillet up the face. The eastern window on the south side is unaltered, but the shafts have disappeared from the capitals. Two other of the general arches remain, but one is closed up, and the other only partially lighted. The two western windows are comparatively modern. Immediately beyond the east window was, I apprehend, the entrance from the hospital into the chapel, under a handsome arch with three sets of mouldings and slender double columns on each side, the capitals only of which are remaining. The arch is now built up, and to the east of it, near the altar, is an arcade of five plain trefoiled arches, the central one wider than the rest, with rich deep mouldings running round the trefoils even to the drip-stones, which have the dog-toothed ornament, and rest on corbels of heads and foliage. Bridges styles it 'a confessionary of five arches,'[k] but they were doubtless intended for the master and brethren, or officiating priests, though, on the removal of a temporary wainscot which rises to the capitals, the dividing piers and seats were found to have been removed, and the space filled in with rubble stone. The chancel east window is of five lancet-headed lights within an arch, the crown of which is lost in the modern roof; the slender circular shafts from which the arch springs are banded and have plain capitals. Near the west end of the north side is an arched entrance into the tower, now disused; eastward of which are evident proofs of a former north aisle, for one or two octangular pillars and part of the eastern arch are worked into the present wall. The arches over the pillars are traceable in the exterior wall, and within them are posterior insertions of lancet windows of three lights, in imitation of the original ones on the south side.

The interments of the hearts of Robert Blanchmains earl of Leicester, and of Margaret Quincy his daughter and eventually coheiress, have already been incidentally mentioned;* and subsequent to the division of the earldom of Leicester, the Quincys and the Zouches, Holands and Lovells, their representatives, lords of the honor of Winchester, adopted this chapel for their place of sepulture. John, lord Lovell and Holand, by his will, dated in 1408 at Wardour in Wiltshire, directed his body to be buried in the church of the hospital of St. John at Brackley, bequeathing to it a vestment of black adorned with stars of gold, and certain copes and other things thereunto appertaining, of the same suit and colour.[m] Leland thus describes the "Tumbes" of "dyvers Noble Men and Women in the Presbitery of this churche: first 2 Noble Men in one Tombe havynge in ther Shelds a Lyon Rampant and Flures de Luce" [Holand]. "Ther lyethe on the Southe Syde in the Wall a Noble Man havynge in a Feld of Gules 10 Besants of Gold" [Zouch]. "And at his Feete lyethe a nothar havynge in his Sheld a Lion Rampant. Ther lyethe also Robert Holand that dyed in Anno D'ni 1373. Mawd his Wyfe lyethe there also. Ther lyeth a Noble Man and his Wyfe. He berithe in his Sheld, Varre Gold and Gules" [Lovell]. 'Of these tombstones two only are now remaining, which are removed out of their places, and thrown 'under an arch, one upon the other.'[o] Not a single relic of these ancient memorials is now left: but there are several modern monumental inscriptions.

who died the 5th day of July 1816;
Aged 63.
Also of ELIZABETH, their Daughter
Aged 2 Years.

Forgive blest shade the tributary tear,
That mourns thy exit from a world like this,
Forgive the wish that would have kept thee here,
And stay'd thy progress to the seats of bliss;
No more confin'd to grov'ling scenes of night,
No more a tenant pent in mortal clay,
Now should we rather hail thy glorious flight,
And trace thy journey to the realms of day.

9. Anne Miller, wid. of John M. gent. 18 July 1770.
Anne, their daughter, & w. of rev. Henry Manifold, vicar of this parish, 28 Oct. 1778.

In the time of Bridges the chapel was 'stript of all its former decorations, the glass taken out of the windows, 'the seating gone, and the tombstones removed out of their places.'[p] The president and scholars of Magdalen college, Oxford, by deed dated 10 July 1744, reciting that the church or chapel of St. John and St. James, commonly called the College or Middle church of Brackley, part of their estate, had become useless, and if fitted for divine service would be a great benefit to the inhabitants on account of the distance of the parish church, and that John Welchman, gent. the eldest alderman of the borough, had agreed to settle a salary or endowment on the vicar for that purpose, did at his humble request unanimously grant to him full licence to apply and accommodate the said church or chapel and tower to the good uses aforesaid, during the good will and pleasure of them and their successors, revocable on giving six months notice to the said John Welchman and his heirs, or to the tenant of their manor of St. John and St. James, and to the mayor of the borough; the building to be kept in good repair without waste by the inhabitants or parishioners of Brackley. By another deed, dated 12 Sept. following, the said John Welchman and John Welchman of Banbury, gent. his son and heir apparent, granted to certain trustees a yearly rent charge of £10 out of the Old Town farm closes in Brackley, containing about 70 acres, in trust for the vicar of Brackley for the time being, so long as he or his curate should perform divine service in the College church or chapel in the manner therein mentioned. John Welchman, esq. the son, then describing himself of Brackley, by his will, dated 26 Aug. 1773, bequeathed to the trustees under his father's endowment, the minister and churchwardens of the parish of St. Peter, and the chapelwardens of the parish of St. James in Brackley, and their successors, £500, with power to expend £100, if deemed necessary, on the immediate repairs of the college chapel, and in trust to vest the whole £500, or the £400 residue thereof, in government or real securities, and apply the interest to the future repairs and support of the said fabric.

The Hospital dedicated to St. Leonard was for the reception of the sick and infirm. In some records it is called "Hospitale Infirmorum S. Leonardi;" in others "Hospitale Leprosorum;" and on the institution of the first custos or master in 1291 (29 Edw. 1) it was styled the chantry of the infirmary.[q] It occurs as early as 8 Edw. 1 (1280), when the custos of the hospital of St. Leonard "extra Brackle," granted to the master of St. John's hospital a croft in the Newland of Brackle in exchange for an acre of land;[r] and in 3 Edw. 2 (1309) the custos and brethren of the hospital entered into an agreement with Richard Piston and Dionisia his wife, respecting a messuage in Brackley.[s]

Geoffrey Barnard, priest, 15 Oct. 1292.
Robert de Rodeston, by sir Robert de Holand.
Simon Peliver, of Brackley, 16 Apr. 1318.
Philip de Helmedon, priest, 15 June 1327.
Robert de Merchenley, priest, by lady Matilda de Holand.
William de Camulton, priest, 27 July 1339.
Adam de Thenford, priest, 16 Oct. 1341.
Thomas de Ashborne, priest, by the bishop by lapse, 6 Oct. 1353.
Richard Estwet, priest, 26 Oct. 1372.
Richard Trenchaunt, chaplain, by John lord Lovell, 23 Aug. 1400. He was also vicar of St. Michael's, Northampton.
John Beby, 10 Feb. 1403.
John Maystyr, priest, 22 Oct. 1406.
William Patrick, 13 Dec. 1406. Probably the same individual with William Patryk vicar of Guilsborough from 1406 to 1415.
John Brokehampton, priest, by Matilda lady Lovell, 1 July 1417. He was also master of St. John's hospital; and, as no successor here is recorded, its government probably merged henceforward in that establishment.

The site of the hospital is not now known, but it must have been at the north extremity of the town, with a chapel attached to it, for Leland remarks that "the lengthe from S. James Churche at the Southe End of the Towne to the Chapelle of Seint Leonard hathe bene halfe a Mile in Building."[t]

The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel of stone, 39 ft. 2 in. by 30 ft. erected about twenty years since. It is neatly fitted up, and has a gallery on three sides.

Benefactions (p. 542). Magdalen College Free School. At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), Robert Barnard was officiating priest of a chantry at Brackley, rated at £8 per ann.[u] This, however, was only a temporary endowment, as appears from the survey on the dissolution of chantries in 2 Edw. 6 (1548), when the commissioners certified that Laurence Stubbs, president, and the fellows of Magdalen college, Oxford, by deed 8 Dec. 19 Hen. 8 (1527) appointed Robert Barnard, A.M. formerly one of the fellows of the college, to celebrate masses in the church of St. John and St. James in Brackley for the souls of Francis viscount Lovell and his ancestors, with a stipend of £8 per ann. to be paid by the bailiff of the college, together with a chamber on the south side of the church, and a garden adjoining, to hold to the officiating chaplain for the term of forty years. The commissioners returned the value at £8. 6s. 8d. per ann. allowing, I presume, 6s. 8d. for the chamber and garden, but entered a memorandum that Robert Barnard had died since the commencement of their commission, and since his decease the president and fellows of the college had erected a free school there, in which many children were taught to the "great comodytie of the cuntrye."[u] The following year (1549) this school was placed by the college under the superintendence of Thomas Godwin, one of their fellows, and afterwards bishop of Bath and Wells.[x] The school continued to be kept in "the chamber" formerly occupied by the chantry priest till 1787, when it was taken down, and a plain school-house erected a short distance to the south. The master now receives £18 per ann. from the college, and in addition the sum of £1 yearly under Higgins's gift, which is given in books as prizes to the best proficients amongst the free scholars.

Crewe's Alms House. Sir Thomas Crewe by will in 1633 devised as follows: "I devise and appoint that an hospital for six poor people of Brackley be built, and each of them to have £4 a year allowance, those poor to be appointed out of Brackley by my heir, or else £20 a year for ever to be distributed yearly to 20 poor people of Brackley, to be nominated by my heirs. And as any dieth to be supplied. I leave the choice to my son John whether of these courses to pursue. And if he make choice of the latter, then I also add £100 either to build a workhouse, or to be a stock to set poor to work, at the election of my son John." In the exercise of this option the son erected an almshouse of stone, with the arms of Crewe impaling Bray in front, at the entrance of the town from Towcester. The widows are appointed by W. R. Cartwright, of Aynho, esq. M.P. one of the representatives of the founder, and their stipends and the repair of the building charged on the estate of J. J. Blencowe, of Marston St. Lawrence, esq. They also receive £2 each yearly under the will of Nathaniel lord Crewe and bishop of Durham.

The Feoffees' or Charity Estate. By an inquisition under a commission of charitable uses in 24 Car. 1 (1648), it was found that several cottages, lands, tenements, rents, and hereditaments therein described, belonged to the town and parish of Brackley, for the relief of the poor, the repairs of the churches, and other charitable uses, and that certain sums of money amounting to £24 had also been given to the poor of Brackley; and by the decree grounded on the inquisition it was ordered that the then feoffees, and the feoffees to be after nominated, should be seised of the same for the charitable uses aforesaid, under certain specified regulations.

The present feoffees appear to be in possession of all the property mentioned in the inquisition and decree, with the exception of 3 r. 15¼ p. more or less of land, which, it is stated, were taken in 1792 by the commissioners of the turnpike road from Buckingham to Brackley, for the purposes of the road, and for which the feoffees have not been able to obtain a compensation; and with the further exception of some land, described in the inquisition as a close in the Old Town; in respect however of the latter piece of land a rent of 15s. a year continues to be received. Mr. Inns, a mason at Buckingham, pays yearly £1 to the master of the free school, or the feoffees, in respect of certain premises, described in the inquisition as "one cottage, situate in the town and borough of Buckingham, in the occupation of John Matcham, given unto the town of Brackley by Robert Higgins, clerk, the yearly rents, issues, and profits thereof to be disposed for buying of books to remain in the school of the said town of Brackley for the use of such poor children as are scholars there." No account can now be given of two yearly rents or payments mentioned in the inquisition, consisting of one strike of malt and 1s. 4d. each for the use of the parish church, and of St. James's chapel in Brackley. And with regard to the sums mentioned in the inquisition, amounting to £24, no specific account can be given, the fund having been long since either lost or applied to the purposes of the trust.

The charity estate was surveyed and valued in 1816, and the total income arising from the property is £127. 12s. 4d. per ann. including the £1 a year from the cottage at Buckingham received by the master of the free school.

The rents of the estate are applied in the repairing of the churches, in the distribution of money among poor persons, and in apprenticing boys. The money distributed among the poor is given by the feoffees with the approbation and consent of the parish officers. The apprenticing of boys is considered to fall within the authority of the feoffees under the general trust for other charitable uses. Three of the feoffees are yearly nominated to act in the receipt of the income and the management of the trust, and the accounts are audited yearly in November at a meeting in the presence of the mayor, vicar, and overseers of the parish of Brackley.

Leeson's Charity. The sum of £2 per ann. received under the will of Mrs. Jane Leeson of Abthorp for the poor of Brackley, is added to the sacrament money, and distributed among poor persons by the churchwardens.

Burton's Charity. The rev. Littleton Burton by will in 1732 bequeathed the interest of £50, to be disposed of by the vicar of Brackley and the rector of Hinton every New Year's day to poor housekeepers of the parish of St. Peter's, Brackley, not receiving alms. It is distributed annually by the vicar of Brackley in sums of 2s. 6d. each to twenty poor people.

Welchman's Charity and National School. John Welchman, of Brackley, esq. by will in 1773 bequeathed £100 for the teaching of four poor boys and four poor girls of the parishes of St. Peter's and St. James' in Brackley. Since the establishment of a national school here in 1818 the interest of this bequest has been annually paid to the treasurer of that institution for its general purposes, in aid of voluntary contributions.

Samuel Clarke, a celebrated orientalist in the seventeenth century, was son of Thomas Clarke, sen. of Brackley, and Alice his wife, and baptized here 31 July 1624. At the early age of fifteen he entered Merton college, Oxford, but was obliged to quit three years afterwards, when the university and city were garrisoned for the king. He returned in 1648 after their surrender to the parliamentary forces, submitted to the visitors appointed by parliament, and took his degree of master of arts. In 1650 he was settled in a boarding school at Islington, and during his residence there assisted in correcting and publishing the "Polyglot Bible." He had been offered the new office of archi-typographer to the university in 1649, with the reversion of the superior beadleship of civil law to be permanently annexed to it, which he declined at that time, but in 1658, anticipating the speedy death of the superior beadle, he returned a second time to Oxford, was elected to both situations, and retained them through life. He was a good classical scholar, but was most distinguished by his uncommon skill in the oriental languages. His translation from the original MS. in the Cambridge public library of "Parasphrastes Chaldæus in Libr. Paralipomenon," was acknowledged by the learned Dr. Castell to have afforded him considerable assistance in composing his elaborate "Lexicon Heptaglotton." He reviewed with great care, the Hebrew text, the Chaldee paraphrase, and the Persian gospels in the "Polyglot Bible," which last he translated into Latin. He published "Scientia Metrica et Rhythmica; seu Tractatus de Prosodia Arabica ex Authoribus probatissimis eruta." Oxon, 1661, 8vo. There is also ascribed to him a Latin translation from the Hebrew of a work entitled "Massereth Beraioth Titulus Talmadicus, in quo agitur de Benedictionibus Precibus et Gratiarum Actionibus, adjecta Versione Latinâ. In usum studiosorum literarum Talmudicarum in Ædi Christi." Oxon, 1667, 8vo. Fourteen of his MS. volumes, principally on Arabic, Chaldaic, and Persian literature, are preserved in the Bodleian library. He died at Holywell near Oxford 27 Dec. 1669. His portrait is in the gallery at Oxford.

Thomas Payne, an eminent bibliopolist of the very first reputation in the last century, was son of Olliver and Martha Payne of Brackley, and baptized there 26 May 1719. The idea of printing book catalogues is said to have been first suggested and adopted by his elder brother, Oliver Payne, with whom he resided some time as an assistant in Round-court in the Strand, opposite York-buildings, where he subsequently commenced business on his own account. On his marriage with miss Elizabeth Taylor he succeeded her brother in his house and shop at the Mews-gate, which he rebuilt. "This little shop, in the shape of an L," says another eminent member of the fraternity,[y] "was the first that obtained the name of a Literary Coffee-house in London, from the knot of Literati that resorted to it;" and here he pursued his avocation with increasing reputation and success till 1790, when he retired in favour of his son, the present highly respectable bookseller in Pall Mall. He died 8 Feb. 1799, and was buried at Finchley, near his wife and brother.

His "Catalogue of curious Books in Divinity, History, Classicks, Medicine, Voyages, Natural History, &c. Greek, Latin, French, Italian, and Spanish, in excellent condition, and mostly gilt and lettered," issued in Feb. 1740-1, was followed by an almost annual succession for half a century! The author of the Pursuits of Literature calls him "that Trypho emeritus, Mr. Thomas Payne, one of the honestest men living, to whom, as a bookseller, learning is under considerable obligations." And the writer already referred to,[z] says, "warm in his friendships as in his politicks, a convivial, cheerful companion, and unalterable in the cut and colour of his coat, he uniformly pursued one great object, fair dealing, and will survive in the list of booksellers the most eminent for being adventurous and scientific by the name of honest Tom Payne." The bibliographical notice of him in Dr. Dibdin's "Decameron" is accompanied by an excellent portrait of him, from an original oil painting, as large as life, in the possession of his son.

HALSE,

Or Hawes, as it is now commonly written and pronounced, was still more distinguished in early times by its capricious orthography, occurring under the different names of Hasou, Halso, Alsou, Hausho, Halse, Hals, Hawse, and Hawes. It forms the north western division of Brackley parish, and contains about 1770 acres, the whole of which is vested in the trustees under the will of the late duke of Bridgwater. It is all old inclosure, and principally in permanent pasture.

The Manorial History, for convenience of arrangement, and to avoid repetition, has been incorporated with Brackley, though that borough was originally, and in strictness still is, only a member of this great Saxon manor, which embraced within its soke all the fee of earl Aubrey, and at a subsequent period all the lands held of the honor of Winchester in this county.*

The mansion of its ancient lords is reduced to a common farm-house. In the time of Bridges it was 'a village 'of nine houses;'[z] the population is included in the returns for Brackley. The annual quota of land-tax for "Halse" is £171. 18s. 10d. at 4s. in the £.

Chapel. The various grants to Leicester abbey as connected with Halse are particularized in a previous place.† In "Charyte's Rentale," about 1477, is a memorandum that the abbot and convent of Leicester had the chapel of "Halso" of the gift of their founder, with the tithes of corn and hay, which the chaplain, resident in the mother church of Brackley, was accustomed to receive. The inhabitants of the hamlet of Halse were bound to keep the chapel in repair, and the abbot and convent were discharged from the repairs by an agreement made between John lord Lovell, and the abbot of Leicester at Northampton in 1398 (21 Ric. 2), when the abbot declared for himself and his successors that neither he nor his predecessors or successors were or are bound to the repair of the chapel by any covenant, composition, or debt. Nevertheless, at the especial request of the said lord Lovell, with a public protestation that it should not be construed by the inhabitants into a right or claim to the prejudice of the abbot, he, for that time only, consented to restore the roof and windows of the chancel, in consideration of which lord Lovell contributed towards the repairs six good oak trees, to be felled in his wood of Bagworth (in Leicestershire), and 40s. in money.[a] The chapel, according to Bridges, was 'dedicated to S. Andrew, in honour 'of whom a wake was formerly kept on the Sunday following the thirtieth of November. And from hence we 'may presume that the first fair held at Brackley was kept on S. Andrew's day: tho' there is a tradition that a 'church was formerly there dedicated to this saint.'[z] The depopulation of the hamlet of Halse led to the desecration of this chapel, and its site is now occupied by the farm-house west of the manor-house. In the exterior wall is still visible one of the pillars and arches which divided the nave from the aisle; and in the interior of the building is another of the pillars, and part of the arch between the nave and the tower.

WHISTLEY WOOD,

An insulated member of Brackley parish, Radston intervening, lies about three miles north of the town of Brackley, and contains about 190 acres of woodland, immemorially appendant to the manor of Hawes, and now vested in the trustees under the will of the late duke of Bridgwater.

The right of free chace in Whistley wood was successfully claimed by Matilda Holand in 3 Edw. 3 (1329);* and the privilege probably extended to the adjacent tract of "one hundred and seventeen acres or thereabouts," in the parish of Siresham, called Crowfield common, which belonged to the late duke of Bridgwater, subject to an unlimited right of common to the proprietors of the open fields of that parish, and in lieu of which estate the commissioners for enclosing Siresham allotted to the duke, forty acres of the said common adjoining the wood.

BRACKLEY HATCH, OR SIRESHAM HATCH,

As it is sometimes called from its contiguity to the parish of Siresham, is another insulated district of woodland, with the parishes of Radston and Siresham intervening, about five miles north-east of Brackley, on the road to Towcester, and bordering on the portion of Whittlebury forest called Haselborough walk, which has been recently disafforested and enclosed. It contains about 505 acres; of which Earl's wood, Swallow Tail wood, Buttock's Spire, and Farthing woods, containing about 285 acres, are vested in the trustees under the will of the late duke of Bridgwater; and Penithorn, or Pentimore, and Wet Leys wood, containing about 150 acres, and the Hatch farm of about 70 acres, belong to Magdalen college, Oxford.

CHACOMB

Is written in domesday Cewecumbe, and in early records Chaucombe, Chalcomb, and Chacomb. The saxon terminal comb is obviously and appropriately allusive to the deep valley in which this parish is seated, between Wardington and Middleton Cheney; but to the initiatory syllable it would be difficult if not impossible to assign a rational etymology. The lordship is all old inclosure, and according to a survey made in 1696 contains about 1650 acres, of which about 550 belong to Fiennes Wykeham Martin, esq. lord of the manor; about 250 acres to sir John Cope, of Bramshill-park, Hampshire; about 250 acres to the rev. Henry Handley Norris of Hackney; and about 100 acres to William Parker, esq. of London. It is bounded on the north by Wardington in Oxfordshire; east by Thorp Mandeville; south-east by Thenford; south by Middleton Cheney; south-west by Warkworth; west by Grimsbury in Warkworth, and Hardwick in Oxfordshire; and north-west by Little Bourton and by Coton in Wardington in the same county. About two-thirds of the lordship is in pasture. The upper part is red turnip land, and the lower fields clay and dark loam.

* Vide p. 562.

MANORIAL HISTORY. BISHOP OF LINCOLN'S FEE. In the saxon era Bardi held freely Hollowell and Chacomb in this county, and Liddington and Essendene in Rutlandshire, all of which at the domesday survey were of the fee of the bishop of Lincoln, under whom Godfrey held "Cewecu'be." It contained four hides. The arable land was ten caruates; of which two were in demesne with four servants, and twenty villeins and nine bordars had the remaining eight. There were three mills worth 16s. yearly, and nine acres of meadow. The whole had been valued at £10 yearly, but was reduced at the survey to £7.[a]

MANOR. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 "Chacombe" was certified to contain four hides of the fee of the bishop of Lincoln;[b] but though no mesne lord is here mentioned, Hugh de Chacomb, in 14 Hen. 2 (1167), rendered an account of £30 for relief of six knights' fees of the bishop of Lincoln,[c] in which Chacomb was doubtless included, as he adopted it for his surname. He was one of the justiciaries of Normandy in 2 Joh. (1200);[d] and having founded a priory here, and entered it,

Robert de Chaucomb, in 11 Joh. (1209) owed 80 marks (£53. 6s. 8d.) for his relief, and for seisin of the lands which belonged to his father Hugh the day he assumed the religious habit, and which would have descended to him by inheritance.[e] This debt may be presumed to have remained undischarged; for at his decease he was found to be indebted £144. 8s. 4d. to the king, in whose name his chattels having been seized, the bishop of Lincoln and the other executors were, in 22 Hen. 3 (1238), commanded not to put their hands on them until the said debt was fully satisfied, because according to the custom of the kingdom the king was to be paid before any other creditor.[f] The same year Gilbert de Segrave and Ralph Basset of Sapcote, who married the two daughters and coheiresses of Robert de Chacomb, had livery of his lands;[g] and in the Testa de Nevill, about 27 Hen. 3 (1242),

Gilbert de Segrave accounted for one fee in Chacomb of the fees of the bishop of Lincoln.[h] In 38 Hen. 3 (1253) he went with the earl Mareschall and others on an embassy to Gascony, and being treacherously seized on his return by the French king, and thrown into prison, died soon after of the effects of his confinement. His son, sir Nicholas Segrave, lord Segrave, was one of the most active confederated barons against Henry III. He was wounded and taken prisoner at Evesham, and his lands confiscated; but availing himself of the dictum of Kenilworth, obtained their restitution.[i] By inquisition in 13 Edw. 1 (1285) it was found that neither he nor his tenants of Chacomb were bound to contribute to the repair of the wall of Northampton—or as it was more generally called —Moulton park;[k] and in 20 Edw. 1 (1292) he had a grant for free warren here and in various places in other counties.[l] His son, John lord Segrave, died in 19 Edw. 2 (1325) seised (int. al.) of the manor of Chacomb, held of the bishop of Lincoln by service of half a fee, and of being constable of the bishop's castle of Banbury during war for forty days at his own expense, leaving his grandson and heir, John Segrave, son of Stephen, a minor aged nine years;[m] but Chacomb was assigned in dower to Christian his widow, who in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) was summoned by writ of quo warranto to show why she claimed view of frank-pledge, wayf, and free warren there, when it appearing that she punished offenders against the assize of bread and beer by fine of 10s. 8d. instead of having recourse to the legal punishment of pillory and tumbril, the view was taken into the king's hand, but restored again on petition for half a mark.[n]

Thomas (de Brotherton) earl of Norfolk and Suffolk and marshall of England, by deed dated at "Twedemouth" in Northumberland, June, 17 Edw. 3 (1343), reciting that the king had granted to him the manor of "Chaucumb" during the minority of John, son and heir of Stephen de Segrave, surrendered it to the said John,[o] to whom he had married Margaret, his eldest daughter and eventually heiress. This John lord Segrave died in 27 Edw. 3 (1353), and was succeeded in Chacomb and his other possessions by his daughter and heiress

Elizabeth, aged fifteen years, wife of John de Mowbray,[p] lord Mowbray. His son, John lord Mowbray, was created earl of Nottingham, but dying s. p.[q] was succeeded by his brother Thomas, who was elevated to the dukedom of Norfolk; and in whose lineal male descendants this manor continued down to John 4th duke of Norfolk, who died in 15 Edw. 4 (1475-6), leaving an only child, Anne,[r] married in her infancy to Richard (Plantagenet), created duke of York and Norfolk,[s] who shared the tragic fate of his brother king Edward Vth; when the representation of the Mowbrays became vested in the families of Berkeley and Howard, as exhibited in the subjoined pedigree.

On partition of the inheritance, by an agreement confirmed in parliament,[t] Chaucomb was allotted to John lord Howard, in whom the dukedom of Norfolk was revived by Richard IIIrd, who the same day created his son, Thomas Howard, earl of Surrey. The duke and his son did not desert their patron, but attended him to Bosworth field, where the former was slain, and the latter taken prisoner and committed to the Tower. Both were attainted in parliament on the accession of Henry VII;[u] and in 3 Hen. 7 (1487-8) the forfeited manor of Chacomb was granted to sir John Ryseley.[x] The following year Thomas late earl of Surrey petitioning parliament, the attainder against himself and his father was reversed, and the title of earl of Surrey restored to him;[y] but he did not recover his hereditary rank of duke of Norfolk till the succeeding reign. He died in May, 16 Hen. 8 (1524),[z] and was succeeded by his son Thomas, duke of Norfolk, who in 1533 (25 Hen. 8) exchanged the manor of Chacomb for the manors of Fersfield and Garboldisham in Norfolk with the three coheirs of John (Vere) 14th earl of Oxford.[a] In 2 and 3 Ph. and Mary (1556) dame Ursula Knightley, widow of sir Edmund Knightley,* and third sister and coheiress of John Vere, 14th earl of Oxford, levied a fine of one-third of the manor of Chacombe to John Evans and others;[b] in 23 Eliz. (1581) sir John Danvers,† grandson and coheir of John (Neville) lord Latimer,† by Dorothy, the second sister and coheiress of the earl, levied a fine of another third of the manor to Richard Fox, gent.;[c] and in 28 Eliz. (1585-6) sir Robert Wingfield, son and heir of sir Anthony Wingfield of Letheringham, Suffolk,‡ by Elizabeth, the eldest sister and coheiress of the earl, levied a fine of the remaining third of the manor to the said Richard Fox, gent.[d] son of the grantee of the scite of the priory. The whole manor was ultimately acquired by this family, and descended agreeably to the annexed pedigree down to the late Charles Fox, esq. who died in 1810 seised in fee in possession of the manor, priory, impropriate rectory, advowson of the vicarage, and about 550 acres of land; and also to the reversion of about 550 acres, and great part of the village, subject to leases for long terms of years (now nearly expired) granted by his ancestor Michael Fox, esq. to the tenants in lieu of their rights when this lordship was enclosed, which reversion, together with the advowson of the vicarage, he settled in 1808 on himself for life, remainder to his nephew and heir at law, Fiennes Wykeham, esq. who, on the sale of his uncle's estates in fee, purchased of the trustees the manor, priory, impropriate rectory, and about 200 acres of land. In 1821 he assumed the arms and surname of Martin in addition to Wykeham on succeeding to the Leeds Castle estates in Kent under the will of his kinsman general Philip Martin, and he has recently sold his Chacomb estate to the trustees of the general's will, to the use of himself in strict settlement.

THE PRIORY

Was established for Canons Augustins, and dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. According to an old rental in the Heralds' college, cited in Tanner's "Notitia Monastica," but not now in the college library, this priory was founded by Hugh de Anesy or Anaf, a Norman knight who came into England with the conqueror. No authority is given for this statement, and it is not only unsupported by, but at variance with evidence; for the name of the domesday mesne lord was Godfrey. It is however possible—as it is difficult to conceive his name should have been introduced without some relation to fact—that Hugh de Anaf might have been the same individual who afterwards assumed the local name of Chacomb, and was the real founder. Another objection to this account, too, is, that it antedates the foundation of the monastery nearly a century; for on reference to the manorial history it will be seen that Hugh de Chacombe was in Normandy in 2 Joh. (1200), between which year and 11 Joh. (1209), when he had entered the priory as a religious, it is reasonable to suppose it was founded; and the conjecture is further corroborated by the circumstance of Walkeline abbot of St. James near Northampton, who died 7 Joh. (1205), being one of the attesting witnesses to the dotation charter, by which the said Hugh de Chaucombe, for the health of his soul, and the souls of Amabilia his wife and their heirs, and of Hodierna his then wife, granted in pure alms to God and the blessed Mary, and the apostles St. Peter and St. Paul, and the canons regular of "Chaucumbe," for building their church and edifices, all the toft called Beveland (or Oxland) in the west part under Chaucumbe, and the parish church of Chaucumbe, and the mill under the garden of Chaucumbe, and common pasture with him and his tenants of the said vill for twenty-four beasts and twelve-score sheep; certain lands there specified by name, and pasture for three horses in his demesne; the church of "Bereford" (Barford Michell in Oxfordshire); the church of "Magna Daubi" (Great Dalby in Leicestershire), and common pasture with him and his tenants of the said vill for thirty beasts and twelve-score sheep, and certain specified lands there; a moiety of the church of "Retherby" (Rotherby in Leicestershire), and a cottage there; and the church of "Pescia" (Penn in Buckinghamshire); and the election of the prior by the canons with the assent of him and his heirs. It was witnessed by Walkelin abbot of St. James', Northampton, Eustace abbot of Dorchester, Alexander prior of "Essebi" (Ashby), John sub-prior of Daventre, Robert prior of Launde, and several parochial incumbents; and to it was appended a round seal of green wax about two inches long, having a shield fretty, in chief a crescent between two stars, and inscribed "Sigill. Hugonis de Chaucumb."[e]

In 2 Edw. 3 (1328) the king, by a charter of inspeximus tested at Northampton 18 May, recited and confirmed the above grant from Hugh de Chaucumb, with some slight variations, and another grant, by which he added all his land of "Merton" (Oxfordshire), two virgates in "Cubyngton," the third part of "Swinfen" (Staffordshire), two hides of land in "Pescia and Bocland" (in Buckinghamshire), one virgate in "Bereford," one virgate in "Newenton" (South Newton in Oxfordshire), two hides of land with a wood in "Forsthull" (in Oxfordshire), eight virgates in "Sevesby" (Sheavesby in Leicestershire), four two virgates and eighteen acres in "Thorp," eight virgates which he had in exchange for his land at "Retherby" virgates and fifteen acres in "Apeltre," and three cottages which he had in exchange for his land at "Retherby" from William his brother; a confirmation from Robert de Chaucumbe of the above grant; a remission and confirmation from Amabilia de Segrave lady of Chaucumbe of all rents and lands which the canons had in Chaucumb, Rotherby, Dauby, and elsewhere of her fee, and of the free administration of all their moveables and immoveables, during a vacancy by death or cession of the prior, saving to her and her heirs one servant to reside in and take charge of the priory when vacant; confirmations from the said Amabilia of minor grants; a grant from John de Segrave lord of Segrave of three places of land in augmentation of the site of the priory; a grant from Nicholas de Segrave of a place without the priory gate for the erection of an alms-house; a grant from Petronilla, daughter of Hodierna, lady of "Willmelecton" (Wormleighton in Warwickshire), of half a virgate in "Wilmelecton," and confirmation of the grant from Richard Pech her son and heir; a grant from Robert Passelewe of four acres there; a grant from Hodierna, wife of Richard le Waleys of "Wilmelecton," of a virgate there; and a grant from Amabilia, widow of Gilbert de Segrave, of 100s. yearly rent out of her manors of Chaucumb and Dauby.[f]

The priory at an early period had the following possessions in Warwickshire, which were either resumed by the heirs of the donors, or alienated prior to the dissolution. Richard de Amundeville by deed without date gave to Chacomb priory all his lands and rents in Warwick; but, if Richard his son and heir should be unwilling to part with them, they should be restored again on payment by him of 100 marks of silver (£66. 13s. 4d.); seal, circular; with arms, fretty and a fesse, inscribed "Sigill. Ricardi de Amundeville."[g] The canons of Chacomb had all or the greater part of the manor of Marton in or before the reign of John; for in 1 Hen. 3 (1216) the sheriff of Warwickshire was commanded to give them possession, of which they alleged they had been unjustly disseised by William Basset.[h] 'In the sixth year of Edward III. (1332),[i] Edmund de Bereford, clerk, made a grant 'to this monastery of the manor of Grandborough in Warwickshire, and obliged the convent to find four canons, 'who should perform the same offices for the souls of his father, mother, and himself, as also for the health and 'safety of king Edward and Henry bishop of Lincoln whilst living, and for their souls after their decease, as were 'usually solemnized on the anniversary day of their founder: distributing yearly on the anniversary of the said 'Edmund xls. to the poor for the good of his soul, and xxs. for the anniversary of his father.' This grant was made "without licence," and before the expiration of this reign the manor was recovered by the heirs of the Braundeston family, from whom the Berefords had purchased it.[k]

Henry Percy earl of Northumberland, custos of the lands of (Thomas Mowbray) earl of Nottingham during his minority, by deed in 3 Ric. 2 (1379), reciting that Ralph Basset of Drayton, late custos of the earl, had granted to the prior and convent of Chacomb the manor of "Chacombe," till the full age of the earl, at a yearly rent of £24, confirmed the said demise, but reduced the rent to £20 yearly.[l]

The Priors are thus given by Bridges from the Lincoln episcopal registers.[r]

'The first prior that occurs of this house was William 'de Colingham. He was chosen in the twenty-fifth year 'of Henry III. and governed here eight and thirty years. 'In the seventh year of Edward I. he was succeeded by

'Adam de Appelby. He died in 1299, the twenty-'seventh year of Edward I. and in his stead was chosen

'Robert de Wardon, who presided here but little more 'than three years, and was succeeded in the thirtieth 'year of Edward I. by

'Alexander de Kaysthorp. He died in 1326, 19 Ed-'ward II. and the canons proceeding to an irregular 'election, the Bishop of Lincoln with licence from the 'King, appointed

'Roger de Silby, who dying in the seventh year of 'Edward III. had his successor,

'Thomas de Saxton, first irregularly chosen by the 'convent, and then presented by the Bishop of Lincoln. 'He resigned in the thirteenth year of this reign, and 'was succeeded by

'Henry de Kegworth.' Sir John Segrave, by will dated at Bretby, Derbyshire, in 1352, directed his body to be buried at Chacomb, and appointed Henry, prior of that house, one of his executors.[s] The annexed representation of his seal is from a deed in the Augmentation Office. His 'successor in 1371 (44 Edw. '3), was

'Edmund de Thorp.'

Thomas Brackle occurs in 1412.[t]

John Ferneall, prior of Chacomb, was a brother of the Corpus Christi guild in Coventry in 1495 (11 Hen. 7), and 1498 (14 Hen. 7).[u]

Thomas Saunders occurs from 1503,[x] and was also vicar of the parish from 1510. He and six canons of this convent in 26 Hen. 8 (1534), acknowledged the king's supremacy as head of the church of England, under their hands and seals.[y] He died shortly after, and is said to have been 'succeeded by

'Henry Anste;' but if so he could only have presided a short time; for the office was vacant at the ecclesiastical survey, when

'Thomas Ston' was sub-prior;[z] and the following year (27 Hen. 8), it was included in the act for the suppression of the lesser monasteries.

"Of the Common Seal of this priory, an impression in a very imperfect state, but which appears to have represented St. Peter and St. Paul, is in the Chapter-house, Westminster, attached to the acknowledgment of supremacy. All that remains of the legend is as follows, Sigill. Apostol . . . ." [a]

There is no Cartulary of this monastery extant; but numerous references to public records and other documents relating to it in Nasmith's edition of Tanner's Notitia.

In 35 Hen. 8 (1543) the site and demesne lands (as particularly described) of the late priory of Chacombe, with the rectory or church of Chacombe, and all lands and tithes thereto belonging, and the advowson of the vicarage, were granted to Michael Fox, of London, gent.[b] in whose descendants they have been incorporated with the manor.

Chacomb Priory is a comparatively modern seat north of the village, and exhibits slight traces only of its monastic origin in one of the back offices. Bridges states that 'the gatehouse and lodge of the abbey were not 'long since standing, at a small distance from it.'[c]

The Village, about four miles from Banbury, lies in a low sequestered valley rising to the church, and approached from Wardington and Middleton by a long and steep descent. In the time of Bridges it contained 'about forty families.'[c] By the census of 1801 it contained 74 houses and 438 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 86 houses and 425 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 87 houses and 485 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £218. 16s. 4d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £3237. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £586. 3s. at 5s. in the £. The wake follows (1st Aug.) Lammas-day, or St. Peter ad Vincula.

The Advowson has been anticipated under the manorial and monastic history.

The Rectory is valued in the Taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[d] and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[e] at 15 marks (£10) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), it was returned under the spiritualities of the priory as let to farm at £10 per ann.[f]

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Brackley. It was endowed by Hugh Wells bishop of Lincoln between 1209 and 1234,[g] but is omitted in the taxations of 1254 and 1291. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 it is valued at £8. per ann. deducting 3s. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton.[f] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a vicarage worth £30 yearly, in the patronage of Charles Fox, esq. of Southwark, Surrey; and that Mr. John Edwards, the incumbent, supplied the cure.[h] It is a discharged living, returned under the act 5 Anne (1707), to be of the clear yearly value of £35. 11s. 6d. It has been twice augmented by queen Anne's bounty; in 1724 with £200 to meet a donation of £100 from the rev. Dr. Godolphin, £50 from Mrs. Fox, and £50 from donors of small sums, now vested in an estate of about 30 acres at Claydon in Oxfordshire; and in 1804 with another £200 to meet a donation of a similar sum from Charles Fox, esq. the late patron. The vicar is entitled to the vicarial tithes of the parish, and has about five acres of glebe land.

The vicarage house is a neat modern edifice, north of the church-yard.

The Registers commence in 1566.

The Church, dedicated to St. Peter, is situated at the north end of the village, and consists of a tower, containing six bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. It is principally of the Edwardian period. Most of the windows in the aisles and chancel have ogee arches, single mullions, and a quatrefoil in the head. The porch has a stone roof similar to Middleton Cheney, but smaller. The interior is pewed, but indifferently paved. The tower is 16 ft. 1 in. long, by 11 ft. wide; the nave and aisles 40 ft. 1 in. long, the north aisle 17 ft. the nave 17 ft. 11 in. and the south aisle 14 ft. 9 in. wide; and the chancel 34 ft. 9 in. long, by 15 ft. 7 in. wide. Attached to a pillar in the south aisle is a circular Norman font, with intersecting arches, and a cable moulding over them. The nave is divided from each aisle by three pointed arches on low multangular pillars, with capitals of plain mouldings. At the east end of the north aisle are two piscinas; and at the side of a low door an aperture communicating with the chancel for auricular confession—the only one I have yet met with in the county. On the south side of the chancel, within the altar rails, is a piscina.

O holy blessed & gloryus trinite thre persons and one God have mercy upon us miserable sinners,

And beneath is an emblematical device of the Trinity, in which God the Father is represented as an old man seated in a chair with the globe at his feet, and his right hand elevated, the thumb and two middle fingers extended, to signify the Trinity, and the other two closed, to indicate the hypostatical union of the two natures in Christ, who is extended on a cross placed within the legs of the father, and over his head is a dove descending, as the typical emblem of the Holy Ghost. Below, on a larger plate, is inscribed

CHANTRY. 'Within the parish church of Chacomb was a chauntry, founded,' says Bridges, 'as I suppose, by 'Edmund de Bereford in the sixth year of Edward III.';[m] but which may with greater probability—as Bereford's grant was subsequently resumed—be assigned to the one founded here in 20 Edw. 3 (1346) for sir John de Lions (of Warkworth), who had been a benefactor to the priory.[n] In the ecclesiastical valuation of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), this chantry was valued in rents and profits at £5. 6s. 8d. per ann. and William Caswell was the officiating priest;[o] but it does not occur in the chantry rolls of 38 Hen. 8 and 2 Edw. 6.

BENEFACTIONS (p. 540). Walker's charity is a rent-charge of £2 yearly out of certain houses in London; and Bennet's a similar rent-charge out of lands in this parish. Both sums are expended yearly, according to ancient usage, with other monies subscribed on the occasion, in the purchase of a cow, which is divided amongst the poor at Christmas.

HUSCOTE,

Huscote mill on the river Charwell is within the bounds of this parish; but Huscote house and farm, containing about 115 acres, is in the parish of Warkworth. It formerly belonged to the Copes of Grimsbury, and is now the property of John Guest, esq.

CROUGHTON,

In domesday Creveltone, Cliweton, and Criweltone; in early records Crouelton, Crowelton, and Croulton, and in later times Croughton, presents no probable etymology. The lordship was inclosed by act of parliament 47 Geo. 3 (1807), and contains about 2110 acres, of which about 905 acres belong to the devisee of the late William Fermor, of Tusmore in Oxfordshire, esq. lord of the manor; about 385 acres to the rector in right of his church; about 370 acres to the representatives of the late Thomas Hopcraft, gent.; about 160 acres to John Ingram Lockhart, esq. late M.P. for Oxford; and about 140 acres to the president and fellows of Magdalen college, Oxford. It is bounded on the north by Charlton in Newbottle parish; north-east by Plowman's Furze, and east by Astwick, both in Evenley parish: south by Fritwell in Oxfordshire, from which it is divided by a brook; and west by Aynho. The soil is principally a strong loam, with an under stratum of loose stone brash. There is a mill on the brook which runs towards Aynho.

Manorial History. Mandeville Fee.* Two Saxon portions of this vill were granted by the Norman conqueror to Geoffrey de Mandeville. The largest of these estates in "Cliweton" belonged to Suartlin, but without the power of alienation; and at the domesday survey was held under Geoffrey de Mandeville by Osbern† for one hide and two parts of a virgate. The arable land was three caracates; of which one was in demesne, with three servants; and ten villeins had a caracate and a half. There was a mill worth 2s. yearly. The whole was then, as heretofore, valued at 30s. yearly.[a] The other estate in "Creveltone" was the freehold of Asgar,* rated at 3s. yearly, and at the time of the survey held under Geoffrey by Suetman. It contained the fifth part of half an hide. The arable land was only two bovates or oxgangs, and there was one villein with half a caracate.[a]

No mention is made of the Mandeville fee or its tenants in the hydarium of Hen. 2; but in the Testa de Nevill, about 27 Hen. 3 (1242), Hugh de Missenden† was found to hold one fee of the fees of the earl of Hereford of the honor of Mandeville;[b] and the Missendens were returned to hold by the same tenure in the inquisitions post mortem of Humphry (Bohun) earl of Hereford and Essex in 46 Edw. 3 (1372),[c] Alianora duchess of Gloucester in 1 Hen. 4 (1400),[d] and Edmund earl of Stafford in 4 Hen. 4 (1403).[e]

Constance Fee.‡ Honor of Wallingford.§ Duchy of Cornwall. In the Saxon æra the son of Burred had, but without the power of disposal, a portion of "Creveltone," which at the domesday survey was held by Aluric, under the bishop of Constance. It contained four parts of half an hide. The arable land was half a carucate, and there were three bordars with one plough. It was valued at 10s. yearly.[f]

The possessions of the bishop of Constance escheating to the crown in the reign of William 2nd, these lands appear to have been annexed to the honor of Wallingford in Berkshire, for in the hydarium of Hen. 2. Brian Fitz Count was found to hold an hide and a half and two small virgates in "Crouelton" of that fee.[g] Both he and his wife Maud, daughter and heiress of Robert D'Oyly, having entered into a religious life, Henry 2nd seized the honor of Wallingford into his own hands;[h] and in the Liber Niger, 14 Hen. 2 (1167), amongst the knights enfeoffed in this honor, Gilbert de Bella Aqua or Bellew held four fees.[i] In a list of the king's tenants of this honor under the head of Berkshire in the Testa de Nevill, Milo de Neyrenuit was certified to hold two fees for his purparty of the inheritance of Geoffrey de Bella Aqua;[k] and in another part of the same record, about 27 Hen. 3 (1242), Milo was returned to hold two parts, or half a fee—parcel of the above two fees—in "Crowlton," of the honor of Wallingford.[l] In the inquisition of knights' fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295), Reginald Beauchamp and William Wakelyn held a moiety of a fee in "Crowlton" of the earl of Cornwall as of the honor of Wallingford;[m] in 9 Edw. 2 (1315) Milo Beauchamp was co-lord of Croughton;[n] and in the return of the knights fees of Edward late prince of Wales, lord of the honor of Wallingford, in 2 Ric. 2 (1378), Milo Beauchamp and Thomas Wakelyn were found to hold a moiety of a fee each in Croughton.[o]

Manor. John de Dalderby and Eleanor his wife, in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), gave the king half a mark for licence to claim wayf and view of frank pledge once a year, in their manor of "Crowelton," of all the tenants of the fee of Mandeville. The jury presented that John and Eleanor, and the ancestors of Eleanor, had immemorially exercised those privileges, and that in cases of wayf proclamation was made at the neighbouring markets and fairs, and if any one within a year and a day proved the beast to be their property it was liberated. Offences against the assize of bread and beer having been punished by amerciament instead of pillory and tumbril, the view was taken into the king's hands, but restored again for half a mark.[p] In the same year William Wakelyn recovered a moiety of the manor of "Croulton juxta Aynhoe," with £40 damages against Roger de Missenden and Richard Wale and Joan his wife, by whom he had been unjustly disseised.[q]

Isabel Ramsey, widow, presented to the rectory in 1418 (6 Hen. 5), and it may be fairly presumed that the manor was then in possession of the family, but no direct proof offers till Jan. 1 Hen. 8 (1509-10), when Thomas Ramsey, esq. died seised of the manor and advowson of "Croughton," held of the king as of his honor of Wallingford, leaving by Margaret Restwold his wife, Thomas Ramsey his son and heir, aged 13 years.[r] He married Petronilla, daughter of John Baldwyn, esq. and died 28 Apr. 16 Hen. 8 (1524), at which time Anne, aged 21 years, and Joan, aged 18 years, were his sisters and coheiresses; but in June following his widow had a posthumous child named Elizabeth, who became his daughter and heiress, and was aged two years at the date of the inquisition.[s]

Nicholas Wodhull, esq.* commonly called lord Wodhull, died 6 May, 23 Hen. 8 (1531), possessed (int. al.) of a manor in Croughton, held of the bishop of Lincoln as of his manor of Banbury by unknown service.[t] It must, therefore, either have been a different manor from the preceding one, or the finding of the tenure in the inquisition was erroneous. This manor cannot be traced further in the family than his son, Anthony Wodhull, esq. who died seised in Feb. 33 Hen. 8 (1541-2).[u]

John Clerke, gent. second son of Nicholas Clerke, of Weston, esq. died 3 Apr. 1 Jac. (1603) seised of the manor and advowson of Croughton, held of the king as of his honor of Wallingford. His second wife, Jane, daughter of Anthony Blagrave, esq. survived him. By his first wife, Margaret, daughter of .... Chambers, he had a daughter, Dorothy, and a son and heir, Charles Clerke, who succeeded to this estate, and lived till 1669.

From the Clerkes this manor passed, either immediately or by mesne conveyances, to the Fermors of Tusmore in Oxfordshire, down to the late William Fermor, esq. who devised it with his other estates to trustees in trust for Maria, wife of capt. John Turner Ramsay.

Moreton Fee.† Honor of Leicester.‡ Levenot held freely lands in "Criweltone," the berewick of which lay in Evenley. It was then rated at 20s. yearly, but was reduced to 2s. yearly at the domesday survey, when it was held by William under the earl of Moreton. It contained four parts of half an hide. The arable land was one carucate, and there was one bordar only.[y] In the hydarium of Hen. 2 there was certified to be four small virgates of the fee of the earl of Leicester in "Crowelton," and Genar held a hide and two small virgates there of the same earl.[z] In the Testa de Nevill, about 27 Hen. 3 (1242), amongst the fees of Simon Montfort, of the honor of Leicester, Simon de Turvill § held the fourth of a fee in "Crowelton," of the small fees of Moreton.[a] Richard de Coleshull, seneschal of the honor of Leicester, in a plea 32 Edw. 1 (1303), avers that Nicholas de Turvill holds nine fees of the said honor, and having distrained him for 50s. due for his relief for half a fee in "Croulton," held of the said honor, the jurors found the said distraint to be good.[b] In 9 Edw. 2 (1315), Nicholas Turvill was co-lord of Croughton.[c] On collecting the aid for making the king's son a knight in 20 Edw. 3 (1346), Roesia, widow of Richard de la Porte, and Thomas Monce, accounted for the fourth part of a fee each in "Croulton," of the honor of Leicester.[d]

The Prior of St. John of Jerusalem, in plea to a quo warranto 3 Edw. 3 (1329), claimed view of frank pledge twice a year at Blakesley, of all his tenants there, and (int. al.) at "Crowilton."[e] 'Certain lands and 'tenements in Croughton, which belonged to the preceptory of the knights hospitallers at Dingley in 35 Hen. 8 '(1543), were granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple.'[f]

The Manor House is not now standing.

The Village is about eight miles from Banbury on the turnpike road to Buckingham. In the time of Bridges there were 'about sixty families.'[g] By the census of 1801 it contained 70 houses and 301 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 78 houses and 328 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 87 houses and 376 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £52. 18s. 2d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2703. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £379. 17s. 10d. 'The wake follows the festival of All Saints.'

The Advowson was in early times contested by the different lords holding under the Constance fee, but from the beginning of the fifteenth century it was enjoyed by the Ramseys, and their successors, lords of the manor, till alienated by the Clarkes to the Freinds. From the rev. William Freind, patron and rector, it descended to his eldest son, the rev. Dr. Robert Freind, master of Westminster school, who was succeeded by his son, the rev. Dr. William Freind, dean of Canterbury, whose son, the rev. William Maximilian Freind, left an only child, Deborah Susannah, by whom it was carried in marriage to Henry Jeffery (Flower) viscount Ashbrook of the kingdom of Ireland, the present patron.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Brackley. In the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3) it was rated at 16 marks (£11. 6s. 8d.) per ann. deducting a pension;[h] and in that of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) at 17 marks (£12) per ann. deducting a pension untitheable.[i] In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it was returned at £15. 3s. 8d. per ann. without any deductions.[k] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage worth £90 per ann. "or thereabout," in the patronage of Charles Clarke, gent. of the same place; and that Zacheus Bredon the incumbent supplied the cure.[l] The rectory now consists of 385 a. 0 r. 19 p. of land, allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of glebe lands, and of all tithes whatsoever; and also of the grass crop of 6 a. of meadow, and about 3 a. of other land in Aynho. The rectory house adjoins the north side of the church-yard.

Zacheus Bredon, B.D. was inst. 23 July 1631, on the presentation of sir Francis Staunton of Birchmore in Bedfordshire; and again 17 Nov. 1632, on the presentation of the king by lapse. He was buried here 9 July 1663,[n] and

William Freind, of Christ ch. coll. Oxf. A.M. was presented by Charles Clarke, gent. and inst. the 21st of the same month. Of his learned descendants—two of whom will be briefly recorded in a subsequent page—ample particulars will be found in Nichols's Anecdotes.[o] He was buried here 23 Sept 1689,[p] but

Matthew Hutton, A.M. already noticed under Aynho, had been previously presented by the rev. Robert Freind, and was inst. on the 21st of that month. On his decease the same patron presented his brother-in-law,

John Maximilian De L'Angle, of Christ ch. coll. Oxf. A.M. who was inst. 3 July 1711, and obtained the vicarage of Newbottle in Nov. following. He was buried here 24 Aug. 1719;[p] and

George Freeman, of Brazen-nose coll. Oxf. D.D. was presented by the same patron, and inst. 26 Jan. 1719; on whose cession

Peirson Lloyd, of Trin. coll. Camb. A.M. was inst. 25 Mar. 1731, on the presentation of the same patron. He was also rector of one of the portions of Waddesden in Buckinghamshire; but, resigning this benefice,

Thomas Treacher, of Magd. coll. Oxf. B.D. was presented by the rev. William Maximilian Freind, and inst. 1 Dec. 1779; on whose resignation

John Dudley, of Christ ch. coll. Oxf. A.M. was inst. 11 Jan. 1782, on the presentation of the same patron. His resignation introduced

Joseph Wells, of Christ ch. coll. Oxf. D.D. F.A.S. who was presented by the same patron, and inst. 3 Dec. 1783. He died at Cheltenham 14 Mar. 1818, and was buried at Ellesborough in Buckinghamshire, of which place he was both patron and rector. His successor,

Charles Leigh Bennett, of Christ ch. coll. Oxf. A.M. was inst. 20 May following, on the presentation of Henry Jeffery (Flower) viscount Ashbrook, but retained it only a year, when his nephew, Henry Leigh Bennett, of Christ ch. coll. Oxf. A.M. was presented by the same patron, and inst. 15 June 1819.

The Registers in the time of Bridges 'bore date in 1561;'[q] but the earliest now extant do not commence till the middle of the seventeenth century.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, stands south of the village, and consists of a low tower, containing three bells, nave, north and south aisles with porches, and chancel. The tower is 16 ft. 2 in. long, by 12 ft. 9 in. wide; the nave and aisles 44 ft. long, the nave 15 ft. 5 in. the north aisle 12 ft. 9 in. and the south aisle 11 ft. 9 in. wide; and the chancel 20 ft. 3 in. long by 16 ft. 4 in. wide. The font is rudely circular, on a square base, and is attached to the west pillar of the south aisle. The nave is divided from the north aisle by three arches on circular norman pillars, one of which is of a peculiar character, having at one angle of the square base a rude head, and at the opposite one a trefoil slipped, both extending over a torus moulding; and at the two other angles smaller ornaments not passing over the moulding; the capital is square-headed, with very shallow foliations, and a circular astragal. The dividing arcade of the south aisle has three higher and wider arches on similar pillars, with large square bases, and capitals of plain mouldings, except the demi one at the eastern end, which has a circular shallow foliated capital. At the side of this pillar is a staircase, formerly leading to the rood loft. The chancel has been rebuilt by the present incumbent.

Antient Chapel. 'Not far from the water mill, in a field called Chapel close, stood formerly a small 'chapel,[1] which was appropriated to the hospital of S. James and S. John in Aynho by Hugh Wells bishop of 'Lincoln, with the consent of Guy de la Haie, the patron of the said chapel, and afterwards given to the rectory of 'Croughton. The walls of it were standing within the memory of persons living in the neighbourhood. The 'rector of Croughton now pays a pension to the said hospital of Aynho of xs. yearly for tithes with which this 'chapel was endowed.'

Benefactions (p. 540). The commissioners of inclosure allotted 15 a. 2 p. of land in trust for the poor in lieu of the custom of cutting furze, &c. which now lets for £16 per ann.

Robert Freind, a distinguished scholar, eldest son of the rev. William Freind, rector of this parish, was born here in 1667. He was elected from Westminster school to Christ church college, Oxford; proceeded A.M. 1693, and accumulated the degrees of B.D. and D.D. in 1709. He was appointed second master of Westminster school in 1699, and head master in 1711. He was instituted the same year to the valuable rectory of Witney in Oxfordshire, and obtained a canonry of Windsor in 1729, which he exchanged for a prebendal stall in Westminster in 1731; and afterwards resigned both preferments to his son. He published in 1711 a sermon on Jer. iii. 25, preached before the house of commons Jan. 30, 1710-11; and in 1724 an edition of Cicero's "Orator;" besides a few fugitive pieces. He was most celebrated for his latin epitaphs, which were much admired, and the one to the memory of his father, in a preceding page, was probably from his pen. He died 9 Aug. 1751, at the advanced age of 84 years; leaving, by Jane his wife, daughter of the rev. Samuel De L'Angle, an only surviving son, William, afterwards dean of Canterbury.

John Freind, the most eminent physician of his day, and an elegant writer, was youngest brother of Robert, and born here in 1675. He, as well as his brother, was elected from Westminster school to Christ church college, Oxford. He took the degrees of A. M. and B.M. in 1701, and was created M.D. by diploma in 1707. His classical reputation whilst at college induced dean Aldrich to select him with Mr. Foulkes for the task of publishing a latin translation of the oration of Æschines against Ctesiphon, and of Demosthenes de Corona. Having devoted himself to the study of the medical profession, he introduced himself to the public as early as 1699 by a communication to the royal society on a remarkable case of hydrocephalis, or watery head. In 1704 he was appointed professor of chemistry at Oxford, and some years after published his lectures in latin, under the title of "Prælectiones Chymicæ," with a dedication to sir Isaac Newton. In 1704 he attended the earl of Peterborough in his expedition to Spain as physician of the forces, and remained on the continent two years. On his return to England, finding his noble patron's conduct violently censured, he ably and gratefully vindicated him in "An Account of the earl of Peterborough's conduct in Spain, chiefly since the raising the siege of Barcelona," 1706; to which was added "the campaign of Valencia, with original papers," 1707, 8vo. In 1712 he accompanied the duke of Ormond and the army into Flanders, in his professional capacity, and continued there till the peace. From this period he resided in London, passed through the different offices of the college of physicians, and in 1720 delivered an Harveian oration, which was much applauded.

Not content with the physiological and medical fame he had acquired, he now embarked in politics, and entered parliament in 1722 as member for Launceston. His views were strongly opposed to the court; and, warm in his party attachments, and perhaps unguarded in his expressions, he rendered himself at that critical period obnoxious to the ministry, who, availing themselves of the suspension of the habeas corpus act, committed him to the tower on suspicion of being implicated in bishop Atterbury's plot for the restoration of the Stuart family. He remained in custody from March to June 1723, when he was admitted to bail, Dr. Mead and three other of his medical brethren becoming his sureties; and in November following he was called up to the king's bench and discharged. He beguiled the hours of imprisonment by writing a medical tract, and planning his great work, "The History of Physic, from the time of Galen to the beginning of the sixteenth century, chiefly with regard to practice;" the first volume of which appeared in 1725 (8vo), and the second in 1726. It was reprinted in 1727, and again in 1750; has been translated into the latin and french languages, and still continues a standard work. Time completely dispelled the political cloud which hung over him, for soon after he gained his liberty he was appointed physician to the prince of Wales, and on that prince's accession to the throne he filled the same honorable post to queen Caroline, whose confidence and esteem he enjoyed till his death, in July 1728. He was buried at Hitcham in Buckinghamshire; but a cenotaph, with an elegant latin inscription, was erected to his memory in Westminster abbey. His latin works were collected and published by Dr. Wigan, together with a latin version of the History of Physic, and a life of the author, 1733, fol. Several foreign editions of this collection have also been published. There are three engraved portraits of Dr. Freind; 1. a medallion, by P. Fourdrinier; 2. by the same, from a picture by M. Duke, 1727, 8vo; 3. by Vertue, from the same, 1730, 4to. There is also a medal of him, finely executed, by St. Urbain of Lorraine, with his bust on the obverse, and an antient and modern physician joining hands on the reverse.

CULWORTH,

In domesday "Culeorde," and in early records "Coleworth" and "Culeworth," may be referred to the name of the first proprietor in combination with the saxon ꝑcɒh, denoting an estate or residence. The lordship was enclosed by private agreement in the reign of king James 1st, and contains about 2000 acres; of which about 1220 acres belong to miss Rich, of Sunning-hill, Berkshire, lady of the manor; about 400 acres to Peter Rye, esq. capt. R.N.; and about 150 acres to Mr. William Whitton of Eydon. It is bounded on the north by Eydon in Wardon hundred; on the east by Morton Pinkeney in Norton hundred; on the south by Sulgrave in Wardon hundred; and on the west by Thorp Mandeville in Sutton hundred, and Edgcote in Wardon hundred. The soil on the south side of the lordship is of a light sandy staple, with a substratum of limestone; on the north and east chiefly loam and gravel; and on the west principally clay. Mr. Conybeare, in the "Outlines of Geology," observes that Culworth village stands on the brow formed of the subjacent sandy strata, against which the oolite here appears to terminate abruptly, ranging immediately on the south of the village. The white paving stone of this lordship, formerly used alternately with the black stone of Byfield for paving floors in imitation of black and white marble, has been noticed under the latter parish.* The present water mill is probably the same which is called Cotes mill in the grant to Canons Ashby priory, though it is now known only by the name of Culworth mill.

Manorial History. Mandeville Fee.† In the time of Edward the confessor one portion of "Culeorde," or Culworth, was the freehold of Asgar,† and was valued at £3 yearly, both then, and at the domesday survey, when it was held by Osbern, of Geoffrey de Mandeville. It contained one hide and a half and two parts of a virgate. The arable land was four caracates; of which two were in demesne with four servants; and ten villeins with one bordar had the remaining two. There was a mill worth 40d. yearly.[a]

Manor. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, Otner, who had the lands of the Mandeville fee in Flore, was certified to hold one hide in Coleworth.[b] In the Testa de Nevill, about 19 Hen. 3 (1235) Roger de Missenden accounted for 2 marks for the scutage of one fee in Culworth of the fees of Mandeville;[c] and in another part of the same record, about 27 Hen. 3 (1242), Hugh de Missenden was found to hold this fee in "Culeworth," of the fees of the earl of Hereford,† of the honor of Mandeville.[d] His son, Roger de Missenden, purchased the other manor here, held of the fee of Pinkeney.[e] In 9 Edw. 2 (1315) his son, Roger de Missenden, or Mussenden, was lord of Culworth;[f] and in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) was summoned by a writ of quo warranto to show by what right he claimed to have view of frank pledge twice every year in his manor of "Coleworth" of the fee of Mandeville, when he pleaded prescription; but it appearing that he had punished offenders against the assize of bread and beer by fine of 6s. 8d. and not by pillory and tumbril, the view was seized into the king's hands, but restored to him again for a fine of one mark.[g] From him the united manor or manors descended to Hugh de Missenden, who died in 36 Edw. 3 (1362), seized of the manor of Culworth, one moiety held of the princess Isabella the king's daughter, as of the manor or barony of Wedon Pinkeney, and the other moiety of the earl of Hereford as of the honor of Mandeville, leaving two daughters and coheiresses, Alice aged 16 years, and Felicia aged 11 years. The princess granted her moiety of the wardship and marriage of these minors to Richard Beaumond, whose son John married Alice the eldest. The earl granted his moiety of the wardship and marriage to John de Missenden.[h] 'But this 'grant appears to have been resumed;[i] For in the forty-second year of Edward III. the marriage of Felicia the 'younger sister, with the custody of the lands of her inheritance, was granted to Agnes her mother, and Thomas de 'Brancestre her second husband.' In 48 Edw. 3 (1374) Nicholas de Gunwardby of Oxford and Alice his wife levied a fine of a moiety of the manor, two mills, three carucates of land, and 43s. rent in Culworth, and Thomas de Brancestre and Agnes his wife of a third part of the same, being the dower of Agnes, to John Bernes of London, Robert Brome of Warwick, John Freton, clerk, and others,[k] in trust for Alice Perers, the favourite mistress of king Edward III.

MISSENDEN or MUSSENDEN of CULWORTH and CROUGHTON.

On the attainder of Alice Perers in 1 Ric. 2 (1377),[1] the manor of Culworth, held to her use by Robert Brome and John Freton, was confiscated with her other estates;[1] but restored to her and her then husband, sir William Windsor, in 3 Ric. 2 (1379).[m]

In 2 Hen. 5 (1414-15) a fine was levied of the manor of Culworth to Robert Charyngworth;[n] and in 5 Hen. 5 (1417) of a moiety of the manor to John de Cece.[o]

This manor is said to have been purchased in 17 Hen. 6 (1438-9) by Robert Danvers, esq.[p] who was appointed one of the justices of the common pleas in the 29th of that reign, knighted by Edw. 4 at the coronation of the queen, and died in 7 Edw. 4 (1467), leaving three daughters and coheiresses, Agnes, married to Hugh Unton, and secondly to sir Walter Denys of Gloucestershire; Alice, wife of .... Burnaby of Watford; and Joan, wife of Henry Frowick of Gunnoldsbury in Middlesex;[q] by whom, or their representatives, the paternal estate was sold to their uncle, Richard Danvers, esq. '[r] In the twelfth year of Edward IV. Walter Denys, Esq. and Richard Denys, 'Gent. remitted to Richard Danvers, Esq. and others, all pretensions to the manor of Culworth;' and '[s] in the sixteenth 'of Edward IV. Thomas Frowyke of Gunnoldsbury in Middlesex remitted to Richard Danvers and others all claim of 'right to the manors of Culworth and Netherbury in Sulgrave, and to all other the lands which lately belonged to 'John or Robert Danvers, Knight.' He died in 4 Hen. 7 (1488-9), and Richard Danvers was son and heir, aged 40 years;[t] but Culworth passed to his second son, John Danvers, by virtue of a settlement on his marriage with Anne Stradling.[p] Their son and heir, Thomas Danvers, esq. ancestor to the earl of Danby, released the manors of Culworth Mountfield or Mandeville, Culworth Pinkeney, and Sulgrave Pinkeney, to his younger brother, William Danvers, esq. at the request of their mother,[p] dame Anne Danvers, who, in a general deed of settlement, 20 Oct. 29 Hen. 8 (1537), still further secured those manors to him by reservation to him of the manor of Smythcote in Dantsey, Wiltshire, and other lands, parcel of her inheritance, in case he should be disturbed in their possession by Silvester Danvers, son and heir of Thomas.[u]

Samuel Danvers, esq. great-great-grandson of William, was creat d a baronet 21 Mar. 18 Car. (1642-3), and being high sheriff of the county the year in which the king was beheaded, publicly evinced his attachment to the royal cause by clothing all his retinue in mourning at the ensuing assizes. From him the united manor of Culworth lineally descended, conformably to the annexed pedigree, down to sir Michael Danvers, the last baronet, on whose decease, in 1775, it devolved on his sister and heiress, Meriel Danvers, who devised it in moieties to Martha and Frances Rich, daughters and coheiresses of her first cousin, Daniel Rich, esq. in the eldest of whom the whole is now vested by survivorship.

Pinkeney Fee.* Leuric held freely in the time of Edward the confessor an estate called "Brime," rated at 40s. yearly, and increased to 60s. at the domesday survey, when it was held by Landric under Ghilo, brother of Ansculf, for two hides and four parts of half an hide. The arable land was six carucates; of which two were in demesne with two servants and three maidens; and six villeins, with a priest, had two others; leaving two waste or unaccounted for. There was a mill worth 32d. yearly, and four acres of meadow.[x]

Pinkeney Manor. Ghilo was the ancestor of the family of Pinkeney, and all the other entries under his name in domesday being clearly appropriated, the subsequent tenure of this estate establishes its identity with Culworth, notwithstanding the total change in its local designation. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, William de Coleworth was certified to hold in "Colew'rth" two hides and four small virgates,[y] corresponding with the domesday measurement, and in the Testa de Nevill, about 25 Hen. 3 (1240), William de Coleworth was returned to hold one fee in "Coleworth" of the fees of Henry de Pinkeney.[z]

By the memorandum in the cartulary of St. Andrew's priory, referred to under Sulgrave,† it appears that William de Culworth, eldest of the four sons of William and Philippa, dying s. p. his brother and heir, Richard de Culworth, gave the manor of Culworth to

Sir Robert Pinkeney, lord of the fee,[a] who died seized of it (int. al.) in 24 Edw. 1 (1296).[b]

CULWORTH OR COLEWORTH OF CULWORTH AND SULGRAVE.

From the cartularies of St. Andrew's priory (Cott. MSS. Vesp. E. xvii.) and of Canons Ashby priory.

WILLIAM DE CULWORTH, of Culworth, temp. Hen. 2.=.....

- Sir ROBERT DE CULWORTH, of Culworth and Sulgrave, temp. Joh. gave Culworth church to Canons Ashby priory.=..... — THOMAS DE CULWORTH, rector of Culworth.
- Sir WILLIAM DE CULWORTH, of Culworth and Sulgrave, sheriff of co. Northt. 25 Hen. 3, ob. 25 Hen. 3 (1240).=PHILIPPA, d. of Hugh de Hardeborowe, had Sulgrave by settlement of sir Robert de Culworth, and survived her husband.
  - 1. WILLIAM DE CULWORTH, of Culworth, sheriff of co. Northt. 26 Hen. 3 (1241), ob. v. m. & s. p.=MARGERY, widow of Will. de Culworth, 2 Edw. 1 (1273-4), living 28 Edw. 1.
  - 2. RICHARD DE CULWORTH, of Culworth after dec. of William, occurs 40 Hen. 3 (1256), gave Culworth to sir Robert de Pinkeney, living 14 Edw. 1 (1286).=b. ROGER DE COLVILLE, of Cavendish, co. Suff. 28 Edw. 1.
  - 3. ROBERT DE CULWORTH.
  - 4. HUGH DE CULWORTH, of Sulgrave by gift of his mother, living 6 Edw. 1 (1278).

Sir Henry Pinkeney, brother and heir of sir Robert, sold this manor to

Sir William de Bradden, by whom it was alienated to

Roger de Missenden.[z] In the inquisition of knights' fees belonging to the barony of Pinkeney in 32 Edw. 1 (1303), the fee in "Coleworth" is assigned to William de Coleworth[c] the former possessor; but in another inquisition,[d] and a plea the same year, it is stated to belong to Roger de Missenden, and to consist of one messuage, one carucate and a half of land, four acres of meadow, and 44s. 6d. yearly rent, held by the service of one fee, and 10s. to the castle guard of Windsor.[e] The Missendens being also lords of the Mandeville manor, the two manors from this period became blended by unity of ownership.

CANONS ASHBY PRIORY LANDS lay principally in that part of the lordship formerly called Cotes. William de Cotes, about the beginning of the thirteenth century, gave to the prior and convent of Canons Ashby his mill of Cotes, with the holm adjoining, a messuage, and part of his great culture, with pasture belonging to half a virgate of land in common pasture and in hedge or inclosure, rendering to him 7s. yearly;[f] by another deed he remitted to them the reserved yearly rent;[f] and, by a third, added half a virgate in Culworth.[g] Robert, son of William de Culworth, as superior lord, confirmed the donations;[g] and at a later period Robert, son of Mast. Ranulph de Everdon, probably the heir of the grantor, quitclaimed all right in the two mills of Cotes for which his father had a suit with the canons of Ashby before the justices itinerant of Northampton by writ of mort d'ancestor; and in return for this remission the canons gave him 20s. and engaged to celebrate yearly for the souls of himself and his father a trentall on the feast of St. Margaret for ever.[h] Stephen le Boteler, son of Amand le Boteler of Holderness, gave to the prior and convent all his land in Culworth, with as much common as belonged to it, and a messuage in Cotes which he had from John de Cotes.[i] In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) the temporalities of Canons Ashby priory at Cotes-Culworth were valued at 33s. 4d. yearly;[k] and after the dissolution were granted in 34 Hen. 8 (1542-3) to sir John Williams and Anthony Stringer.[l]

WARDON ABBEY in Bedfordshire had lands in Culworth, which were included in the grant 32 Hen. 8 (1541) to sir John Dudley[m] of Aston le Walls.

CASTLE. In a close north of the church-yard is a factitious circular hill, surrounded by a deep ditch, called Berry-mount-hill, probably the site of a castle erected by one of the feudal lords.

THE MANOR-HOUSE, situated near the centre of the village, though long the residence of the Danvers family, is destitute of architectural interest; it is now in a very dilapidated state, and occupied by poor families.

Peter Rye, esq. Capt. R.N. has a mansion and estate here, which have been in possession of the family upwards of two centuries.

THE VILLAGE is about six miles from Brackley, and about seven miles from Banbury. It is approached from the north and west by a steep ascent, and extends along the brow for a considerable distance. In the time of Bridges there were 'about eighty families.'[n] By the census of 1801 it contained 107 houses and 532 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 110 houses and 531 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 122 houses and 581 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £195. 1s. 2d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £4073. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £930. 1s. at 9s. in the £. The wake follows the nativity of the virgin (Sept. 8).

MARKET and FAIR. Towards the end of the reign of Edward III. John Bernes and others, the feoffees of Alice Perers, obtained a grant for a weekly market at Culworth on Saturdays, and an annual fair for three days on the vigil, day, and morrow of the feast of St. Peter ad Vincula;[o] but both have been long discontinued.

THE ADVOWSON of "Coleworth" was given to Canons Ashby priory by Robert, son of William de Culworth, saving the right of Elias the clerk to hold the church for life, if he continued a secular priest and desirous of holding it;[p] and the grant was confirmed by Hugh (Wells) bishop of Lincoln,[p] between 1209 and 1235. It was further confirmed by William de Culworth, son of Robert;[p] and Richard, son of William de Culworth.[q] In 2

Edw. 1 (1273-4) the prior and convent impleaded Margaret, widow of William de Culworth, by writ of last presentation; whereupon a jury of twelve free and legal men of the view—i. e. within the view of frank pledge—of "Coleworth" were summoned to appear before the justices at Westminster to hold an assize, when the prior pleaded that one of his predecessors presented a certain William (de Bouere) to the said church, who was instituted and died parson of the same; Margaret alleged that the advowson belonged to William, formerly her husband, and that after his death Richard de Culworth his (brother and) heir assigned to her in dower the third turn or presentation to the said church, which had been since twice vacant. The prior in his rejoinder denied her allegation, and proffered the grants and confirmations, which she being unable to disprove, judgment was given in his favour.[r] In 18 Edw. 2 (1324) Roger de Mussenden, senior, recovered the next presentation to this church against the then prior, by grant in 1320 from the preceding prior, Robert Lunell.[s] After the dissolution the impropriate rectory and advowson of the vicarage were granted in 36 Hen. 8 (1544) to Richard Andrews, esq. and John Howe,[t] who the year following had licence to alienate them to John Danvers, esq.;[u] from whom they descended with the manor down to the late Mrs. Meriel Danvers, who annexed the impropriate rectory to the vicarage, and sold the advowson of the vicarage, which is now vested in Sawyer Spence, of Upton in Essex, esq.

The Rectory was rated in the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3) at 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.) per ann.;[x] and in that of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) at the same sum, deducting a yearly pension of 3 marks (£2) to Canons Ashby priory.[y] At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it was demised by the prior and convent of Canons Ashby to William Saunders at £11. 6s. 8d. per ann.;[z] and is now, as already observed, annexed to the vicarage.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Brackley. The rectory was appropriated to Canons Ashby priory by pope Clement 6th, with the consent of the king, in 1356, and the vicarage ordained.[a] In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it was valued at £10 per ann. without any deductions;[z] and the parliamentary commissioners of 1655 certified that it was worth about £50 yearly; that sir Samuel Danvers was patron; and that Sampson Gaidge, the incumbent, supplied the cure.[b] The impropriate rectory and vicarage united now consist of 23 a. of glebe land, the great tithes, and the small tithes from cottages and gardens.

Rectors. Elias, by William de Coleworth.

Thomas, son of William de Coleworth, by prior Alexander and the convent of Canons Ashby, to hold of them at farm for 40s. yearly so long as he should continue a secular priest, and wish to hold it.[c] By deed, describing himself as Thomas parson of the church of Culworth, he granted to the convent, for the health of his soul, &c. all the tithes of his house or glebe, viz. the tithes of garbs from three virgates of land which belonged to the church, and also the tithes of wool, lambs, pigs, and all other small tithes.[c]

Nicholas de Turre. A controversy having arisen between him and the prior and convent respecting the tithes of garbs from certain lands—evidently in relation to the grant from his predecessor—he, for the sake of peace, restored to the convent the disputed tithes for his life, saving to the church the tithes, as well great as small, which were accustomed to be rendered to the church before his institution.[d]

Thomas Hind, of Christ ch. coll. Oxf. A.M. son of the rev. Dr. Hind, vicar of Rochdale, Lancashire, who was inst. 22 Apr. 1805. He was also rector of Ardley and Westwelton, Oxfordshire, and dying 10 Jan. 1815,[f]

Henry Salman, was inst. 12 Apr. following on the presentation of Grace Greenwood of Salisbury widow, rev. Thomas Salman of Odiham, Hampshire, and Henry Huddleston, of Gray's-inn, esq. He died at Ripple in Worcestershire, 26 Jan. 1829, at the very advanced age of 98 years, and his successor is not yet instituted.

The Register of baptisms commence in 1562, and of marriages and burials in 1610.

The Church, dedicated to the blessed Virgin, stands in the upper part of the village, and consists of a low tower, containing five bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. The west end of the aisles extend parallel with the tower, and the front presents three narrow lancet arches. The tower is 11 ft. 8 in. long, by 10 ft. 3 in. wide; the nave 43 ft. 5 in. by 17 ft. 3 in.; the north aisle 55 ft. 4 in. by 12 ft. 3 in.; the south aisle 54 ft. 6 in. by 12 ft. 2 in.; and the chancel 28 ft. 9 in. by 13 ft. 3 in. The nave is divided from each aisle by three arches on alternately circular and octangular pillars. In the south wall is a monumental arch; eastward of which are a piscina and square locker.

BENEFACTIONS (p. 540). The sum of £200, arising from the several benefactions of Samuel Trist, John Danvers, John Trincocks, and Dorothy Danvers, was in 1713 vested in the purchase of lands in the open fields of Wappenham, in lieu of which, on the inclosure, the commissioners allotted to the trustees 32 acres, which are now let to a yearly tenant at £45 per ann. The rent is annually applied as follows: £5. 4s. is distributed in bread to eight poor widows or widowers; £10 is appropriated to putting out an apprentice; and the residue is distributed soon after Christmas amongst the poor of the parish.

SCHOOL. Miss Martha Rich and Miss Frances Rich, by deed dated 23 Nov. 1795, settled upon eight trustees, the rector being one ex officio, a messuage or school-house erected in Culworth by the late Mrs. Meriel Danvers, and an annuity of £65 charged on lands in Culworth particularly specified, in trust that the said school house should be used as a charity school for instructing in reading, writing, and arithmetic the children of such poor inhabitants of Culworth as the trustees should think proper, being of the age of six years, until they should attain the age of twelve years, or be fit for service, or be put out apprentices to trade; that the trustees should appoint, with power of removal, a master to instruct the children in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and a mistress to teach the female children from the age of six to twelve years, or until fit for service, in knitting, sewing, lace-making, spinning, and such other employments as the trustees should think proper; that the trustees should permit the master and mistress to reside in such parts of the school house respectively as the trustees should appoint, and should allow the former a salary not exceeding £30 a year, and the mistress a salary not exceeding £20 a year, and apply the residue of the annuity of £65 in reparation of the premises, buying books for the children, and such other purposes as they should direct. The trustees are also possessed of £400, 3 per cent. consols, which has been purchased and made up at different times by savings of income. The school is free to all the poor children of the parish, and the number in attendance is generally from seventy to eighty.

EVENLEY OR IMLEY,

In domesday "Evelai," in later records Evenle and Evenley, and in modern times usually written and pronounced Imley, may possibly be compounded of the saxon eue, water, and leag, a field or pasture, the lordship stretching a considerable distance along the banks of the river Ouse. The parish includes the hamlet of Astwick, and a farm called Plowman's or Plummer's Furze. Evenley, properly so called, contains about 1700 acres, including about 260 acres of old inclosure. The remainder was inclosed by act of parliament in 19 Geo. 3 (1779). About 900 acres belong to the hon. Philip Sydney Pierrepont, lord of the manor; about 445 acres to the vicar in right of his church, and as lessee of Magdalen college, Oxford; and nearly 100 acres each to that college and to Mr. William Jessop. The river Ouse divides the parish and its hamlets from Hinton on the north, Brackley on the north-east, and Turweston and Westbury in Buckinghamshire on the east; its other boundaries are formed by Mixbury in Oxfordshire on the south-east, Cottesford in the same county on the south, Tusmore in the same county on the south-west, and Croughton on the west. Near the mill ford, at the three shire pit, is the point of junction of the parishes of Turweston, Evenley, and Mixbury, which, consequently, connects three counties, Buckingham, Northampton, and Oxford; three dioceses, Lincoln, Peterborough, and Oxford; and three circuits, Norfolk, Midland, and Oxford. The soil is light loam on thin limestone generally throughout the lordship, which is nearly all arable, except the meadow land near the Ouse.

Manorial History. Wodhull Fee.* Three portions of "Evelai" were held by Otbert under Walter Flandrensis at the domesday survey. The first consisted of four hides. The arable land was ten caracates; of which four were in demesne with one servant; and eleven villeins and five bordars had four more; leaving two waste or unaccounted for. There were two mills, worth 20s. yearly; and five acres of meadow. The whole had been rated at 40s. yearly, but was then doubled in value. The second portion consisted of two hides. The arable land was five caracates; four of which were in the occupation of ten villeins and five bordars, and the other was waste or unaccounted for. The whole had been valued at 30s. yearly, but was then rated at 40s. yearly. The third portion, being described as belonging to "Evelai," may be referred to the hamlet of Astwick. It consisted of a hide and a half, and the fifth part of half a hide. The arable land was four caracates; of which one and a half was in demesne with one servant; and five villeins and three bordars had one and a half; leaving one waste or unaccounted for. There was a mill worth 2s. yearly. The whole had been rated at 20s. yearly, but was then doubled in value.[a]

In the hydarium of Hen. 2 Alons de Merke was certified to hold two hides wanting one virgate in "Evenle,"[b] which could only have been a part of the Wodhull fee; for in 19 Hen. 3 (1235), on the scutage levied for the marriage of the king's sister, "Evenle" was returned at two fees and a half, and "Estwick" and "Evenle" associated with other places at two fees, of the fee of Wahull or Wodhull;[c] and in the book of knights' fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295) John de Wahull answered for two fees and a half at Evenle.[d]

Manor. In 16 Hen. 3 (1232) Ralph de Evenle levied a fine of the third of six virgates of land in "Evenle," and a messuage, with lands, and sixty acres of wood, in Horton, to John de Sherington and Joan his wife, who in return remised to him the third of a carucate of land and messuage in the former place;[e] and in the Testa de Nevill, about 27 Hen. 3 (1242), he was certified to hold three parts of a fee in "Evenle and Estwick," and Amphelis Foliot a fee and a half in "Evenle" of the fees of Saher de Wahull.[f]

In 31 Hen. 3 (1246) Peter Foliot claimed against Geoffrey prior of the hospital of St. John of Brackley the service of eleven virgates and a half in "Evenle," and payment of 15d. a virgate whenever a scutage of 40s. a fee was paid; and the prior acknowledged the service for seven virgates and a half.[g]

In 32 Edw. 1 (1304) John de Tingewick died seised of lands in Evenle,[h] held of Thomas de Wahull by service of half a fee;[i] and in 35 Edw. 1 (1307) a writ issued to the sheriff to summon James Russell and Joan his wife to show their right in the king's bench to a moiety of the manor of "Evenley," which John de London granted in that court by fine to John de Tingewick and Roesia his wife and William their son, when Joan claimed it as her dower of the inheritance of the said John de London.[k]

In 9 Edw. 2 (1315) William de Tingewick was lord of Evenle and Astwick;[l] and the following year died seised (int. al.) of the manor of "Evenley," with capital messuage, profit of court, &c. held of the barony of Wodhull, leaving John de Tingewick, brother and heir, aged thirty years.[m]

William de Weston died in 4 Edw. 3 (1330) seised of a third of the manor of "Evenley," held of John de Wodhull by knight's service and payment of a fee farm rent of 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.) to John de Tingewick, leaving Robert de Weston, his brother and heir, aged forty years.[n]

In 5 Edw. 3 (1330) William de Apeltre gave 100s. for licence to alien in mortmain a messuage with lands and rents in Evenle to a certain chaplain in the church of St. Gregory there;[o] and it was found by inquisition ad q. d. that it would not be to the damage of the king, because there would remain to the said William, beyond the donation, the manor of Evenley, held of John de Wodhull.[p] On collecting the aid for making the king's son a knight, William de Apeltree, John de Foxle, Ralph Tebaud, William de Morton, and John de Wardyngton answered for two parts of a fee in Evenle of the fee of Wodhull;[q] and on the death of John lord Wodhull in 41 Edw. 3 (1367) Richard Tibault or Tebaud was found to hold the fourth of a fee, and

'From this John de Hoggeshawe his possessions John de Hoggeshaw a fee and a half in Evenle and Astwick.[r] for in the ninth year of Henry IV. Margaret, the wife of John 'in Evenle appear to have descended to his family;[s] paid a fine of half a mark for a writ of entry.'

'Hoggeshawe of Evenle settled (int. al.) the manor of "Evenle alias Sir Thomas Chetwode of Warkworth in Jan. 19 Hen. 6 (1440-1) Evenley," on the heir male of his body in fee tail, remainder, if he should have more daughters than Joan then wife of Elias Langeworth, on the said Joan and her sisters in fee tail.[t]

In 7 Jac. (1609) the site of the manor called Cherbury in Evenley, with Curlake mill, and lands and tenements in Evenley, parcel of the possessions of John Arden, lately attainted of high treason, were granted to George Salter and John Williams in fee.[u]

STOTESBURY MANOR. The family of Stotesbury or Stutesbury were seated here and at SULGRAVE as early as the reign of Edward IIIrd. Thomas Stotesbury of Evenle, brother of the late John Stotesbury of Sulgrave, occurs in 12 Hen. 4 (1411);[x] but there is an hiatus which I am unable to supply between him and William Stutesbury, gent. who died 16 Hen. 8 (1524), seised of a manor called "Gawlton's manor," and another called "Stotesbury's manor," in Evenley, both held of Nicholas Wodhull, esq. leaving Thomas Stutesbury his son and heir of full age.[y] Edward Stutesbury, gent. probably his brother, died 5 Edw. 6 (1551), and William Stutesbury was son and heir, aged thirty-four years;[z] on whose decease, in 3 and 4 Phil. and Mary (1556-7), Michael Stutesbury, gent. son and heir, was aged eighteen years.[a] 'From this family the Lordship of Evenle passed to

'William Lisle, esq.'[b] who devised it to his nephew William, afterwards colonel Lisle, from whom it descended to his grandson Fermor Lisle, esq. whose legal successor, Tobias Lisle, esq. sold it to William Price, esq. at whose decease it was purchased by Francis Basset, esq.

Francis Basset, of Tehidy park in Cornwall, esq. by his will dated 28 May 1762, limited (int. al.) his manor of "Imley, otherwise Evenly," in strict settlement; but by act of parliament 22 Geo. 3 (1782), another manor being settled in lieu thereof, it was discharged from the limitations, and vested in his eldest son, sir Francis Basset, bart. the present lord de Dunstanville and Basset, who, in 1786, sold it to

George Rush, esq. afterwards of FARTHINGHO; of whom it was purchased in 1790 by Herbert Gwynne Browne, esq. who died in 1803. His daughter and heiress, Georgina, in April 1807 married Pryce Edwards, esq. of Talgarth in North Wales, who dying in , she married in Aug. 1810 the hon. Philip Sydney Pierrepont, 5th son of Charles, 1st earl Manvers.

MORETON FEE.* HONOR OF LEICESTER.† Lefstan held freely an estate in "Avelai" in the Saxon era valued at 60s. yearly, which at the domesday survey was reduced to half the former value, and held by William, under the earl of Moreton. It consisted of one hide. The arable land was two carucates and a half; of which one carucate was in demesne; one villein and seven bordars had half a carucate; and the remaining carucate was waste or unaccounted for. There was a mill worth 12d. yearly.[c]

AUBREY FEE.‡ Of the lands of earl Aubrey in the king's hands at the domesday survey, Gilbert held three virgates in "Evelai." The arable land was two carucates. One bordar with one servant was there. It had been valued at 10s. yearly, but was then reduced to 4s. yearly.[d] In the hydarium of Hen. 2 there was certified to be one hide and one small virgate in "Evenle" of the fee of the earl of Leicester.[e]

In 7 Joh. (1205) Henry chaplain of "Evenle" paid one mark for a writ to the sheriff that he might have justice against Matilda de Cumbe, and that she might be compelled to keep her agreement with him concerning thirteen virgates and sixty acres of land in demesne at "Evenle" according to the tenor of her charter.[f] In 12 Joh. (1210) the king, in a general charter of confirmation to Robert de Braybrook, included the grant by Matilda de Cumbe of all her demesne, with capital messuage, meadow, and pasture, and three virgates and a half in villeinage in "Evenle," and half a mark rent yearly from the brothers of the hospital of Brackley for land in "Estwick."[g] In 5 Hen. 3 (1221) Henry de Braybrook levied a fine of a carucate of land in Evenle and Estwick to Matilda de Cumbe, remainder to her son, Richard de Farthingstone,[h] who, in the Testa de Nevill about 19 Hen. 3 (1235), was found to hold one small fee in Evenle and Purston of the fees of Richard de Keynes,[i] the intermediate lord; and in 25 Edw. 1 (1297) Evenley was returned amongst the fees held by Thomas Lewknor—representative of Keynes—of the seignory of the earl of Lancaster and Leicester.[k]

DELAPRE ABBEY LANDS. In 50 Hen. 3 (1265) Agatha, abbess of Mary de Pratis or Delapre, impleaded Richard de Foxley and Margery his wife for £9. 13s. arrears of rent of 60s. yearly for five virgates formerly belonging to Henry de Braybrook in Evenle and Astwick, which rent they agreed by fine to pay in future;[l] and on the death of Katherine Wotton, abbess of Delapre, in 9 Hen. 6 (1431) a toft and five virgates of land in Evenle and Astwick are enumerated amongst the temporalities of the abbey.[m]

THE MANOR-HOUSE is a modern mansion, erected by Francis Basset, esq. soon after his purchase of the estate.

THE VILLAGE stands on elevated ground about a mile south-west of Brackley, and at a short distance from the turnpike road to Bicester. Bridges says 'the village with the adjoining hamlet contains about seventy families, 'of which six are in Astwick.'[n] By the census of 1801 Evenley contained 83 houses and 369 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 88 houses and 397 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 92 houses and 468 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £109. 18s. 10d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £4091. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £462. 0s. 10d. at 5s. in the £. 'The wake is kept on the Sunday before Whitsunday.'

THE ADVOWSON or church of "Evenleia," with its appendages, was confirmed (int. al.) to the priory of St. Mary of Huntingdon by pope Eugenius IIIrd in 1147 (12 Steph.),[o] but the donor is not stated. Richard Wenman, of Whitney in Oxfordshire, merchant of the staple at Calais (ancestor of the viscounts Wenman), by will dated 20 Oct. 1533 (26 Hen. 8), bequeathed the residue of his term in a lease of the parsonage of Evenley from the prior and convent of Huntingdon to the vicar and churchwardens of Whitney for the time being, on condition of their paying thereout £12. 8s. 2d. yearly in alms to poor men of sixty years of age, of good name and fame, and clean of body, who should go to the church of Whitney every day in the year at seven o'clock in the morning to pray for him, and keep his yearly obit and anniversary, and say a dirge and mass of requiem.[p] After the dissolution the impropriate rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Evenley, with glebe and tithes of Astwick and Evenley, were granted (int. al.) in exchange for other estates, in Apr. 33 Hen. 8 (1542), to sir Thomas Pope,[q] who, in May following, had licence to alienate them to Edmund Powell of Sanford in Oxfordshire;[r] and he, in July following, to Owen Oglethorp,[s] the president of Magdalen college, Oxford; by whom, probably on his resignation of the college, they were released in 2 & 3 Phil. & Mary (1555) to the president and fellows of the college and their successors.[t]

The Rectory was valued in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3),[u] and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[x] at 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.) per ann. The tithes of the lands belonging to the fee of earl Aubrey passed to the abbey of Leicester, under the grant of all the churches with their pertinencies of the soke of Halse;[y] and the abbot and convent "demised them in 1323 to William Marton vicar of Brackley for 13s. 4d. per ann.; and again, in 1348, to William Swan, another vicar. They were afterwards let to the farmer of the abbot's lands at Brackley, one of whom was Stephen Chamberleyn, for the same sum."[z] The family of Levinz, who entered their pedigree in the visitations of 1648 and 1682, were lessees of the impropriate rectory under Magdalen college for several generations. The present lessee is the vicar. The impropriate rectory now consists of about 356 acres of land, and a rate tithe of £2. 16s. per ann. allotted by the commissioners of inclosure, and about 160 acres of old inclosure at Astwick; all of which is now held by the vicar as lessee under the college.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Brackley. It was endowed by Hugh (Wells) bishop of Lincoln[a] between 1209 and 1234. In the copy of taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) in the British Museum it is rated at 3½ marks (£2. 6s. 8d.) per ann.;[b] but is omitted in the printed copy. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it is valued at £7 per ann. without any deductions.[c] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified the vicarage of Evenley cum membris to be in the patronage of St. John's college, Oxford, that it was worth £20 yearly, and that John Heyfield, the incumbent, was resident.[d] It is a discharged living, returned under the act 5 Anne (1707) to be of the clear yearly value of £26. 1s. and has been twice augmented by queen Anne's bounty, in 1724 with £200 to meet a donation from the rev. Drs. Godolphin and Butler, and in 1772 with another £200 to meet another donation, with which sums 32 acres of land in Green's Norton have been purchased. The commissioners of inclosure allotted 87 a. 36 p. and a rate tithe of 17s. 2d. pen ann. in lieu of glebe and vicarial tithes of both old and new inclosures except a few cottages; and except the tithes of the ancient lands in Astwick and Plowman's Furze; in addition to which the vicar, as already stated, holds the impropriate rectory under the college.

Roger Morley. He was rector of Hinton about the same period, and of Great Houghton from 1485 to 1494.

Mast. Thomas Parmentyr, 1 Dec. 1485. He was vicar of St. Giles's, Northampton, from 1478 to 1512, rector of Sywell in 1487, and master of St. John's hospital, Northampton, from 1498 to 1514.

Sir Thomas Strynger, by William Spencer and Roger Morley, lessees of the parsonage of Evenley, 28 Dec. 1487.

Sir Henry Glyntham, chaplain, by Margaret Spencer, widow of William Spencer, and others, 5 June 1506.

Sir John Bruar, chaplain, by Richard Wayneman, by grant from the prior and convent of Huntingdon, 7 Oct. 1524.

Sir William Rowell, priest, by Thomas Wayneman, heir of Richard, 13 Sept. 1538. On his resignation,

Thomas Rawson, already noticed under Brackley, was presented by the president and scholars of Magdalen college, Oxford, and instituted 27 Aug. 1560; on whose decease

Francis Willis was inst. 26 Sept. 1569, on the presentation of the president and scholars of St. John's college, Oxford. He became president of that college in 1577, but had previously resigned this vicarage, when William Thornton was presented by the president and fellows of the college, and inst. 5 Nov. 1572.

Edmund Taylor was inst. 4 Feb. 1578-9, on the presentation of the same patrons.

Henry Walden,[e] already noticed under Brackley. On his resignation,

Rowland Searchfield, D.D. was presented by the same patrons, and inst. 19 Jan. 1600-1.[e] He was successively rector of Burthorp in Glocestershire and vicar of Charlbury in Oxfordshire, and was consecrated bishop of Bristol in 1619, where he died in 1622. His cession introduced

John Rainsby, who was succeeded by John Soane, or Sone, B.D. presented by the same patrons, and inst. 20 May 1606. He resigned, and Edmund Jackson, A.M. was inst. 27 Aug. 1612, on the presentation of the same patrons. His successor,

Nicholas Cliff, B.D. was presented by the same patrons, and inst. 23 Mar. 1614-15. He obtained the rectory of Crick in 1626, but held this vicarage only a few months,

Richard Holbrook, A.M. being inst. 10 Aug. 1615, on the presentation of the same patrons. He held the vicarage of St. Giles in Northampton with this living from 1620 till his death, when John Hufield, or Heufield, A.M. was presented by the same patrons, and inst. 8 May 1639.

Thomas Yeomans was inst. 20 Sept. 1680, on the presentation of the president and scholars of Magdalen college, Oxford, in whose patronage it has since uninterruptedly continued. He was perpetual curate of Radston from 1691; and on his decease

Moses Loveday was inst. 2 Sept. 1715. He was buried here 6 June 1723,[f] and

William Hewett, B.D. was inst. 31 Oct. following, on whose decease

George Knibb, D.D. was inst. 28 Aug. 1732. He resigned, and

Robert Paige, D.D. was inst. 2 July 1736. On his resignation,

Thomas West, D.D. was inst. 11 Nov. 1745; on whose cession

John Young, B.D. vicar of Cransley, was inst. 3 Feb. 1761. His death introduced

John Finden, B.D. who was inst. 3 Dec. 1777. He died 8 June 1809,[g] and Gainsford Smith, B.D. was instituted 2 Nov. following.

THE REGISTERS do not commence till 1699; the early ones having been destroyed by a fire at the vicarage house.

THE CHURCH, dedicated to St. Gregory,[h] or according to some authorities to St. George,[i] stands at the west end of the village, and consists of a low tower, containing three bells, nave, south aisle, north and south transept, south porch, and chancel. The south transept and chancel have lancet windows. The tower is 13 ft. 2 in. long by 11 ft. wide; the nave 42 ft. 6 in. by 17 ft. 4 in.; the south aisle 26 ft. 5 in. by 9 ft. 4 in.; the north transept 12 ft. 11 in. by 15 ft. 9 in.; the south transept 14 ft. by 18 ft. 10 in.; and the chancel 28 ft. 9 in. by 17 ft. 4 in. The nave is divided from the aisle by three wide arches on low octangular pillars with capitals of plain mouldings. To one of the pillars is attached a plain circular font. Each transept opens into the nave by a rude pointed arch, and the south one into the aisle by an arch, one side of which springs from a bracket, with a human figure in a grotesque attitude. In the south wall of the chancel is a trefoil headed piscina.

'Within this church of Evenle[k] was a chauntry founded in 1333,[l] to the honour of the virgin 'Mary and All Saints, by William de Apeltre, and endowed with houses, lands, and rents in the townships of 'Evenle and Astwick.' This doubtless has reference to the grant from Apeltre introduced in the manorial history. No mention is made of a chantry here in the roll of 38 Hen. 8 (1546) or in the survey of 2 Edw. 6 (1548).

BENEFACTIONS. None.

Roman Coins. In 1826, during the irrigation of a field in this lordship called Addington's meadow, near the river Ouse in the direction of Brackley, were found several hundred Roman coins of Nero, Domitian, Alexander, Probus, Carausius, Constantine, and other emperors.

Sir Creswell Levinz, second son of William Levinz, esq. lessee of the impropriate rectory, was born here in 1627. Adopting the legal profession, he was appointed attorney general in Oct. 1679; and one of the justices of the common pleas in Feb. 1680-1, but the appointment was revoked in Feb. 1685-6, though he survived till Jan. 1700-1. In 1702 was published "Reports of cases in the court of King's Bench and other courts, from 12 Charles II. to 8 William III. in French, by sir Creswell Levinz, fol. 3 parts. The same year appeared Levinz's Entries of declarations, pleadings, issues, verdicts, judgments, &c. referring to the cases in his reports. Also some Entries from 10 to 12 William III. Latin, fol. 1702. A second edition of the Reports appeared in 2 vols. fol. 1722; and a third edition, translated by Mr. Sergeant Salkeld, and the pleadings translated by T. Vickers, esq. in 3 vols. 8vo. 1802. Prefixed to the "Reports" in 1702 is a portrait of sir Creswell, engraved by White from a painting by Kneller.

Baptista Levinz, D.D. youngest brother of sir Creswell, was also a native of this village. He entered Magdalen hall, Oxford, in 1660, was elected a probationer fellow of Magdalen college in 1664, and moral philosophy reader of the university in 1677. He obtained the prebend of Haselbeare in Wells about the same time; the rectory of Christian Malford in 1682; and was consecrated bishop of Sodor and Man in March 1684-5. In 1691 he became a prebend of Winchester, where he died 31 Jan. 1692-3, and was buried in the cathedral.

ASTWICK and PLOWMAN'S FURZE

Comprise the south and west sides of the parish of Evenley, adjoining Cottesford, Tusmore, and Croughton. They are both old inclosures; the former containing 670 acres, the latter about 500 acres, and the whole belonging to the president and fellows of Magdalen college, Oxford.

Manorial History. Astwick is not noticed in domesday, and its early history is involved in much obscurity. Some incidental references to it will be found under the manorial history of Evenley.

In 11 Edw. 4 (1471) a fine was levied by William Catesby, esq. of a third part of the manor of "Evenle," with pertinencies in Astwick and Apeltre to Thomas Barker, gent. in fee;[a] and in 17 Hen. 7 (1501) by William Marshall of a moiety of the manor to Thomas Barker, gent.—probably son of the above—in fee.[b] Thomas Barker, gent. died 14 Hen. 8 (1522) seised (int. al.) of this moiety of the manor, held of Nicholas Wodhull, esq. and Fulk Barker, gent. was son and heir, aged twenty-nine years.[c] This I apprehend must have been the estate which Fulk Barker, of Steane, gent. sold in Dec. 20 Hen. 8 (1528) under the description of the "manor of Astwike," with pertinencies in Astwick and Evenley, to Robert Morwent and John Oglethorp;[d] who, in Feb. 4 & 5 Phil. & Mary (1557-8), conveyed it to Arthur Cole, president, and the fellows of Magdalen college, Oxford.[d]

Brackley Hospital Lands. Gonfrid de Louhont, by deed without date, gave to Brackley hospital all his demesne with his capital court in "Estwic;"[e] and other grants were made by the families of Foliot, Bray, Gatesden, and Lincot. In 10 Hen. 5 (1422) John Brookhampton, master of the hospital, demised to Robert Brys the grange of Astwick, with certain closes and lands at Astwick and Evenley, and three tenements in Astwick called Ward's place, Alyn's place, and Hamond's place;[e] all which in the following reign passed with the other possessions of Brackley hospital to Magdalen college, Oxford. In the time of Bridges Mr. Weston and Mr. Murray were lessees of the whole of Astwick and Plowman's Furze, except the impropriate estate;[f] but the leases have been subsequently suffered to expire.

The village of Astwick consists of a few scattered houses adjoining the turnpike road through Aynho to Buckingham. Bridges says it 'appears to have been formerly a large town, as may be seen from the ruins which are 'called the Old Town. There was formerly a capital Manor-house, the site of which is now overgrown; but there 'is still remaining a moat full of water, one hundred and fifty paces long, and ten yards wide.'[f] The Barley Mow, a well-known inn, at the intersection of two turnpike roads, is in this hamlet. Plowman's Furze is a single farm house.

FARTHINGHO,

In domesday "Ferningho," and in early records Faringho and Farnyngho, may possibly derive its name from a combination of the saxon reapn, a well known indigenous plant, and hoh, a hill. The lordship is all old inclosure, and contains about 1400 acres; of which about 1180 acres belong to George Rush, esq. lord of the manor; about 100 acres to the rector in right of his church; and about 100 acres to Mr. William Clark of Barton near Buckingham. It is bounded on the north by Marston St. Lawrence and by Gretworth in Wardon hundred; on the east by Steane and Halse in Brackley; on the south by Newbottle and Astrop; and on the west by Purston, Middleton Cheney, and Thenford. The soil is principally a strong loam and clay; but the south side of the lordship is red sandy land. About three-fourths of the lordship is in permanent pasture. Morton says, "some Acres of the sandy Ground at Farninghoe are sow'd with Carrot-Seed. They do not leave the Ground so rich as do the Turnips; but after either of them, it produces a good Crop of Grain. For Carrots they do not plow the ground, as they do for Turnips, but dig it. Both their Carrots and Turnips are of Note for Ten Miles round."[a]

The Ouse, one of the principal rivers of the kingdom, rises at Ouse-well, a spring in Ouse-well, or, as it is corruptly pronounced Ouzel close, adjoining the turnpike-road, at the foot of the hill descending eastward from the village; and after dividing this lordship from Steane for a short distance, crosses Steane park, and directs its course to Brackley.

"From Brackley breaking forth, through soiles most heavenly sweet,
By Buckingham makes on, and crossing Watling street
Shee with her lesser Ouze at Newport next doth twin,
Which from proud Chiltern neare, comes eas'ly ambling in."[b]

Thence pursuing its meandring way by Bedford, where it becomes navigable,

"———— slow winding through a level plain
Of spacious meads, with cattle sprinkled o'er," it passes Huntingdon and St. Ive's, and receiving the classic stream of the Grant or Cam above Ely, and of the Lesser Ouse below it, thus augmented discharges its waters into the estuary south-east of Lynn Regis in Norfolk.

In Red-well-head-close is a strong chalybeate spring.

Manorial History. Aubrey Fee.* At the domesday survey "Ferningho" was included in the possessions which had belonged to earl Aubrey (Albericus), but then in the hands of the king. It contained four hides. The arable land was ten carucates; of which three were in demesne, with ten servants; and fifteen villeins with a priest and eight bordars had five carucates; leaving two waste or unaccounted for. There were twenty acres of meadow. The whole was valued when received by the earl at £10 yearly, but was now reduced to £7.[c]

Mellent or Leicester Fee. Honor of Winchester.* In the hydarium of Hen. 2 "Faringho" was returned at four hides of the fees of Leicester;[d] and at the scutage on the marriage of the king's daughter with the emperor of the Romans in 19 Hen. 3 (1235), the earl of Winchester accounted (int. al.) for two marks for one fee in "Faringho."[e] In plea to a quo warranto in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), Maud, widow of Robert de Holland, one of the coheiresses of Quincy, substantiated her claim to the view of frank pledge, twice a year, in "Farnyngho," Woodford, Maidford, Astrop, Farndon, and Adston, members of her manor of Hawes or Halse, and parcel of the honor of Winchester, in any one of them indifferently at her pleasure.[f]

By the grant of the Lisle fees to the duke of Lancaster, as hereafter mentioned, Farthingho became parcel of the duchy of Lancaster.

Manor. The family of Fitz Gerold acquired an early interest here; but whether it was merely an intermediate seignory between the paramount and mesne lord, or whether they reserved a portion in demesne, can only be conjectured from circumstantial evidence. In the Testa de Neville about 27 Hen. 3 (1242) Ralph de St. Amand, William Abbe, and the monks of St. Dionysius, were certified to hold one fee in "Faringho," of the fees of Roger de Quincy (earl of Winchester) of the honor of Leicester;[g] but in the inquisition post mortem of the earl in 54 Hen. 3 (1269) this fee in "Farningho" was returned to be in the tenure of Warine Fitz-Gerold.[h] Though Warine had been dead many years at the date of this inquisition, it may be considered as a decisive proof of his having held the fee; for many similar instances might be adduced of continuing unchanged the name of a former feudatory long subsequent to his decease, instead of substituting the living one, who, in this case, was his great-grand-daughter and heir general, Isabella countess of Albemarle and Devon; and in the book of knights' fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295) Ralph St. Amand, William Abbe, and Peter Borle, are expressly stated to hold one fee in "Farningoe" of the (late) countess of Albemarle, and she of the honor of Winchester.[i] On the demise of the countess without surviving issue, various claimants arose for her titles and immense possessions. The contest for the patrimony of Fortibus earl of Albemarle will be fully detailed under Radston. The countess was entitled paternally to the earldom of Devon; and maternally, through her grandmother Margaret, was the representative of the feudal or land baronies of Fitz-Gerold, Courci, and a moiety of Meschines. Hugh de Courtenay and Warine de Lisle severally claimed to be her heir; and in 3 Edw. 2 (1310) there was a plea between Hugh de Courtney, son of Hugh, and Robert de Lisle, son of Warine, for certain manors in the counties of Oxford, Hertford, and York, of her inheritance, when the former exhibited his descent from William de Ripariis or Vernon, and the latter from Warine Fitz-Gerold, father of Warine and Henry,[k] as incorporated in the annexed pedigree. The ulterior legal proceedings in this suit are not known, but the earldom of Devon was eventually confirmed to Courtney, and the Fitz-Gerold and other feudal baronies and estates of that line to Lisle. Accordingly, on the inquisition post mortem of Alan lord Zouch in 7 Edw. 2 (1314), amongst the fees of the honor of Winchester, this Robert de Lisle was found to hold one fee in "Faringho."[l]

His grandson, Robert lord Lisle, son of John, granted to the king, in 42 Edw. 3 (1369), his entire honor or barony with its feudal services, consisting of a court held at a tenement of the master and brethren of St. Thomas of Acon in Walbrook, London, for divers of his tenants and fees in different counties in England; a second court held at Arkesdon in Essex; and a third court held every three weeks in a place of land (placea terræ) at "Farnyngho," for divers tenants and fees in a certain roll annexed to the grant; together with all his fees, amounting to no less than eighty-six, as specifically enumerated, in the counties of Kent, Cambridge, Essex, Hertford, Oxford, Berks, Wilts, Norfolk, Northampton, Sussex, Suffolk, and Bedford.[m] The year following the king appointed William de Halden, recorder of London, steward of the above courts and fees;[n] and in 46 Edw. 3 (1373) granted (int. al.) all the fees which he had from Robert de Lisle, to his son, John of Gaunt, king of Castile and Leon, and duke of Lancaster, in fee tail.[o] The Northamptonshire portion embraced the fees in Brixworth, Orlingbury, Holcot, Cranford, Slipton, Great Billing, Blakesley, Adston, and Boddington, which occur in the Testa de Nevill as the barony of Margaret de Ripariis,[p] daughter and heiress of Warine Fitz-Gerold, and most or all of which I apprehend were parcel of the fee of Courci or Meschines.

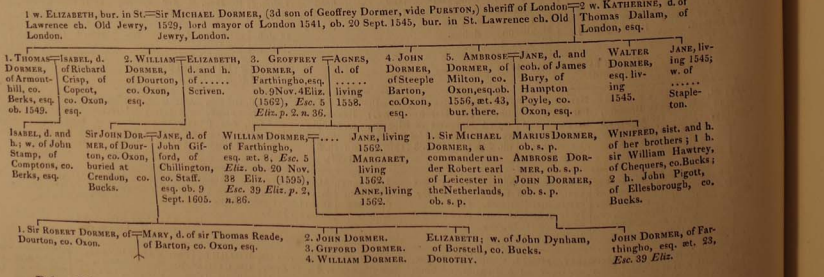
From Ralph St. Amand, already noticed, descended Almaric St. Amand, who, in 3 Edw. 1 (1275), had a licence from the king, at the instance of queen Isabel, to enfeoff in trust and settle on himself and Mary his wife the hundred of Bloxham, and six carucates of land in Bloxham, Adderbury, and Alcrynton in Oxfordshire, and in "Farthyngho."[q] In 11 Edw. 2 (1318) John St. Amand conveyed to sir William de Bereford his manor of "Farnyngho," defeasible by payment of £100 to sir William at his manor of Stean on the feast of the Trinity ensuing, and covenanted, in case of sale, that sir William should have pre-emption.[r]

Sir William de Bereford died in 20 Edw. 2 (1326), seised (int. al.) of a carucate of land, rents, and services of tenants, at "Faringho," held of sir Robert de Lisle by service of the seventh part of a fee, leaving Edmund de Bereford his son and heir;[s] who, in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), impleaded John St. Amand for a third of the manor of "Faryngho," which Richard de Bajocis and Katherine his wife claimed as her dower.[t] In 9 Edw. 3 (1335) he had a grant of free warren (int. al.) in Faringho;[u] and in 28 Edw. 3 (1354) died in possession of the manor of "Faringho," held of John de Lisle of Rubeo Monte.[x] For the subsequent descent of this manor till it vested in Thomas St. Clere, esq. in 1 Hen. 6 (1423), the reader is referred to Steane.

In 7 Hen. 6 (1429) John Barton Seymour and others levied a fine of the manor of "Farningho" to John Abbot, clerk;[z] and in 24 Hen. 6 (1445) a fine was levied of the manors of Heyford and "Farningho" to John Morton, esq.;[z] who was evidently a trustee only, for

Sir Walter Mauntell of Heyford, who married Elizabeth, daughter and coheiress of the above John Abbot, esq.* with whom he doubtless obtained this manor, as their son, John Mauntell, esq. died seised of it in 18 Hen. 7 (1503).[a] The estates of John Mauntell, esq. grandson of John, were confiscated for murder in June, 33 Hen. 8 (1541), as stated in the account of this family under Heyford; and in Jan. 38 Hen. 8 (1546-7) his manor of Farthingho was granted to

Geoffrey Dormer, esq.[b] who had previously purchased the Leicester abbey manor here. He died in 4 Eliz. (1562) seised of both manors, advowson, and capital messuage of the late chantry, leaving William Dormer, his son and heir, a minor,[c] who alienated lands to the amount of £1000,[d] and whose son, John Dormer, esq. sold the manors, advowson, and remainder of the estate, probably to



Francis Cheyne, esq. who, in 41 Eliz. (1599), had licence to alienate,[e] and levied a fine of them to

LEICESTER ABBEY MANOR. Robert Bossu earl of Leicester being desirous of endowing his abbey of Leicester on its foundation with the neighbouring manor of Knighton, gave the bishop of Lincoln, to whom it belonged, certain lands in "Faringo" and Siresham, called Westcote, in exchange; but his successors becoming dissatisfied with the arrangement, Robert Fitz Parnell earl of Leicester, grandson of Bossu, to establish perpetual peace between the bishop and the monks, resumed these lands and gave them to the abbey, assigning to the see of Lincoln, in compensation, lands at Asfordby and Segrave [h] in Leicestershire. Margaret de Quincy, youngest daughter of Fitz Parnell, and wife of Saher de Quincy, granted to the men and tenants of the abbey in Farthingho, Siresham, &c. acquittance from all secular service, exactions, and demands, suit of court, view of frank pledge and all foreign service.[i] In the book of knights fees, 24 Edw. 1 (1295), the abbot of Leicester was certified to hold the fourth of a fee in "Farningoe" of Elen Zouch;[k] and in 29 Edw. 1 (1300) he had a grant of free warren (int. al.) in Farthingho and Siresham.[l] In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) the abbot was summoned by writ of quo warranto to show why he claimed in Farthingho and Siresham, Brackley and Halse, view of frank pledge, with correction of assize of bread and beer, wayf, acquittance from geld, danegeld, aid, and all other terrene services, with soc and sac, tol and theam, and infangtheof, and exemption from passage and pontage, and toll and stallage, for himself and his tenants throughout the kingdom, and free warren in Farthingho and Siresham. He pleaded prescription for view of frank pledge and wayf; the charter of king Henry, confirmed by the father of the present king, for the acquittances and privileges of infangtheof, soc and sac, &c.; and the charter of the king's grandfather for free warren. The jury presented that he amerced offenders against the assize 2s. instead of the legal punishment of pillory and tumbril; that no case of infangtheof had occurred, and the gallows which had been erected at Farthingho was prostrated; and that, since the grant of free warren, no warrener had been appointed; the view of frank pledge, infangtheof, and warren were therefore seized into the king's hands, but restored again on petition for a fine of 20s. The king's attorney contended that no ecclesiastical person could plead prescription for wayf, and the jury presenting that the present abbot had taken a foal worth 40d. in the name of a wayf, and made the accustomed proclamations, but that they knew of no similar instance in the time of his predecessors, judgment was postponed. All the other claims were allowed;[m] "and the inhabitants of Farningho were enjoined to make a perambulation at least in every six years, to see that the boundaries of the abbot's land were maintained, for which they were to be allowed 12d. to buy drink (ad emend' poculenta), drinkings being always found absolutely necessary in all perambulations."[n] The view of frank pledge was held at either of the four places at the option of the abbot.[o] From "Charyte's Rentale," an interesting and elaborate account of the state of the abbey possessions in 1477, several minute particulars may be gleaned. The customs of the abbot's tenants in "Faringo" were, that the tenant of each virgate should mow all the abbot's meadow with his neighbours or fellow tenants, make the hay, and carry it to his croft, for which the abbot should give him one loaf, and to all the neighbours one sheep; that he should work in autumn at his own croft for two days, and the third day at the abbot's croft, and carry for one day at his croft, and at the feast of St. Matthew plough one acre and sow it with the abbot's seed, which he should winnow and cleanse, and plough one day, and weed one day, at his croft, and if the abbot required the tenants to work from the feast of Pentecost to St. Michael, every virgate should find one man for a whole week except Sunday, and then they should be quit of 20d. at St. Michael; and the tenants should give aid, pannage for their swine whether in the wood or the stye, "marchetam," or marriage fine, for their sons and daughters, frank pledge, and heriot.[p] The abbot had two natives belonging to "Faryngo," William Russell staying at Abthorp and John Lenys at Tame.[q] The total receipt of the abbey from "Faryngo" in 1477 was £12 8s. 10d.[r] In one of the abbey cartularies, the terrier of their lands here occupies ten pages,[s] and in the minister's accompts at the dissolution the temporalities of Leicester abbey in "Farnynhoo et al." probably including Siresham, were thus valued, viz. rents £6. 10s. 7½d. divers farms £11. 11s. 2d. and common fines 14s. 8d. total £18. 16s. 5½d.[t]

In 34 Hen. 8 (1542) the manor and advowson of Farthingho, with a yearly pension of 4 marks (£2. 13s. 4d.) out of the rectory, parcel of the late abbey of Leicester, were granted (int. al.) to Richard Andrews and Leonard Chamberlain, esquires;[u] the latter of whom had a license to alienate the same year,[x] and levied a fine of them to Geoffrey Dormer, esq.[y] who soon after purchased the other manor here.

The Manor House, once the residence of the Egertons, has been partially taken down, and is in a very dilapidated state. Farthingho-Lodge, the seat of George Rush, esq. was erected by his father.

The Village crowns a hill on the turnpike-road from Banbury to Brackley, and about four miles from the latter place. In the time of Bridges it consisted of 'about fifty houses, and two hundred inhabitants.'[z] By the census of 1801 it contained 62 houses and 348 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 71 houses and 360 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 82 houses and 476 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £190. 3s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2709. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £690. 13s. 6d. at 6s. in the £. The wake follows St. Michael old style.

The Advowson was included in the gift from Robert earl of Mellent, the domesday lord, of all the churches of the soke or jurisdiction of "Halso," to the dean and secular canons of the collegiate church of St. Mary de Castro at Leicester.[a] His son, Robert Bossu earl of Leicester, transferred this establishment with its possessions to the abbey of Leicester;[b] and the church of "Farningehou" is specifically named in the confirmation charter of king Henry 2nd,[c] between 1154 and 1167. Its descent subsequent to the dissolution has accompanied the abbey manor to George Rush, esq. the present patron.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Brackley. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[d] and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[e] it was rated at 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.) per ann. deducting an annual pension of 4 marks (£2. 13s. 4d.) to the abbey of Leicester; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at £19. 3s. 11d. per ann. deducting the pension to Leicester abbey, and 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton.[f] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage presentative in the patronage of sir John Egerton, bart. and that Mr. Walter Jackman the incumbent supplied the cure, and had "for his salary £100 yearly or thereabout."[g] The rectory now consists of about 100 acres of glebe, and the tithes of nearly the whole parish.

rectory the perpetual curacy of Radston. He married Joyce Blencowe, niece of judge Blencowe, by whom he had eight sons and two daughters.[i] An extended notice of four of the sons, Thomas, Ralph, George, and Philip, who "became eminent in their respective stations," will be found in the "Literary Anecdotes of the Eighteenth Century."[k] The father died in his 55th year, and was buried here 11 Dec. 1725,[i] when the same patron presented his own youngest son,

William Egerton, of Christ ch. coll. Oxf. A.M. who was inst. 15 Apr. 1726. He was buried here 4 Jan. 1770,[i] and

James Stafford, of St. John's coll. Camb. A.M. was inst. 11 May following, on the presentation of sir Thomas Egerton, bart. He was also vicar of Penkridge in Staffordshire, and dying 6 Aug. 1794, Edmund Milward, of Brasen-nose coll. Oxf. was presented by the same patron, then lord Grey de Wilton, and inst. 8 Sept. following.

The Register of baptisms commences in 1674, of burials in 1679, and of marriages in 1754.

The Church, dedicated to St. Michael, stands in the north-east end of the village, and consists of a tower, containing five bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, chapel, and chancel. The tower was repaired in 1654 by sir John Egerton, whose arms are on the south front, impaling Winter. Most of the windows are despoiled of the tracery. The interior has been new paved and pewed, and a gallery extends across the west end. The tower is 15 ft. 10 in. long, by 11 ft. 4 in. wide; the nave and aisles 44 ft. 3 in. long; the north aisle 14 ft. 10 in., the nave 13 ft. 10 in., and the south aisle 14 ft. 2 in. wide; and the chancel 28 ft. 8 in. by 12 ft. 2 in. The font is modern. The nave is divided from each aisle by three large pointed arches, with bold soffit mouldings, on circular pillars, two of which have shallow foliated capitals, and the others plain mouldings. At the east end of the north aisle is a piscina and the entrance to the rood loft. 'The chapel of our Lady,' described by Bridges,[l] has now no communication with the church, and is converted into a school-room.

A Chantry was founded here for a priest to teach and instruct freely the children of the inhabitants; but when, or by whom, is not known. At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) Thomas Arnold was the officiating priest, and the rents and profits £6. 13s. 8d. per ann.[m] In the chantry roll of 38 Hen. 8 (1546) the value of the lands did not appear, but the priest received at the hands of the master and wardens of the mercers of London £6. 16s. 8d. per ann. deducting 3s. 4d. for the farm of the capital mansion;[n] and on the dissolution of chantries 2 Edw. 6 (1548), it was certified that the priest, James Coles, aged 40, who was well learned and taught the children freely, had a yearly pension of £6. 13s. 4d. from the Mercers' company in London, and a further yearly pension from the king of £6. 6s. 8d. as a monk of the late dissolved monastery of Bittlesdon.[n] In 4 Eliz. (1562) Geoffrey Dormer, esq. lord of the manor, died seised of the capital messuage and pertinencies of the late chantry.[o]

Philip Thicknesse, esq. a lively writer and eccentric character, the "seventh son, without a daughter between," of the rev. John Thicknesse, was born here on the 10th of August, and baptised the 5th of September, 1719.[p] After the death of his father he was placed at Aynho school, and subsequently through the influence of Dr. Robert Freind was admitted a gratis (not king's) scholar at Westminster. He was intended for the medical, but early deserted to the military profession, and was engaged in active service from 1735 to 1746. In 1742 he married Maria, the only daughter of Mr. John Lanove of Southampton; who dying early in 1749, he married, secondly, 10 Nov. in the same year, Elizabeth, daughter of James earl of Castlehaven and baron Audley—which barony, on the death of her brother in 1777, descended to her eldest son George Thicknesse, who thereupon assumed the name of Touchet. Her ladyship died in March 1792, and in Sept. following he selected for his third wife, Anne, daughter of Thomas Ford, esq. a lady of considerable literary talent, who survived till 18--, when she died at the very advanced age of ninety years. He had purchased in 1753 the lieutenant-governorship of Languard Fort in Essex, which he obtained permission to resign on advantageous terms in 1766, when he retired into France, where he resided from May to October, and at the close of the year appeared his "Observations on the customs and manners of the French nation," &c. which reached a third edition. From this period his residence became as desultory as his habits; during the remainder of his life he was in almost constant transition between the continent and his native country, and his foreign excursions produced, in succession, "A year's journey through France and Spain," 1777, 2 vols. 8vo. 1779, 2d edition. 1789, 3d edition. And "A year's journey through the Pais Bas or Austrian Netherlands," 1784, 8vo.; a second edition of which appeared in 1786, with considerable additions, and the routes through Germany, Holland, and Switzerland. In 1788 he published two volumes of "Memoirs and Anecdotes of Philip Thicknesse, late governor of Languard Fort, and unfortunately father to George Touchet baron Audley," which were followed by a third volume in 1791. Besides the works already enumerated he wrote various fugitive letters and pamphlets, principally on temporary or personal subjects. He again visited France in 1792 with the intention of passing through that country to Italy, where he proposed to stay two or three years. On the 18th of November he was at Boulogne in perfect health and remarkably good spirits; but on the following day had not proceeded a single stage on the way to Paris before he complained to his wife, who was with him in the carriage, of a sudden pain in his stomach, and almost before she could express her concern, added, "I have a pain in my head too," when he instantly expired. He was a man of probity and honor, and his heart and purse were always open to the unfortunate; but his uncontrollable irritability of temper and restlessness of disposition continually brought him into unpleasant collisions with his family and connections. To the third volume of his memoirs is prefixed a portrait of Mr. Thicknesse, aged 70; and the inimitable James Gillray introduced his portrait in a large caricature containing allusions to his life and publications, and inscribed "Lieut.-Governor Gall-Stone, inspired by Alecto; or, the birth of Minerva."

HELMDON,

In domesday "Elmedene," and in later records Helmenden, Helmeden, and Helmdon, is a simple compound of the saxon elm, or, as it is indifferently used, with the aspirate, helm, an elm, and dene, a valley: the woods which originated its designation have long since yielded to the progress of agricultural cultivation, but the old inclosures called "the Stockins" imply reclaimed woodland, and Alithorn wood was formerly of considerable extent, though now reduced to a few acres. The lordship contains about 1800 acres, and (exclusive of the Stockins) was enclosed by act of parliament 32 Geo. 2 (1758). The provost and fellows of Worcester college, Oxford, lords of the principal or Overbury manor, possess about 200 acres; the lessees of Magdalen college, Oxford, about 280 acres; Mr. Vincent Shortland of Kirtlington near Oxford about 220 acres; Mr. Thomas Fairbrother about 120 acres; and Mr. Charles Fairbrother, Mrs. Woodman of London, and Mr. William Paynter of Aynho, about 100 acres each. It is bounded on the north by Ally brook, which divides it from Wedon Pinkeney in Norton hundred; on the east by Wappenham; on the south by Fawcote in Wappenham, and Radston; on the south-west by Hawes in Brackley; and on the west by Stotesbury, and by Sulgrave in Wardon hundred. The soil is principally a strong clay, and the proportion of arable and pasture throughout the lordship is nearly equal.

Helmdon was long celebrated for its extensive quarries of a fine granular oolitic free-stone. Morton classes them among the four quarries "at this time of chiefest Note with us;"[a] and, in describing the chief seats of the county, observes, that "Easton, my Lord Lemster's [now the earl of Pomfret's] House, is built of a fair white and durable Stone from Helmdon, which is freer from an intermixture of yellowish Spots than is that of Ketton, and is indeed the finest building Stone I have seen in England."[b] In the last century it was used in the erection of the magnificent mansions of Woburn and Stowe; but the quarries have not been worked for architectural purposes in the present century. Their present state therefore affords no opportunity for geological investigation, but Morton notices several of their fossil productions.[c]

MANORIAL HISTORY. MORETON FEE.* HONOR OF LEICESTER.† "Elmedene" was the saxon freehold of Alwin and Godwin; but at the domesday survey was one of the demesne manors of the earl of Moreton. It contained four hides. The arable land was ten carucates. In demesne were two hides, and there were five carucates and two servants; and seven villeins and two bordars with two carucates. There was a mill worth 12d. yearly. The whole had been and was still valued at £6 yearly.[d]

In the hydarium of Hen. 2 William de Torevill was certified to hold these four hides in "Helmenden" of the fee of Leicester.[e]

By the inquisition of knights' fees taken 12 and 13 Joh. (1210-11), it was found that William de Turville had nine fees, of the fees of Leicester then in the king's hands[f] by escheat from Simon Montfort; and in 15 Joh. (1213) he was impleaded by Saher de Quincy earl of Winchester for withholding the service of two fees to the earl from the time of the partition of the lands between him and the earl of Leicester, when William was attorned to him for the service of the said two fees; to which he alleged in reply, that on the first division he was attorned to earl Simon, and after that earl's lands were seized by the crown he had rendered the full service to the king, but he was ready, if it were the king's pleasure, to do the service to earl Saher in future.[g]

The feudal superiority here remained in the honor of Leicester, for Nicholas Turville was returned to hold one fee and a half in Helmdon of the small fees of Moreton, by the inquisition p. m. of Edmund earl of Lancaster;[h] and in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) Henry earl of Lancaster claimed and was allowed return of writs, view of frank pledge, and other privileges in Helmdon[i] as detailed under DODFORD.‡ By the inquisition p. m. of Henry duke of Lancaster in 35 Edw. 3 (1361), it appears that he had two views of frank pledge or court leet yearly, and a court baron every three weeks, incident to his barony of Helmdon, parcel of the honor of Leicester.[k] The Overbury, Netherbury, and Minicourt manors in Helmdon paid quit-rent to the duchy court in the time of Bridges;[l] and certain lands within the leet are expressly stated in some inquisitions to be held of this barony.[m] The duchy court in the time of Bridges continued to be held here, but of late years has been transferred to Byfield.

OVERBURY MANOR. From William de Turville, the mesne lord in the reign of Henry II. this manor descended to sir Nicholas de Turville, who was returned lord of Helmdon in 9 Edw. 2 (1315),[n] and dying without issue male was succeeded by his daughter and heiress Sarah, wife of Robert Lovet, of Liscomb in Buckinghamshire,[o] to whom, and Thomas Lovet their son, Elizabeth, widow of Richard Golafre of Blacolvesle (Blakesley) conveyed lands in Helmdon in the aforesaid year.[p] On the aid for knighting the king's eldest son in 20 Edw. 3 (1346), Thomas Lovett accounted for one fee in Helmdon of the honor of Leicester.[q] In 39 Edw. 3 (1365) William Lovett, son of John Lovett of Liscomb, released to his sister Matilda

D'Arches all his right in the manor called Overbury in Helmdon, and in all the lands and tenements there which had belonged to Thomas Lovett and Robert Lovett and Sarah his wife.[r] Sir Edward Pole senior, probably in execution of a trust, in 5 Hen. 5 (1417) placed Roger Lovett of Liscomb in full seisin of the manor of Helmdon called Overbury manor;[s] in whose descendants it continued till the commencement of the following century.

Lovett of Liscombe, co. Bucks, bart.

In 5 Hen. 8 (1513) Thomas Moore, esq. was in possession of the Overbury manor in Helmdon.[t] Bridges says, 'the manor and capital messuage of Overbury, with the portion of Alithorn, is vested in Sir Charles Holt, Bart. of 'Aston near Birmingham, who hath it in right of his son Clobery's wife, the sole heiress of Thomas Lester, Esquire;'[u] and from him I presume it has passed by the same title as Whitfield to the provost, fellows, and scholars of Worcester college, Oxford, the present proprietors.

Netherbury or Cope's Manor was subordinate to the Overbury manor, and originated, I suspect, in an early subinfeudation from the Turvilles to the Rumellis. In 19 Hen. 3 (1235) Matthew de Rumelli demised to Eustachius de Gerrardville a carucate of land in Helmdon.[x] In 8 Hen. 5 (1420) Ralph Parles * died seised of a messuage called the Netherbury, 100 acres of pasture, 10 acres of meadow, and 40s. rent in Helmden, held of Roger Lovett as of his manor of Helmdon, and Ralph Parles was grandson and heir, aged eleven years.[y] By the inquisition p. m. of Anne Cope, widow of Edward Cope, esq.† in 5 Hen. 8 (1513) she was found to have held the Netherbury manor in Helmdon, of Thomas Moore, esq. as lord of Overbury, leaving Anne, her daughter and heiress, aged twelve years, who had been married at Helmdon to William Lovett, son of Thomas Lovett, esq. and was then living at Astwell.[z] In 22 Hen. 8 (1532) she occurs as the wife of John Heneage, esq.[a] and having survived her second husband, she alienated this manor in 5 Eliz. (1563) to

John Fountayne, esq.[b] by whom it was sold in 21 Eliz. (1579) to

Thomas Emylie, or Emyley, esq.[c] who died in 6 Jac. (1608) seised of Netherbury alias Cope's manor in Helmdon, the abbot's Stockin, and other small estates there, leaving Maximilian Emyley his son and heir aged twenty-one years.[c]

The Emyleys may be traced in the parochial register down to the last century, but it is evident from the altered style of the entries that they had lost their grade in society, and had probably been compelled to alienate their estate in parcels. The principal purchase may be presumed to have been made by the Shortlands, as they have occasionally appointed a gamekeeper for "Cope's otherwise Netherbury manor," though this appointment has been of late years discontinued.[d] Of this family Bridges observes, 'it is remarkable that they have lived at 'Helmedon in the same house ever since if not before the year 1397, when John and Margaret Shortland were the 'owners.'[e] Mr. Vincent Shortland, the present proprietor, is resident in Oxfordshire.

Minicourt or Middlebury Manor. This reputed manor is simply described as messuages, lands, a park, and 8s. rent in Helmdon, held of Thomas Moore, esq. by unknown service, in the inquisitions after the deaths of Richard Crispe in 3 Hen. 8 (1511),[f] and of Thomas Crispe in 24 Hen. 8 (1532);[g] but Bridges states that 'in the 'twentieth year of Henry VIII. Mrs. Moore being lady of the Overbury, and Mrs. Heneage of the Netherbury 'Manor, Thomas Crispe, esq. was seised of the Minicourt or Middlebury Manor, and in 1587 (29 Eliz.) Augustin 'Crispe, of this County, Esq. and Francis his son, conveyed to Brown and Coles the said capital messuage and four 'yard lands and a half in Helmedon, together with their share of the Stockins called Crispe's Stockins. In 1654 'Brown and others convey the same (except Crispe's Stockins) to James Cole, Esquire. And in 1678 .... Coles, 'Esq. conveyed the same to Mr. Richard Fairbrother, whose son Mr. John Fairbrother now holds it.'[e] This estate is now divided between two branches of the Fairbrother family.

Bittlesden Abbey Manor. Roger de Croft and Cecilia his wife, with the assent of Roger their son and heir, granted to God and the blessed Mary and the monks of Bittlesden all their land of "Helmendon" in demesne and villeinage, in wood and in plain; and in 12 Hen. 3 (1227) levied a fine of it to the abbot by the description of eleven virgates of land with their pertinencies.[h] By another grant they gave all their assarts from the wood of Helmendon, in length from the land of the monks to the highway to Banbury, and in width from Radston wood to the assart of Simon de Turville;[i] and in 4 Edw. 1 (1275) Edmond, son of the king (earl of Lancaster), by deed dated at Leicester, confirmed to the abbey all the lands which they had of the gift of Roger and Cecily Croft, and of the confirmation of Simon Montfort formerly earl of Leicester.[k] Matthew de Rumeli, son of Alan de Eston, with the consent of Sardonia his wife, gave to God and the blessed Mary, and the monks of St. Nicholas of Bittlesden, all his portion of the wood of Helmendon.[l] Isabel de Nonancourt, with the assent of Robert and William her sons, quitclaimed all right to the donation given by Matthew de Rumeli her brother.[m] Sardonia, widow of Matthew, released her right of dower in Helmendon and Eston;[n] and Margaret de Quincy countess of Winchester confirmed all the land which the abbey had of the fee of Matthew de Rumeli near her chase of Wisselay,[o] now called Whistley wood. Petronilla, widow of Simon Turvill, gave the monks a messuage and an acre of land in Helmendon;[p] and William de Turvill, about 43 Hen. 3, gave them a messuage in exchange for another in Helmendon.[q] Hugh de Hertberue or Herdborowe (of Harborough in Warwickshire) gave them a virgate of land in Helmenden, and released to them all right in those two virgates there for which they had impleaded him before the justices itinerant at Northampton in 43 Hen. 3 (1259).[r] The abbot of Bittlesden in 56-7 Hen. 3 (1272) brought an action against Thomas le Notte, Edmund de Lisle, and others, for injuring certain willows in "Elmedon" to the damage of his free tenants, when the defendants not appearing the sheriff was commanded to distrain upon them.[s] In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) the abbot was summoned by writ of quo warranto to show by what right he claimed view of frank pledge of his tenants in Helmedon of the fee of Craft or Croft, and of his tenants in Siresham. He pleaded prescription, but the king's attorney prayed judgment on the ground that these liberties were not claimed at the last iter, and the abbot paid a fine of half a mark to the king to be admitted to claim. The jury presented that the abbot and his predecessors had enjoyed the said privileges from time beyond memory, and had duly exercised them, except in amercing transgressors against the assize of bread and beer to the amount of 2s. instead of punishing them by pillory and tumbril, which being contrary to law, the view was taken into the king's hands, but restored again to the abbot for a fine of half a mark.[t] At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) the yard lands of the abbot of Bittlesden at Helmdon were valued at £7. 7s. 4d. per ann. and the abbot's Stockins at £1. 10s.; and among the payments were 6s. 8d. per ann. to Robert Griffin the bailiff there.[v]

After the dissolution all the lands in Helmdon, parcel of the late abbey of Bittlesden, (except Abbot's Stockins, which had been previously granted (int. al.) in 34 Hen. 8 (1532-3) to sir John Williams and Anthony Stringer,[u] of whom they were purchased in March following by Richard Mayho alias Nichols,[x] who died seised in 6 Edw. 6 (1552), and left Henry his son and heir aged twelve years,[y] who sold them in 5 Eliz. (1563) to the president and fellows of Magdalen college, Oxford,[x] the present proprietors.

The court rolls of the Bittlesden manor in Helmdon are extant as early as the reign of Richard II.[x]

Canons Ashby Priory had lands here, principally of the gift of the Rumellis or Romeneys. Matthew de Rumeli, by separate deeds, granted to God and the canons of the church of St. Mary of Esseby (Ashby) a virgate of land in "Helmenden;" a second virgate; a third virgate, held by Randl', with manse and toft and croft, and Randl' himself with all his goods and chattels; a fourth virgate; and a fifth virgate with the assent of Sardonia his wife.[z] The same Matthew de Rumeli, describing himself as son of Alan Fitz Geoffrey, with the assent of Sardonia his wife, gave a virgate of land in Helmenden to William Chaplain of Helmenden;[a] and Herbert de Wodeburde and Sarah his wife quitclaimed the said virgate to him (which they held of Matthew by a prior grant) in consideration of 10 marks (£6. 13s. 4d.) and a hauberk or coat of mail without sleeves to himself, 12d. to Sarah his wife, 6d. to Robert his son, and a cloak of coloured worsted to Amicia his daughter;[a] which virgate William Chaplain then gave to the canons of Ashby,[b] to whom Matthew de Rumeli confirmed it.[b] Sardonia, in her widowhood, released to Geoffrey prior of Ashby, in 20 Hen. 3 (1236), all her third part or right of dower in six virgates and 1s. 6d. yearly rents in Helmedon.[c] Robert, son of sir Alan de Rumeli, about 43 Hen. 3 (1256), confirmed to the canons of Ashby all the lands and tenements which they held of his fee in Helmendon.[d] These possessions were reduced by successive alienations to one virgate or yard land, which at the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) was rated at £1. 14s. 4d. per ann.[v] and since the dissolution has passed with the Bittlesden abbey estate to Magdalen college, Oxford.

Worcester College Manor-house, situated west of the church, is now a farm-house; the other manor-houses cannot be distinguished.

The Village, about four miles from Brackley, lies in a narrow dene or valley, rising rather abruptly to the north and south. 'In this lordship,' Bridges observes, 'are about one hundred and four families, and forty free-'holders. There is one innship, called Stockins, consisting of two houses, Moore's Stockins and Abbot's Stockins.'[e] By the census of 1801 it contained 89 houses and 421 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 84 houses and 433 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 109 houses and 486 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £100. 0s. 6d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2544. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £495 at 5s. 6d. in the £.

Advowson. The general confirmation charter of king Richard I. to the abbey of Grestein in Normandy recites the grant of "Halmedon" church by William earl of Moreton,[f] son of the domesday lord; but it was not long retained by that monastery, for in the reign of Henry III. 'a moiety of this church was given to the abbey 'of S. James near Northampton by Matthew de Rumely, which was afterwards given up by the convent to the hos-'pital of S. John, in consideration of the yearly stipend of 20s. paid by the master and brethren of the hospital to 'the said monastery of St. James.'[g] 'This right in the eleventh year of Edward I. was claimed by William Tur-'ville, the abbot of Bittlesden, and Hugh de Herdeberch [Harborough], and recovered by the master of the hos-'pital.'[h] This suit may be presumed to have established the sole right of the hospital, which was originally limited to a moiety only, as it was found by inquisition ad quod dammum in 8 Edw. 2 (1314)[i] that it would not be to the damage of the king or any other person, if the master and brothers of St. John's hospital in Northampton were to grant the advowson of "Halmenden" to the dean and chapter of Lincoln and their successors. Whether this intended grant was carried into effect, or when it was alienated, cannot now be ascertained, but subsequently to the erection of the see of Peterborough, the presentations prove the advowson to have been vested in private patronage. Mr. Cuthbert Ellison by will bequeathed £500 to Corpus Christi college, Oxford, to be expended in the purchase of an advowson, and directed that the then president, Dr. Mather, should, if living, be presented on the first vacancy, but that in future it should be disposed of to one of the fellows. Accordingly the college adding £60 to the bequest, purchased the rectory of Helmdon in 1720 of rev. George Jones, rector and patron, and vested it in trustees, who in 1736 conveyed it to the president and fellows of the college and their successors.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Brackley. In the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[j] and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[k] it was rated at 16 marks (£10. 13s. 4d.) per ann. deducting a yearly pension of 3 marks (£2) to the master of St. John's hospital, Northampton. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it was returned at £16. 1s. 6d. per ann. deducting the pension of £2 to St. John's hospital, and 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton.[1] The parliamentary commissioners certified it to be a parsonage in the patronage of John Heron, esq. worth £108 per ann. one half of which Mr. Ralph Richard, the incumbent, received for his salary, and the other half was paid to Mr. Richard Heron and Mr. William Heron, who had an extent upon it. The rectory now consists of 50 a. 1 r. 9 p. of land in lieu of glebe, 8 a. 3 r. in lieu of the tithes of old homesteads and inclosures, and a rent-charge of £160 per ann. clear of all deductions, in lieu of the tithes of the common fields, awarded by the commissioners of inclosure.

The rectory house adjoins the north side of the church-yard, and is an indifferent building, presenting no particular indication of antiquity; but the inscription on the mantle-piece in the parlour has long held a conspicuous place in the annals of numerical controversy. Dr. Wallis, the celebrated mathematician, first brought it into notice, and his attention was probably directed to it when visiting his son-in-law, judge Blencowe, at the neighbouring village of Marston St. Lawrence. The doctor, in a learned paper in the Philosophical Transactions, and in his Algebra, contends that the true reading of the date is "An. Do. M 133," and adduces it in proof of Arabic numerals being known in England much earlier than was previously imagined. A fac-simile of the inscription appeared in the Philosophical Transactions,[n] a second in the Archæologia[o], and a third and more accurate one in the Gentleman's Magazine,[p] from a tracing by archdeacon Churton, who in an accompanying communication adopts Dr. Wallis's hypothesis. Much disputation and ingenious conjecture have been exercised in decyphering this famous date, and 1133, 1233, 1533, and 1555 have been severally suggested. Some writers have referred the initials W. R. following the date to William Renalde or Reynolde, the rector from 1523 to 1560, and the general style of the mantle-piece, its very depressed arch, and the elongated leaves in the spandrils, certainly correspond with that period, and corroborate the supposition; whilst, on the other hand, it must be admitted that the form of the M and the connecting figures strongly favor the interpretation given by Dr. Wallis. From a careful examination of the original I am inclined to attribute this singular curiosity to the rector, though it must be confessed his motive for introducing a fictitious date in rude or arbitrary characters, unless to puzzle future antiquaries, seems inexplicable.

The Registers of burials commence in 1570, of baptisms in 1572, and of marriages in 1573.

The Church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, stands on elevated ground at the south end of the village, and consists of a tower (rebuilt in 1823), containing six bells, nave, north and south aisles and porches, and chancel. The tower is 15 ft. 5 in. long, by 12 ft. 2 in. wide; the nave and aisles 44 ft. long, the north aisle 12 ft. 7 in. the nave 16 ft. 9 in. and the south aisle 11 ft. 2 in. wide; and the chancel 38 ft. 2 in. long by 17 ft. 4 in. wide. The ogee arch and finial is adopted in the north door and some of the windows of the chancel. The interior is neatly paved and pewed. The font is small and modern. The nave is divided from each aisle by three spacious pointed arches on very low octagonal pillars with capitals of plain mouldings. The chancel is entered under an open arch. In the south wall is a beautiful range of three rising seats, and a piscina at the eastern extremity under trefoiled arches on clustered columns with foliated capitals; each arch is surmounted by a crocketted ogee canopy with rich finial, and flanked by pinnacles crowned with finials rising from grotesque corbel heads resting on the capitals. In the north wall is a trefoiled ogee arch over a square locker.

The tradition of the village is that he went up to London a poor lad, and amassing a considerable fortune in trade, desired to be buried in his native village.

BENEFACTIONS (p. 541). Leeson's charity is distributed on St. Thomas's day.

SCHOOL. A donation of £20 from the rev. Mr. Jones, who died rector in 1723, to be applied in equal portions towards building a school-house and for the use and benefit of the school, is supposed to have been expended in erecting the school-house, which is now standing, and kept in repair by the parishioners. The building is used for the purposes of a school, but there is no endowment for the education of free scholars.

HINTON,

Is written in domesday "Hintone," and in later records Hynton, Hinton near Brackley, and Hinton in the Hedges, to distinguish it from Hinton by Woodford. It was inclosed by act of parliament 6 Geo. 3 (1766), and contains about 1440 acres, of which about 1140 acres belong to William Ralph Cartwright, of Aynho, esq. M.P. lord of the manor; and about 270 acres to the rector in right of his church. It is bounded on the north by a small part of Halse; north-east by Brackley; east and south by Evenley and Plowman's Furze; south-west by Croughton and Charlton; and west and north-west by Steane. The soil is various, but the lordship is principally in pasture.

MANORIAL HISTORY. MANDEVILLE FEE.* At the domesday survey Ernald, who had also half a hide at Silveston, held of Geoffrey de Manneville (Mandeville) two hides in "Hintone." The arable land was five caracutes, of which two were in demesne with two servants, and eleven villeins and five bordars had the other three. There was a mill worth 2s. yearly, and sixteen acres of meadow, with a wood two furlongs long and half a furlong broad. The whole had been rated at 30s. but was then raised to 70s. yearly.[a] Amongst the feudatories of Geoffrey (Mandeville) earl of Essex in 14 Hen. 2 (1167) Elias de Hinton was returned to hold four fees;[b] and in the hydarium of the same reign this Elias was certified to hold two hides in "Hinton," which is entered under Towcester hundred, of the fee of earl William,[c] brother and heir of Geoffrey, in whose representatives the paramounty may be traced through the successive inquisitions.

MANOR. Henry de Hinton, a descendant from Elias, in the Testa de Nevill, about 27 Hen. 3 (1242), was certified to hold two fees and the third part of a fee in "Hinton" of the honor of Mandeville.[d] In 18 Edw. 1 (1290) Henry de Hinton, probably a son of this Henry, died seised of the manor of Hinton, held of the earl of Hereford by knight's service, and a carucate in Steane, held of Robert de Pinkeney, leaving William de Hinton his son and heir, aged six years,[e] who in 9 Edw. 2 (1315) had a grant of free warren here;[f] and in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) was summoned by writ of quo warranto to show why he claimed view of frank-pledge twice a year, wayf, and free warren in his manor of "Hynton," to which he pleaded the royal charter for free warren, and prescription for the other privileges, but acknowledging that he had punished offenders against the assize of bread and beer by fine of 3s. 6d. instead of the legal punishment of pillory and tumbril, the view was taken into the king's hands, but restored again on petition for a fine of half a mark.[g] In the aid for making the king's eldest son a knight in 28 Edw. 3 (1346), William de Hinton and Simon Chamberlain accounted for one fee in "Hinton" of the fees of the earl of Hereford.[h] 'To this William succeeded Thomas de Hinton his son.[i] In the thirty-seventh year of Edward 'III. this Thomas made a grant of an annual rent charge of twenty pounds issuing from the Manor of Hinton, and 'of his whole right in the said Manor, to Richard Engleyes or Lengleyes and his heirs,' and levied a fine of the manor to him in fee the same year;[k] but it may be presumed to have been only a conveyance in trust, for in 50 Edw. 3 (1376) Thomas de Hinton died seised of the manor and advowson of Hinton, leaving Thomas Hinton, son of his brother Richard, nephew and heir, aged 26 years;[l] and by another inquisition the following year Richard Hinton was found to have died seised in 19 Ric. 2 (1395), and Thomas is described as son and heir, aged 28 years.[m]

A long contest was carried on for this manor between William Doyle or Doyley, who claimed in right of his wife by descent, and John lord Lovell by purchase. On the 25th of May 7 Hen. 4 (1406), both parties, with many of their counsel, appeared before the lords in parliament, and declared that touching the plea pending between them as to the manor of "Hynton joust Brakkeley," with the advowson of the church, six messuages and six virgates of land with the appurtenances, they had agreed to abide the arbitration of six persons indifferently chosen, viz. Monsr. Thomas Green, Ralph Parles, Thomas Chaucer, John Tyndale, John Warrewyk, and Aleyn Ayot, provided they agreed before the feast of St. Peter ad vincula next ensuing, and if not, the archbishop of Canterbury and the duke of York should be umpires to make agreement before the feast of "Nowel;" and that the said arbitrators should make their decree known to the said parties in full parliament; whereupon writs were directed to be issued to the six arbitrators charging them to assemble at London in the octaves of St. John next ensuing.[n] By the influence and artful procrastination of lord Lovell four years were suffered to elapse without any decision, and on the 15th of Mar. 11 Hen. 4 (1409-10), the commons presented to the king in parliament the following petition. To the commons, &c. William Doyley and Isabella his wife, poor and in prison by reason of this suit, humbly pray, that whereas they were lately seised of the manor of "Hynton joust Brakkele" for twenty-two years and more, as the right and fee of the said Isabella by descent of inheritance after the death of one Christiana Cheyne, whose cousin and heir she is, viz. daughter of Elizabeth, sister of Richard de Hinton; and were also seised of a toft, two carucates of land, twelve messuages, twelve virgates of land, twelve acres of meadow, and the advowson of the church of their purchase, as the petitioners can by evidence more fully show; and that John lord Lovell, being desirous of having the said manor, advowson, and premises, to give him the colour of right caused one Thomas de Hinton to pursue in the time of Richard the late king a writ of diem clausit extremum, directed to John Welton, then escheator of Northamptonshire, by virtue whereof an inquisition was taken by men nominated by the opponents of the petitioners, and not of the "visne" (neighbourhood), by which office it was found that one Richard de Hinton, father of the said Thomas, died seised of two messuages and two virgates of land in Farthingho, held of the king in capite, and also of the aforesaid manor, advowson, and premises; whereas the said two messuages, &c. are not held of the king in capite, neither was Richard ever in possession thereof, or of the said manor, or any thing therein, as appears by a commission taken by sufficient men of the hundred; yet the said Thomas de Hinton, with the aid and protection of the said lord Lovell, and assisted by the retinue, servants, and tenants of the said lord, entered the said manor and premises, and enfeoffed therein John, eldest son of the said lord Lovell, lord de la Zouche, and sir Henry Green, who is dead, and many others: wherefore may it please you to consider the long suit, wrongs, losses, &c. which the said lord Lovell hath caused to your petitioners, and also the promises made by him heretofore in divers parliaments; at the first parliament he promised that his right and title to the said manor, &c. should be found by more sufficient men of the county in the first session after the said parliament; at the second parliament he promised to abide by the judgment of three or four justices of his own nomination; and afterwards, at the parliament held at Coventry, he and your petitioners came to be present at the award or ordinance of our lord the king, or of Thomas Green and his co-arbitrators; which said promises, or any of them, the said lord Lovell hath in no wise performed; and at the last parliament held at Westminster before the feast of Pentecost, the king awarded that the said lord Lovell should show his right which he pretended to have in the said manor, which award he hath not performed; and by authority of the last parliament the said Thomas Green and others were charged to make award between the said parties before the feast of St. Peter ad Vincula next ensuing, at which day limited Thomas Chaucer and Aleyn Ayot appeared, but, because the other arbitrators absented themselves, the archbishop of Canterbury, the duke of York, and the bishop of Winchester took the affair into their hands, and promised to award between the parties, but notwithstanding the continual suit of your petitioners nothing hath been done in their behalf: therefore take pity on your petitioners, and beseech the king to ordain a final judgment in the present parliament without delay. Which petition having been read before the king and the lords, it was commanded that writs be directed to the said lord Lovell, lord de la Zouch, Maud widow of John lord Lovell junior, and sir Thomas Green, to come before the king and lords in parliament in Easter next, bringing with them all charters and evidences touching the said manor, &c.; at which day the said lord Lovell appeared in parliament, when sir John Pilkyngton, John Holland, John St. John, Nicholas Lillyng, John Trussell, "Avereye Trussell," and Thomas Ailesbury, knights; Thomas Wake, John Longueville, Ralph Grene, Thomas Wydeville, Robert Vere, Laurence Dyve, John Harwedon, Robert Holdenby, and William Harwedon, were named, with the assent of the said lord Lovell and the said William Doyley and Isabella his wife, to take a special assize; and it was commanded by the king and the lords that a writ be directed to the sheriff of Northamptonshire, charging him, under penalty of £300, to empannel the said persons to take a special assize before certain justices, at a certain day and place to be appointed by them, the said persons to appear or forfeit £200, and twelve of them to be charged by the justices to ascertain the right of the said manor between the parties without exception or delay to be made by the said lord Lovell or his tenants, or, in case of such exception or delay, the matter to be submitted to the king and his council, who shall have power by authority of parliament to examine into the matter and make an end thereof as reason and good faith shall require; and that the said lord Lovell fail at his peril to deliver to the lord chancellor the names of the feoffees of the said manor. The counsel of the lord Lovell prayed that the tenants should have their pleas in bar if such there were, to which the king and the lords agreed.[o] The result of the trial was a confirmation of the manor to lord Lovell, subject to a rent-charge of £20 per ann. to Doyley for life.[p] In the following year a fine was levied of Overbury and Netherbury manors in Hinton, with the advowson of the church, to this John lord Lovell,[q] whose son, William lord Lovell, made a settlement (int. al.) of the manors of Steane and Hinton in 33 Hen. 6 (1454-5);[r] from which time Hinton descended by the same title with STEANE—to which the reader is referred—till the death of Nathaniel 3d and last lord Crewe, bishop of Durham, in 1721, when the manor (but not the advowson) by virtue of a settlement made by Thomas 2d lord Crewe in Feb. 1694-5,[s] devolved to

Catherine, his youngest daughter and coheiress, wife of sir John Harpur, of Calke abbey, Derbyshire, bart. whose grandson, sir Henry Harpur, bart. sold it in July 1748[s] to

William Cartwright, esq. of AYNHO, grandfather of William Ralph Cartwright, esq. M.P. the present proprietor.

THE MANOR-HOUSE has been long since destroyed, but is supposed to have stood 'in the grounds beyond the 'parsonage-house.' 'Within this manor was formerly[t] a chapel dedicated to St. John, to which the lord of the 'manor presented and the bishop of Lincoln instituted from the year 1279 to 1392. It was probably designed for 'the use of the Lord and his family.'

THE VILLAGE is in a low situation about one mile east from Brackley. In the time of Bridges there were 'about 'thirty houses.'[u] By the census of 1801 it contained 41 houses and 177 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 36 houses and 167 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 41 houses and 188 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £62. 1s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £1769. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised about £190 at 2s. in the £. 'The wake is kept on Trinity Sunday.'

The Advowson immemorially accompanied the manor till the death of Nathaniel last lord Crewe, bishop of Durham, since when it has passed with Steane, and is now vested in earl Spencer.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Brackley. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[x] and 1291 (19 Edw. 1)[y] it is rated at 12 marks (£8) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at £10. 10s. 7d. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations.[z] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage presentative in the gift of John Crewe, of Steane, esq. worth about £80 per ann. and that Mr. Thomas Harris the incumbent supplied the cure.[a] The rectory now consists of 270 a. 2 r. 21 p. of land, exclusive of roads, allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the glebe and tithes.

The rectory-house stands adjoining the east end of the church-yard.

He married Joyce, sister of the eccentric Philip Thicknesse, who in his memoirs relates some amusing anecdotes of his brother in law. He died 28th Feb. and was buried here 5th Mar. 1771,[d] leaving three daughters, of whom, Joyce married the rev. Dr. Philip Lloyd, dean of Norwich, and was well known for her skill in worsted work, and her painted windows in that cathedral; and Bridget was wife of the rev. W. T. Bowles, and mother of the rev. W. L. Bowles, the poet. His successor,

Samuel Bulkeley, of Clare-hall, Camb. A.M. was inst. 22 Apr. 1771, on the presentation of John earl Spencer. He was brother in law of the earl of Peterborough, subdean and prebendary of Bristol, and died April 1809, aged 77 years; when James Preedy, of Queen's coll. Oxf. A.M. was presented by George John earl Spencer, and inst. 28 June following. He is also vicar of Winslow in Buckinghamshire.

The Registers commence in 1558.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, stands on rising ground at the west end of the village, and consists of a low Norman tower, nave, north aisle, south porch, and chancel. There is no exterior entrance to the tower. The belfry window has two small round-headed arches, and over each a large fluted leaf diverging from the top of the square pier which separates them, the whole inclosed in a semicircular beaded dripstone resting on plain imposts. The tower is 12 ft. 5 in. long by 8 ft. 10 in. wide; the nave and north aisle 30 ft. 4 in. long, the nave 17 ft. 1 in. and the aisle 12 ft. 2 in. wide; and the chancel 25 ft. 6 in. by 13 ft. 4 in. The font is late Norman, having a circular basin, with a range of foliations, under a series of interlaced semicircular arches, surmounted by the four-leaved ornament. The nave is divided from the aisle by two arches on circular pillars with square shallow voluted capitals. The entrance to the chancel is under a closed arch.

North Aisle. I. At the west end of the aisle are two low conjoined altar tombs, about twelve feet and a half long and one foot and a half high. On them are two indifferently executed figures in free-stone, which have been attributed to "the Lord Lovell and his Lady," but are evidently anterior to the reign of Henry the 4th, the period when the Lovells first became possessed of this manor, and may therefore be assigned to the family who assumed the local surname. In front of the tombs are blank shields in quatrefoils. The knight has a plain basinet and hood, but his armour is too much worn to distinguish whether it was of ring or chain. His tunic reaches below his knees; he has a heater shield on his arm; horizontal belt, and sword at his left side. His head rests on two lozenge cushions, and his feet on a lion. The lady has a hood; wimple to her chin; and mantle flowing to the feet, fastened across the breast by a cord terminating with a tassell in front. Her head reposes on a lozenge cushion supported by two mutilated angels; her hands are elevated, and at her feet is a dog.

Benefactions (p. 541). Almshouse, &c. Sir John Maynard, executor of the will of Ellis Hele, esq. who married Alice, third daughter and coheiress of Reginald Bray, paid £100, out of the monies bequeathed by the testator for charitable uses, to John lord Crewe, who expended £60 thereof in building an almshouse at Hinton for two poor inhabitants, and afterwards added £60 to the remaining £40 to make up £100 again, which sum, with the accumulated interest, amounting to £126, was placed on bond in 1674, and afterwards, increasing to £163, Thomas lord Crewe, son and heir of the said John lord Crewe, purchased certain lands in Eydon for £225, and by deed 25 Nov. 1681 settled them to the use of himself for life, remainder to the use of the heirs male of his body, and in default to the right heirs of John lord Crewe, as to three fourth parts of the annual rents and profits in trust, to have the appointment of the said two poor persons, or one, if there should be but one in the town fit to be put into the said almshouse, and to allow them so much of the said rents as should be sufficient for their maintenance, and out of the residue to keep the almshouse in repair; and if there should be a further surplus, to dispose thereof in putting out poor children born in Hinton to be apprenticed, the election of such children, their trades, and the amount of premium, to be left to the discretion of such person as should succeed in the trust; and as for the other fourth part of the rents, to such trusts as the said Thomas lord Crewe should by will or deed appoint, and until or in default of such appointment in trust for him, his heirs, and assigns. It appears by an entry in the parish register of Hinton, dated 15 Apr. 1751, that lady Harpur, to whom the family estates at Hinton descended on the death of Nathaniel lord Crewe bishop of Durham, purchased of her coheiresses the fourth part of the rents, and settled it upon the almshouse, so that the whole Eydon estate belongs to the charity. It contains from 25 to 30 acres, and is now let for £30. 10s. per ann. The charity is under the superintendence of W. R. Cartwright, of Aynho, esq. M.P. one of the representatives of the Crewe family, who pays £6. 5s. per ann. to each of the two poor widows placed in the almshouse. The allowance used to be 1s. 3d. a week, or £3. 5s. a year, but was raised several years ago to the present amount. The remainder of the rents, after defraying the expense of repairs, is applied in putting out apprentices with premiums of £20 or upwards.

Nathaniel lord Crewe bishop of Durham, by will, left an augmentation of 40s. each to the two almspeople, to be paid by his trustees half yearly, at Lady-day and Michaelmas.

Lady Harpur, by will dated 30 Nov. 1742, directed £100 to be paid to Thomas Cartwright, esq. and the rev. Dr. Grey, rector of Hinton, the interest thereof at £4 per cent. to be paid to the poor old women in the hospital or almshouse at Hinton.

The almshouse stands in the village, and over the door is this inscription :

Reginaldi & Annæ Bray qui sepeliuntur in templo
hujus parochiæ.

Lady Arran's charity. It appears by an entry in the parish register that lady Arran, one of the representatives of the Crewe family, left £100 to the poor of the parish of Hinton, to be paid by Mr. Cartwright, her executor. The sum of £4 per ann. interest of this £100, is paid by W. R. Cartwright, esq. to the churchwardens of Hinton, and distributed by them among poor people of the parish at Christmas.

MARSTON ST. LAWRENCE.

In domesday "Mereston," and in later records Marston, is probably derived from its marshy low situation; and the adjunct of St. Lawrence, was subsequently adopted from its patron saint, to distinguish it from Marston Trussell in Rowell hundred. The Lordship contains about 350 acres of old inclosure, and about 1210 acres inclosed by act of parliament in 33 Geo. 2 (1759). John Jackson Blencowe, esq. lord of the manor and impropriator, has about 1130 acres; the vicar, in right of his church, about 80 acres, exclusive of land in Middleton Cheney and Warkworth; and Miss Ann Botry about 197 acres, as lessee of the dean and Chapter of Lincoln, and about 64 acres of freehold. In this parish is the hamlet of Westhorp, but it has now no distinct lands. About 255 acres in the lordship of Middleton Cheney, separated by the intervening parish of Thenford, pay to the church and poor of Marston St. Lawrence, and to the highways of Middleton. The boundaries of Marston are formed by Thorp Mandeville, and a small portion of Sulgrave in Wardon hundred on the north; Stotesbury or Stuchbury on the north east; Gretworth in Wardon hundred on the east; Farthingho on the south east and south; and Thenford on the south west and south. The soil of the upper part of the lordship is a dark loam, and of the lower, a strong clay. It is principally in pasture.

Manorial History. Chester Fee.* At the domesday survey, Robert held of earl Hugh (of Chester) four hides in "Mereston." The arable land was ten carucates; of which four were in demesne with nine servants; and twenty-six villeins and ten bordars had the remaining six carucates. There was a mill worth 8s. yearly; and twenty-four acres of meadow. The whole had been, and was still rated at £10 yearly.[a]

St. Ebrulf Abbey Manor. Robert de Rothelent,* the domesday mesne lord, with the consent of the earl of Chester the paramount lord, gave (int. al.) the church of St. Lawrence of "Mereston in Northamtonescire" and whatsoever belonged to it, to the abbey of St. Ebrulf at Utica in Normandy, as appears from the confirmation charter of William the Conqueror in 1081.[b] The subsequent leading circumstances connected with the English possessions of this abbey—the placing of them under the procuracy or superintendence of the prior of Ware, and their annexation to the house of Carthusians of Shene at Richmond on the suppression of the alien priories by king Henry 5th, have been detailed under Byfield.†

In 32 Hen. 8 (1540) the site and capital messuage, and demesne lands of the manor, of "Lawrence Merston alias Merston St. Lawrence" together with the rectorial tithes, parcel of the possessions of the late monastery of Shene, were granted to Thomas Blencowe, of Merston, gent;[c] who in 34 Henry 8 (1542) died seised of them, leaving John his son and heir aged thirty years;[d] from whom they lineally descended to sir John Blencowe who was born here 30 Nov. 1642. Called to the bar, he obtained a coif in 1689; and represented the neighbouring borough of Brackley from 1690 to 1695. Retiring from parliament, he was successively placed on the bench of the three judicial courts, being appointed a baron of the exchequer in 1696, a justice of the common pleas in 1697, and of the king's bench in 1702; reappointed to the common pleas in 1714, and retired on a pension in 1722. He survived his faculties, and was released from a state of imbecility on the 8th of May 1726, in the 84th year of his age. In his professional character he was distinguished by an honest, blunt integrity, and in the intercourse of private life by a considerate, humane disposition, of which the following anecdote furnishes a pleasing illustration: An old man whom he had employed in hewing stones lived to be above ninety years old, and for some time had daily spoiled the stones instead of rendering them fit for use. Lady Blencowe perceiving it, desired the judge to continue him his eight pence a day, and desire him to stay at home. "No, no," said the judge, "let him spoil on; he has a pleasure in thinking he earns his daily bread at four score years and ten; but if you turn him off, he will soon die with grief." There are three folio engraved portraits of sir John Blencowe, one by King, another by Sherwin, and the third by Vertue.

John Blencowe, esq. grandson of the judge, dying unmarried in 1777 devised his estates to his nephew Samuel Jackson, esq. who, in pursuance of his uncle's will, adopted the name and arms of Blencowe, and whose son John Jackson Blencowe, esq. is the present proprietor.

Prebendal Manor. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, Ralph Murdac was returned to hold four hides in Marston of the fee of the earl of Chester.[e] From him this estate soon after escheated, or was alienated to the paramount lord; for, [f] in this reign Ranulph earl of Chester granted to the church of Lincoln lands in Merston and Wavercurt '[Warkworth] to the yearly value of thirty pounds. At the same time Walter de Wahull remitted all his right to 'the said lands; and the king himself further granted, that they should be discharged from all secular customs and 'payments.' They were subsequently divided into two portions, one being appropriated to the corps of a prebend, and the other assigned to the dean and chapter. In the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) the prebend of "Merston" consisting of a lay fee was valued at £12 per ann.;[g] and in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) William de Dalderby, prebendary of Lincoln, was summoned by writ of quo warranto to shew by what right he claimed view of frank pledge, with correction of the assise of bread and beer, and of measures, and weyf in his prebend of "Marshton" and of his free tenants in "Westhrop;" to which he pleaded that he had a certain manor at Mershton belonging to his prebend, of which "Westhorp" was parcel by tenure, and that he and the prebendaries his predecessors had immemorially held view of frank pledge in the said manor twice in the year; he acknowledged he had neither pillory nor tumbril, and punished offenders against the assise by amerciament, but said he had a standard gallon, pottle, and quart, and burnt all false measures. The jury presented that he was entitled to the privileges in question, and had legally exercised weyf, but having illegally punished transgressors of the assise by amerciaments and not by pillory and tumbril, the view was taken into the king's hands, but restored again for a fine of half a mark.[h]

The prebend had for a long period been demised on lease for three lives, renewable at a reserved yearly rent of £12. 5s. to the prebendary, £3. 11s. 8d. to the dean and chapter and vicars of the church of Lincoln, and £1. 4s. 6d. to the king for tenths; and at the time of the inclosure in 1760 was held under Mark, bishop of Sodor and Man, the prebendary, by John Blencowe, esq. as lessee. In 16 Geo. 3 (1776) an act of parliament was obtained, by which the fee simple and inheritance of the prebend of Marston St. Lawrence, and the lands, tenements, and hereditaments thereto belonging, were vested in John Blencowe, esq. his heirs and assigns, discharged from the reserved rents under the lease, but subject to a yearly rent-charge of £17. 1s. 2d. (being the amount of the three said sums) to the Rev. Everard Buckworth, LL.D. the then prebendary and his successors, and a further yearly rent-charge of £82. 18s. 10d. or the annual quantity of twenty-nine quarters of good marketable wheat, Winchester measure, in lieu of the said sum of £82. 18s. 10d. at the option of the prebendary and his successors.

The prebendal is now blended with the general Blencowe estate in this lordship.

Lincoln Deanry Manor. In the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1.) the mother church of Lincoln was certified to have £13. 6s. 8d. per ann. in lands and rents in Merston;[i] in 24 Edw. 1. (1295) the dean and chapter of Lincoln were found to hold two fees of the earl of Chester in Marston;[k] and in 9 Edw. 2 (1315) they were returned to be lords of Marston, Westhorp and Warkworth.[l] In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) the dean and chapter in plea to a writ of quo warranto, claimed view of frank pledge, correction of the assise of bread and beer, and false measures of all their tenants, and wayf in Marston, by prescription in right of the church of the blessed Mary of Lincoln. The king's attorney demanded a jury, when the dean and chapter failing to appear, the said liberties were adjudged to be taken into the king's hands, and a writ issued to the sheriff to answer for their profits; but the defendants were afterwards, in consideration of a fine of half a mark, admitted to plead, and another jury being summoned, presented that they were duly seised of the privileges claimed, and that they caused all false measures to be burnt, and the users of them to be amerced; but, as they punished offenders against the assise of bread and beer by fine of 12d. instead of having recourse to the legal punishment of pillory and tumbril, the view was taken into the king's hands, but restored again for a fine of one mark;[m] double the amount, it will be observed, which was paid by the prebendary under a similar forfeiture.

The Deanry estate has been long demised on lease for twenty-one years, renewable every seven years. The Botrys have been resident at Marston on this estate, from the middle of the sixteenth century. John Botry, esq. who died in 1728, leaving his property at the disposal of his wife, she devised one portion to her third husband Joseph Sharrock, gent. who sold it to the Blencowe family; and the other portion to her son Shreeve Botry, esq. father of Miss Botry, the present lessee, and the last representative of the family.

The Manor House is a respectable mansion. In the dining-room is a good collection of family portraits: Thomas Blencowe, esq. father of the judge; Mary, his wife, daughter of rev. Dr. Savage; judge Blencowe, in his robes; Ann, his wife, daughter of the rev. Dr. Wallis; John Blencowe, esq.; Jane, his wife, daughter of W. Holbech, esq.; the three daughters of judge Blencowe, Mrs. Prescott; lady Probyn; and Mrs. Jennens; John Blencowe, esq. grandson of the judge; and the rev. John Wallis, D.D. a copy from the portrait in the Bodleian library, Oxford.

The Deanry house stands north-west of the church-yard.

The Village is about five miles from Brackley. In the time of Bridges it consisted of 'about thirty families.'[m] By the census of 1801 it contained 82 houses, and 371 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 89 houses, and 385 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 97 houses, and 482 inhabitants. 'There are six houses here which pay to the church and poor in this parish, but pay all other dues and bear offices in Middleton Chenduit.'[m] The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £106. 15s. at 4s. in the pound. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £3042. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £782. 7s. at 8s. 6d. in the pound. The wake follows St. Laurence.

The Advowson has been anticipated under St. Ebrulf's manor. On the grant of that manor and the impropriate rectory to Thomas Blencowe, gent. in 32 Hen. 8 (1540),[n] the advowson of the vicarage was reserved, and remained in the crown till 11 Aug. 41 Eliz. (1599), when it was (int. al.) granted, together with the yearly pension of 20s. out of the vicarage formerly payable to St. Ebrulf, and the rectory of Warkworth, to Thomas Crompton, esq. and Henry Best, gent.[o] who, the following day, conveyed them to Richard Chetwode, esq. of Warkworth.'[p] In 1734 Christopher D'Oyly presented to this vicarage, and in 1754 John Blencowe, esq. from whom the patronage has accompanied the manor.

The Rectory was rated at 36 marks (£24) per ann. in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[r] and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1);[s] and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it was returned as an appropriation of the priory of Shene at £15. 13s. 4d. per ann.[t] Allotments were made by the commissioners of inclosure to John Blencowe, esq. the impropriator, in lieu of the rectorial tithes of the open fields, and of the ancient inclosures of the prebendal estate; and to the lessee of the dean and chapter, in lieu of the rectorial tithes of certain ancient inclosures which he held under them.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Brackley. 'It was ordained in the eleventh year of the episcopate of Hugh 'Wells, bishop of Lincoln, and endowed with the profits of the altar of the said church of Merston, and of the chapels 'belonging to it, with the small tythes of the whole parish, part of the tythes of Middleton and Warkworth, a glebe 'of one virgate, and a vicarage house; out of which was to be allowed a yearly pension of xxs. to the abbot and 'convent of S. Ebrulf.'[u] In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[r] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[s] it was valued at 15 marks (£10. per ann. deducting a yearly pension of 20s. to the priory of Ware; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at £21. 10s. 7d. per ann. deducting the said pension then payable to the priory of Shene, and 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton.[t] The parliamentary commissioners certified it to be a vicarage in the patronage of Philip Holman, of Warkworth, esq. with one chapel of ease, distant about three miles, whereof the said Philip Holman was patron also; that Mr. John Eyre was vicar and parson of the premises, viz. the vicarage of Marston St. Lawrence worth £30 yearly, the parsonage of Warkworth worth £40 yearly, and and a part of Nether Middleton Cheney worth £20 yearly.[v] The vicarage now consists of 81 a. 3 r. 10 p. in Marston, allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the glebe and the vicarial tithes of the open fields, and of the ancient inclosures of the prebendal and deanry estates, and of all other ancient inclosures, with two or three specified exceptions; 71 a. 1 r. 26 p. in Warkworth in lieu of the rectorial and vicarial tithes of the open fields, and of moduses payable for old inclosures in "the liberty or township of Warkworth;" and 39 a. 2 r. in Middleton in lieu of the vicarial tithes of that part of the lordship which is within this parish. The vicarage house is a neat residence north of the church-yard.

Thomas Hyde was inst. 20 Aug. 1575, and

William Barkesdale, 19 Sept. 1576, on the presentation of the queen.

Daniel Baxter, B.D. was presented by Sir Richard Chetwode, of Wodhull or Odell, Bedfordshire, on the decease of the last incumbent, and inst. 27 Mar. 1629. He was rector of Lamport from 1602 to 1629, and of Draughton in 1606. His death introduced

Charles Chauncey, B.D. who was inst. 28 Aug. 1633, on the presentation of Philip Holman, esq. On his resignation

Francis Cheynell, A.M. was presented by the same patron, and inst. 28 Aug. 1637. He was the son of a physician at Oxford, where he was born and educated, and through the influence of his mother, then widow of Abbot bishop of Salisbury, was elected probationer fellow of Merton College in 1629. Having taken his master's degree, he was admitted to orders, and had a curacy near Oxford. His first preferment was this vicarage, and during his residence here he had a dispute with archbishop Laud; on which Dr. Johnson observes, had Cheynell been equal to his adversary in greatness and learning, it had not been easy to have found either a more proper opposite; for they were both, to the last degree, zealous, active, and pertinacious, and would have afforded mankind a spectacle of resolution and boldness not often to be seen. But the amusement of beholding the struggle would hardly have been without danger, as they were too fiery not to have communicated their heat, though it should have produced a conflagration of their country. On the breaking out of the civil war Cheynell avowed himself a presbyterian, and declared for the parliament; and having subscribed the covenant was nominated one of the assembly of divines at Westminster for settling the new discipline. His zeal rendered him obnoxious to the royalists, and Marston not being far distant from the King's quarters, he was visited by some of the troops, who, as he affirms, plundered his house, and drove him from it. He then retired into Sussex, and his benefice was given to a clergyman, of whom he says, that he would become a stage better than a pulpit. Who he was, is not now known, for it cannot be presumed that the cure was kept vacant from 1643 to 1648, when Mr. John Eyre accounted for the first fruits of this vicarage. Cheynell subsequently obtained the rich rectory of Petworth in Sussex, was president of St. John's college, Oxford, and Margaret professor of divinity from 1647 to 1650, and continued a leading member of the presbyterian party till the restoration, when he was deprived of his preferment, and retiring to a small village near Chichester died there in 1665. His intolerant sentiments, and vehement temper, made him a bitter disputant, and his pen was almost constantly engaged in controversy. He commenced in 1643 with "the rise, growth, and danger of Socinianism," 4to.; and the following year published "Chillingworthi Novissima, or the sickness, heresy, death, and burial of William Chillingworth," whom he had attended in his last illness, and in ministering to the personal wants and comforts of his opponent, whilst he considered it his duty to consign his soul to perdition, gave a striking proof of the force of the best feelings of nature, in counteracting the legitimate tendency of uncharitable principles. He refused, however, to bury him, but attended the funeral, and holding the "Religion of Protestants" in his hand, threw it into the grave, exclaiming in the true spirit of bigotry and fanaticism, "Get thee gone, thou cursed book which has seduced so many precious souls; get thee gone, thou corrupt rotten book, earth to earth, and dust to dust; get thee gone into the place of rottenness, that thou mayest rot with thy author, and see corruption." In 1646 appeared "Truth triumphing over Error and Heresy;" or a relation of a public disputation which he had at Oxford with Mr. Erbury, a Socinian; and in 1647 he attacked the "Practical Catechism of Dr. Hammond." He was afterwards deputed, at a meeting of the presbyterian delegates of the University of Oxford, to repel the publications of Biddle, Fry, and other Socinian writers; and accordingly in 1650 he produced his vindication of "the divine Tri-unity of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost." Besides his controversial writings he published several single sermons preached before parliament.

John Eyre, accounted for the first fruits 9 May 1648, and occurs in 1655.

Clifton Stone, was buried here 23 Apr. 1695.[r] And his successor,

William Gilbert, was inst. 14 Oct. 1695, on the presentation of George Holman, esq. Either he, or a contemporary of both names, was rector of Tiffield 1686, vicar of Newbottle to 1699, and rector of Gretworth from 1705 to 1731. On his resignation

Anthony Shuckburgh, of Linc. Coll. Oxf. A.M. was presented by Anastatia Holman, widow, and inst. 3 Jan. 1705-6. He was buried here 13 Aug. 1734,[r] aged 58, and

William D'Oyly, of Oriel Coll. Oxf. A.M. 1733, and B.M. 1736, and vicar of Higham Ferrars, was presented by Christopher D'Oyly, gent. and inst. 14 Aug. 1734 to "the vicarage of Marston St. Laurence, with the rectory of Warkworth annexed," and in that form all subsequent institutions have been entered. He resigned Higham the following year, but retained this benefice, and was buried here 15 June 1754, aged 67,[r] when

Benjamin Bonner, A.M. was presented by John Blencowe, of Marston, esq. and inst. 7 Oct. following. On his decease

James Miller, A.B. was inst. 6 Jan. 1764, on the presentation of the same patron. He was buried here 1 Sept. 1780, aged 60,[r] and

William Bree, A.B. was presented by Samuel Blencowe, esq. and inst. 20 Dec. following. On his resignation the same patron presented his son

Thomas Blencowe, of Oriel Coll. Oxf. A.M. who was 21 Jan. 1809.

The Registers of baptisms commence in 1651, of burials in 1664, and of marriages in 1665.

The Church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, stands at the south end of the village, and consists of a tower in which are five bells, nave, north and south aisles, north porch, and chancel. The tower is 12 ft. 2 in. long, by 13 ft. 8 in. wide; the nave and aisles 72 feet long, the nave 19 ft. 3 in. the north aisle 13 ft. 10 in. and the south aisle 12 ft. 5 in. wide; the chancel 29 ft. 6 in. long, by 18 ft. 8 in. wide. The interior has been recently paved, and neatly pewed. The font is octagonal; the compartments of the basin are divided by crocketted buttresses, and contain a series of trefoiled arches with crocketted ogee canopies. The nave is divided from the north aisle by four spacious arches on piers running down to the base; and from the south aisle by four arches on circular pillars with capitals of plain mouldings. The east end of the north aisle is partitioned off by a carved screen. At the east end of the south wall is a piscina. The chancel is entered under a richly carved, and originally painted gothic screen; having in the spandrils of the entrance arch a lion passant, and a bear muzzled. In the north wall is a monumental arch. In the south wall are three stalls for the officiating priests on the same level under trefoiled ogee arches with crocketted finials and pediments running into a square tablet. At the east end of the wall is a piscina, and in the opposite wall a square locker. On each side of the east window is a lofty niche with crocketted square headed canopy. The altar-piece is of wood, richly sculptured, probably by the same artist who carved the chimney-piece in the dining-room of the manor-house about the beginning of the seventeenth century.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS:

Nave. I. At the east end of the north wall, is a neat tablet of white marble. Arms: G. on a chief Erm. two hurts, Walmesley, impaling Botry. Crest: a lion passant gardant Erm. ducally crowned G.

BENEFACTIONS. (P. 541.)

On the north side of the church yard is a remarkably fine yew tree which measures 17 ft. 10 in. at the base, and 21 ft. 9 in. at six feet from the ground, spreading its branches 62 ft. from north to south, and 57 ft. from east to west. The custom of planting yew trees in cemeteries is of very remote antiquity, and has been assigned to various, and very different motives. By some, it is supposed, they were merely intended to furnish the archers with a supply of bows, and cultivated in sacred inclosures to secure the cattle from the deleterious effects of feeding on their foliage; others with more probability imagine them to have been placed on the repositories of the dead, as emblematic of death by their dark sombre foliage, and of immortality by their perpetual verdure; and it is not improbable but they may be a relic of the superstitious worship paid by the ancient Northern nations in the dark ages of paganism to trees in general, and the oak and the yew in particular.

Mary Leapor, an humble votary of the muses, was born at this village on the 26th of February 1722, at which time her father was gardener to judge Blencowe, in whose service he continued five years, and then removed with his wife and only child to Brackley. From her earliest youth she evinced an insatiable taste for reading, which her parents in vain endeavoured to repress, as interfering with her domestic avocations. Poetry was her great delight; "she lisped in numbers for the numbers came," and some of her productions at length attracted the notice of a lady in the neighbourhood, who, finding unassuming manners and an amiable disposition, combined with uneducated talent, warmly interested herself in her favor, and promoted a subscription for the publication of her poems, with a view of enabling her to devote her mind to her favorite pursuit freed from the cares or the dread of poverty. This benevolent design, so far as regarded the author herself, was frustrated by her premature removal from the world by the measles on the 26th of Nov. 1746; but in compliance with her dying request, it was carried into execution for the benefit of her father. The first volume of "Poems on several occasions, by Mrs. Leaper of Brackley," appeared in 1748, and the second volume in 1751, to each of which is prefixed a long subscription list, but a regard to truth compels the observation, that the number and respectability of the names appear to have been rather the result of the peculiar circumstances and amiable character of the author, aided by the zeal of personal friendship, than of the intrinsic merit of the compositions.

William Blencowe, third son of judge Blencowe, and whose epitaph has been given in a preceding page, was the first decypherer to whom government allowed a salary. He was initiated in the art by his maternal grandfather Dr. Wallis. He applied to the minister for the appointment, unintroduced and unrecommended; and when asked his pretensions to the office, replied, "because I am qualified to execute it." This skill was put to the test by submitting to him two letters in ciphers, which he soon returned satisfactorily elucidated, and obtained the desired situation with a handsome stipend. He was attacked in the prime of life with a violent fever, from which he had apparently recovered, but relapsed, and shot himself in a moment of temporary derangement.

is a hamlet of about twenty houses in this parish, adjoining the village of Gretworth. It has been incidentally noticed under the prebendal and deanry estates in Marston. In 1 Eliz. (1599) sir Rowland Stanley and others levied a fine of the manor of Westhorp and tenements there and in Marston to Geoffrey Dormer, esq.[5] Bridges says, 'the present Lord of the Manor is Judge Blencowe, to whom it came by purchase from Peter Bathurst, esq. 'who had it in marriage with Leonora Maria, daughter of Charles How, esq. of Gretworth.'[6]

Both the manor and lands are now blended with Marston by unity of ownership.

MIDDLETON CHENDUIT,

In its etymology has doubtless a relative signification, though the correlative reference cannot be traced in the Saxon or Norman proprietorship of any of the neighbouring vills. The addition of Chenduit, now corrupted into Cheney, is derived from its ancient lords, and adopted in contra distinction to other places of the same name in this and the adjacent counties. The lordship of "Upper Middleton Cheney and Lower Middleton Cheney," was inclosed by act of parliament in 9 Geo. 3 (1769), and contains about 1630 acres, of which, about 255 acres, as already stated under Marston St. Lawrence, belong to that parish. On the other hand, about 950 acres in Warkworth lordship called "Middleton tithing," and inclosed by act of parliament in 4 Geo. 3 (1764), pay to the poor and church rates of this parish, and to the highways of Warkworth. Deducting the Marston and adding the Warkworth lands there are about 2320 acres which contribute to the poor and church of Middleton. The principal proprietors are, William Horton of London, esq. who has about 505 acres in Middleton and about 110 acres in Warkworth; the rector, in right of his church, about 215 acres in Middleton and about 127 acres in Warkworth; Mr. James Eldridge of Overthorp about 185 acres in Warkworth; the rev. Thomas Blencowe of Marston St. Lawrence about 150 acres in Warkworth; Mr. William Wise about 145 acres, part copyhold of Rochester manor; Mrs. Anne Wise and Mr. Richard Wise about 100 acres each, part copyhold; Mrs. Anne Wilkins of Bristol about 115 acres, including 45 acres in Warkworth; and Mr. Charles Bricknell of Banbury nearly 100 acres in Warkworth. The lordship is bounded on the north by Chacombe; east by Thenford; south by Newbottle, Astrop, and King's Sutton; and west by Warkworth. The soil is principally a rich red loam, and about two thirds of the lordship is in pasture.

Manorial History. There were three distinct manors in Middleton of the several fees of Moreton, Grentemaisnil, and Chester.

Moreton Fee.* Honor of Berkhampsted.† The portion of "Mideltone," which belonged to Almar and Saulf in the Saxon æra, a fifth part of which lay within the soke or jurisdiction of Sutton, was then rated at 50s. yearly, but was advanced to 60s. at the domesday survey, when it was held by Ralph (Chenduit) under the earl of Moreton. It contained two hides. The arable land was five carucates; of which two carucates were in demesne with a servant; and seven villeins and six bordars had one carucate; leaving two waste, or unaccounted for. There were four acres of meadow.[a]

On the confiscation of the Moreton fee this estate was attached to the honor of Berkhampsted, now parcel of the duchy of Cornwall, to which it pays 16s. 4d. yearly, and the constable and headborough for Middleton is appointed at the duchy court, which is now usually held at Blakesley.

Chenduit Barony or Manor. Ralph, the domesday mesne lord, held also under the earl of Moreton lands in (Hanging) Houghton, (West) Farndon, Tiffield, Furtho, Welton, Charwelton, Charlton, Foxley, Siresham, Heyford, and Preston (Capes); most of which being subsequently included in the barony of Chenduit, there can be little hesitation in pronouncing him the founder of that family, and father of the Ralph de Chenduit, whose widow Adeliza, with the consent of her two sons Simon and Hugh, gave the church of Charwelton to St. Nostell's priory in Yorkshire in the reign of Henry 1st.‡ In the hydarium of Hen. 2, Simon de Chenduit was certified to hold two hides in Middelton of the fee of Berkhampsted.[b] In 17 Joh. (1215) Ralph de Chenduit, probably grandson of Simon, having incurred a forfeiture of his lands by joining the barons against the king, the constable of Berkhampsted was directed to deliver them to Sonakin de Poperod;[c] but on 1 Hen. 3 (1217) he was restored to them on returning to his fealty.[d] He was dead in 13 Hen. 3 (1229), in which year his son Ralph de Chenduit paid 55 marks (£36. 13s. 4d.) for his relief, for eleven fees, of the small fees of Berkhampsted.[e] His son Stephen de Chenduit granted all his lands with pertinencies in the manor of Middeltone between Banbury and Brackley in Northamptonshire, together with the reversion of the capital messuage and all the tenements which William Paynel and Matilda (his wife) formerly wife of Ralph de Chenduit his father, held in dower of his inheritance, to

Walter de Merton bishop of Rochester, and his church or their assigns, to hold of the said Stephen and his heirs, or of the chief lord of the fee, at the option of the said Walter, by service of half a fee, for suit of court and all other services customs and demands.[f]

CHENDUIT OF MIDDLETON CHENDUIT.

Walter de Merton was consecrated bishop of Rochester in Oct. 1274 (2 Edw. 1) and by the inquisition after his death in 6 Edw. 1 (1278) was found to die siesed of a messuage, two carucates of land in demesne, &c. in Middleton, worth £20 yearly, held of Stephen de Chenduit by service unknown, leaving Christiana de Wortinges his sister, Agnes de Ewelle, wife of Thomas Taylard his niece, and Peter de la Clyve, Richard Olyver, and Alan de Portnewe his nephews, his heirs of full age,[h] who, it is presumed, claimed possession; for Stephen de Chenduit made another and more special grant, remission, and quit claim to the episcopal successor of Merton, John de Bradfield, of all the manor of Middeltone, together with all lands, rents, and tenements which Richard Tyboys then held for life of Matilda Paynel of her dower, and also of a virgate of land which Roger de Chenduit formerly held for life, to hold the said manor with homages, rents, wards, escheats, and with all knights fees and liberties thereto belonging, to the said bishop, and his successors, and his church or see for ever;[i] and in 9 Edw. 1 (1281) he still further confirmed his grant to the bishop by fine, levied in the presence of Matilda Paynel, and her lessee Richard Tyboys, for which acknowledgment or confirmation the bishop gave him a sparrow hawk.[j] Then follows a list of the fees belonging to the manor of Middleton from the roll of the earl of Cornwall, but the enumeration is evidently imperfect, as five fees and a half only are given, and it is expressly stated that there were eleven fees, each of which paid 2 marks for scutage, and were called small fees of (Morcanya) Moreton.[j]

On Wednesday after the feast of St. Dunstan 1280 (8 Edw. 1) sir John (de Bradfield) bishop of Rochester went to the earl of Cornwall in the chapter house of St. Paul's cathedral, London, and in the presence of Sir Salomon de Roffa and others, did homage to the said earl, which was not due from him, but fealty only for the manor of Middleton Chenduit; which homage the earl received from the bishop, and accepted the feoffment which Stephen de Chenduit his tenant made to Walter de Merton, the bishop's predecessor.[k] On Thursday after the feast of St. Luke 1283 (10 Edw. 1) mast. Thomas de Inglethorp, bishop of Rochester did fealty to the earl of Cornwall for the manor of Middleton Chenduit, at the New Temple church, London, in the presence of sir John de Kyrkeby and others. And it was adjudged by the said sir John and the council of the earl, in presence of many of the earl's knights, that the bishop should give the earl 50s. as for half a fee, because by the charter of feoffment it was held for half a fee. And, although the earl alleged that the bishop ought to do homage, sir John de Kyrkeby averred that no bishop, abbot, or other ecclesiastic ought to do homage but only fealty to the king. Thomas de Woldeham, bishop of Rochester 1291 (19 Edw. 1) did homage to Edmund earl of Cornwall, which he ought not to have done, but fealty because he was a bishop, and paid 50s. for relief.[k] By the inquisition after the death of Edmund earl of Cornwall in 28 Edw. 1 (1299) he was found to have died seised (int. al.) of certain fines or profits from views of frank pledge belonging to the honor of Berkhampsted composed of different baronies, amongst which the barony of Chenduit is specified as extending into Middleton, Charwelton, (West) Farndon, Hulcot, and Eston Neston, (Hanging) Houghton, Cosgrave, Furtho, Welton, and Thorp.[l] Bishop Hamo (de Hethe) elected to the see of Rochester in 1319 (12 Edw. 2) did fealty to the king in chancery at the monastery of St. Mary at York, in the presence of sir William de Clyf and others; the land having passed to the king by the death of the earl. And because he did fealty to the king, sir Hugh le Despencer junior, the king's chamberlain, extorted 100s. for his fee from the bishop, in violation of the great charter, which enacted that half a mark and no more should be paid for half a fee. It was admitted that archbishops, when they did fealty to the king for baronies, paid to the chamberlain £10, and bishops 100s. but the bishop of Rochester did fealty to the archbishop of Canterbury on his confirmation, and to the king only as to the prince, not for barony, as is contained in the charter of king John; and for which no fee was due to the chamberlain.[k]

This manor called Lower Middleton manor is still vested in the bishoprick of Rochester, and is demised on lease for three lives. The present lessee is Mr. William Wise, by purchase from the late Michael Wodhull, esq. of Thenford, in 1799. There are about 530 acres of copyhold, held of this manor. The following entry is usually inserted on the rolls of the manor at each court: "We find by ancient custom that at the death or alienation of every tenant of a customary tenement, an harriott is due; the widow is to have the tenement during her widowhood, paying at her entry one penny, and the heir is to have the tenement at the decease of the ancestor, or when the widow doth marry, paying at his entry one year's rent for a fine. The harriott taken is to be appraised by the neighbours tenants, and the executor or administrator it to chuse whether he will deliver the harriott or pay the money the same is appraised at, which is to be paid or tendered at the next court following according to the custom." In case the tenant dies without leaving a son, the eldest daughter takes in exclusion of her sisters; and the eldest sister of the tenant dying without issue, takes in exclusion of the other sisters.

GRENTEMAISNIL FEE.* HONOR OF WINCHESTER.† Godric held freely in the Saxon era an estate in "Mideltone" rated at 40s. yearly, and the value was not altered at the domesday survey, when it was held by Hugh under Hugh de Grentemaisnil. It contained two hides. The arable land was five carucates, of which one was in demesne, and nine villeins with a priest had three others, leaving one waste, or unaccounted for. There were twelve acres of meadow.[n]

On the partition of the honor of Leicester, of which the Grentemaisnil fee formed part, the paramouncy of this estate passed to what was subsequently termed the honor of Winchester; and in the book of knight's fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295) the prior of Ware, procurator general of the abbey of St. Ebrulf, answered for half a fee in Middleton of the fees of Elen la Zouch,[o] in whom that honor was then vested.†

ST. EBRULF ABBEY MANOR. In the hydarium of Hen. 2. the monks of St. Ebrulf were certified to hold two hides in "Middeltone,"[p] and as the Grentemaisnils, and Robert de Rothelent the mesne lord of the Chester fee here, were both great benefactors to the Norman abbey of St. Ebrulf,[q] this grant might be assigned to either with equal probability were it not for the tenure under Zouch as already cited, which fixes it indisputably to one of the Grentemaisnils or his feudatory. The abbot of St. Ebrulf in 1 Edw. 3 (1327) recovered seisin of common pasture belonging to his free tenements in Church Middleton and Marston St. Lawrence against Margery widow of John de Lyonns (of Warkworth) and others;[r] and in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) was summoned by writ of quo warranto to shew why he claimed view of frank pledge and wayf in his manors of "Midelton" and Warkworth, and view of frank pledge in Byfield and Woodford, when he pleaded prescription; the jury presented, that his predecessors had exercised those privileges, and that beasts when taken as wayfs were not appropriated before the end of the year, nor without the accustomed proclamations being made in markets, fairs, and churches; but, it appearing that offenders against the assize of bread and beer were punished by fine of 2s. instead of the legal punishment of tumbril and pillory, the view was taken into the king's hands, but restored again for a fine of half a mark.[s] On the suppression of the alien priories in 2 Hen. 5 (1414) the English possessions of the abbey of St. Ebrulf were transferred by the king to the house of St. Jesus of Bethlehem of Shene or Richmond in Surrey, which he had recently founded.‡ After the dissolution, the manor of Middleton Cheney, parcel of the late priory of Shene, was granted (int. al.) in 34 Hen. 8 (1542-3) to

Sir John Williams and Anthony Stringer;[t] the former of whom had licence to alienate it in 35 Hen. 8 (1543) to Hugh Taylor and Fulk Botry,[u] of Marston, gent. who released his interest a few months after to Taylor, by whose family, I presume, it was sold to the Holmans of WARKWORTH. In 1799 this manor was purchased from the late Francis Eyre, esq. of Warkworth, by William Horton, esq. of London, the present proprietor.

CHESTER FEE, or HONOR OF CHESTER.§ At the domesday survey Robert held of earl Hugh (of Chester) four parts of two hides in "Mideltone," within the soke or jurisdiction of Sutton. The arable land was four carucates, of which two were in demesne, and eight villeins had one carucate, leaving one waste or unaccounted for. There were eight acres of meadow. The whole had been, and was still valued at £3 yearly.[x]

In 27 Hen. 3 (1242) Philip Basset was returned to hold a third of a fee in Middelton, of the fees of the earl of Arundel of the honor of Chester.[y] By the inquisition after the death of Ralph Basset of Drayton‖ in 17 Edw. 3 (1343) Giles, son and heir of William de St. John, was found to hold of him half a fee in Middleton Chenduit;[z] and in 2 Ric. 2 (1378) Ralph Basset was found to hold this half fee of the late prince of Wales and earl of Chester.[a]

COURCY or ST. JOHN MANOR. Robert de Rothelent § the domesday mesne lord dying without issue, his lands escheated to the paramount lord. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 William Meschines was certified to have a hide and a half and a small virgate in "Middelton" of the fee of William de Curcy[b] or Courci. I suspect, the true reading should be the late William Meschines, as he was certainly dead prior to 14 Hen. 2 (1167), when his grandson William de Curci certified his barony.[c] The descent of the barony of Curci and Meschines through Alicia his daughter and heiress, wife of Warine Fitz Gerold, has been introduced under FARTHINGHO, and a conjectural position assigned to John de Curcy, who distinguished himself in the invasion of Ireland, was in 1181 created earl of Ulster by Henry II., and is erroneously represented as son and heir of the above William de Courcy in the Irish peerages.[d] Though this statement is negatived by the evidence of public records, there is no reason to doubt his being the son of a contemporary William de Curci, and his connection with this family is rendered almost certain by his being enfeoffed in the Courcy lands here. John de Curcy granted to Robert Bruton two virgates of land in "Midelton" attested (int. al.) by Jordan de Curcy,[e] his brother; and by another deed he gave the virgate of land in Midelton, which William de Stanes held, to Canons Ashby priory.[f] He had a grant from Hen. 2 of all the land in Ireland which he should gain by his sword, reserving no other return than homage and fealty, and having conquered the province of Ulster, to strengthen himself against his enemies, and to secure the alliance of Godred, king of the Isle of Man, he proposed to marry his daughter, and was accepted.[g] A transcript of the marriage settlement is preserved in the cartulary of Canons Ashby priory, and exhibits, perhaps one of the earliest and most curious instances now extant of the ancient custom of endowing the wife "ad ostium ecclesiæ." John de Curci by this deed gave granted and confirmed to Alfrice his spouse in dower, at the church door when he lawfully received her to wife, all the land of "Clanfathelan," except fifteen carucates of land which he gave to the monks of "Furnesea" [Furness in Lancashire]; two knights' fees in "Clencostra, & Clanfergelan, & Dunetht'b'r;" the third part of "Imsevene," in which third part she should have "Wuemtholla & Ingavencaho," and added to her from his nearest land, that she might have all the third part of "Imsevene;" and the third part of "Cul in Chuesbert," in which third part she should have "Ballimacgilleolem and Laganclunnedalib," and the isle which is called "Incheomeran," and in "Louth Equen & Thueth," and in "Lethkathel Kenilleman & Clanfergus & Belbide & Farduth Ibeg," with all their pertinencies, and in "Huneath Clankelie," and added to her that she might have all the third part of all his demesne of all "Ultonie" or Ulster; and also all his land which he had in "Middiltun" with all its pertinancies; all which lands he gave her at the church door on the day that he espoused her, free and quit from all claims; and willed and firmly commanded that the said Alfrice his spouse should hold and possess all the said lands in frank dower, freely and quietly, honorably wholly and fully, in monasteries, chapels and tithes, in wood and plain, in meadows and pastures, in waters and mills, in ponds and rivers, in ways and paths, in salt and fresh waters and in mosses and moors, in fisheries and fishes, and in all liberties, with soc and sac, and thol and theam, and "infangtheof in furcis and fossis & ferro & duello"[g]—or the privilege of trying felons taken within her fee, and of having gallows for the purpose of hanging male, and pits for drowning female criminals; and the power of subjecting the accused to the fiery ordeals of burning irons or heated plow-shares, and to the ordeal of duel or single combat. John de Curci by the machinations of Hugh de Lacy was suspected of treasonable disaffection towards king John. His province of Ulster was given to his rival and accuser; and the barons of Ulster delivered hostages for his appearance in England within a limited time.[h] In the interim the king and Philip Augustus king of France agreed to the decision of their respective titles to the duchy of Normandy by single combat. The French king was provided with a champion, but no one volunteered on the part of the English king to answer the challenge. One of the courtiers intimated that John de Curci was the best qualified to enter the list, if he would undertake it, and the king by writ dated at "Geitinton" or Geddington in this county 1 Sept. (1204) demanded him of the barons of Ulster, and on their assent granted him safe conduct.[i] Twice he refused compliance with the king's wishes, but the third time an appeal being made to his patriotism, he replied, that for the honor of his country, though not for the king who had ungratefully requited his services, he would hazard his life. At the day appointed the two combatants appeared in the presence of the kings of England, France, and Scotland, but the French champion, alarmed at the formidable aspect of his opponent and the size of his sword, set spurs to his horse and fled when the trumpet sounded the last charge; and victory was consequently adjudged to the earl. The French king being desirous of a proof of the prodigious strength which was ascribed to him, the earl directed an helmet full faced with mail to be set upon a coat of mail and placed on a block of wood, which with one blow he smote asunder, and struck his sword so deep into the wood that none present could extricate it with both hands, though at the first effort he instantly disengaged it with one hand. King John, in the warmth of his gratitude to the earl, not only restored him to his titles and estates, but offering to confer on him any other mark of distinction in his power, the earl desired that he and the heirs male of his family, might have the privilege, after their first obeisance, to be covered in the royal presence of him and his successors, kings of England, which privilege was granted, and has been lineally transmitted to his descendants, barons of Kinsale, to the present time.[h] He died in France about 1210 (12 Joh.), but Milo de Curci his son could not obtain restitution of the earldom of Ulster from Hugh de Lacy, who forcibly retained it under the pretext that the grant to him remained in force, as the earl had never returned into Ireland to reverse his outlawry. The barony of Kinsale was however given to Milo by Henry 3, and the tenure requiring his residence in Ireland he is said to have relinquished his English possessions.[h] Alfrice, widow of John de Curcy, did not procure the writ for her dower in Ireland till 3 Hen. 3 (1218);[k] prior to which she had married and buried her second husband

Warine Fitz Gerold,* who, with her consent, had confirmed to Canons Ashby priory, for a palfrey, the virgate of land in "Middilton" which John de Curcy had given them.[l] In 2 Hen. 3 (1218) *Fulk de Breant did homage for all the lands he had in marriage with Margaret, daughter and heiress of Warine Fitz Gerold,[m] widow of Baldwin de Riparüis;* and in 8 Hen. 3 (1224) the king commanded the sheriff of Northamptonshire to commit to Paul de Teydon the corn in "Middleton" belonging to Colin de Lincot;[n] and also land in "Middleton Curcy" to the value of £10 yearly, held by the said Colin, of the gift of Fulk de Breant.[n]

In the Testa de Nevill about 21 Hen. 3 (1236) Philip Basset was found to hold the fourth of a fee in "Middelton & Atteneston" of the barony of Margaret de Riparüis,[o] of the honor of Chester, besides the third of a fee which he held in "Middelton," immediately of the earl of Arundel, of the same honor.[p]

William de Odyngsels junior,† by deed s. d. granted to Nicholas his brother all the donation which William de Odyngsels their father made to them, of lands, rents, homages, services, &c. in "Middleton juxta Banbury;"[q] and in the book of knights' fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295) Nicholas de Odingsels answered for the fourth of a fee in Middleton of the fees of the countess of Albemarle,[r] grand daughter of Margaret de Riparüis.* William de Oddingseles son and heir of the late sir Nicholas de Oddingseles, by deed in May 3 Edw. 2 (1310) sealed with his arms, Erm. on a fesse three escallop shells, in chief two mullets, quit claimed to

William de St. John,[t] who in 1 Edw. 3 (1327) obtained a charter for free warren in Plumpton, Blakesley, Morton (Pinkeney), and Middleton.[u] In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) he was summoned by writ of quo warranto to shew why he claimed view of frank pledge and wayf in his manor of "Chirche Middleton," when he recited the title from Odingsels, and pleaded prescription from his antecessors. The jurors presented that he was entitled to, and legally exercised, the privilege of wayf, but punished offenders against the assize of bread and beer by fine of 12d. instead of the legal punishment of pillory and tumbril; the view was therefore taken into the king's hands, but restored to him for half a mark.[t] In 44 Edw. 3 (1370) Isabella, widow of sir William St. John of Plumpton covenanted to settle her life interest in the manor of Middleton Chenduit, which she held in dower, on John de Lyons, son and heir of sir John de Lyons of Warkworth, in free marriage with Margaret her daughter.[x] He died without issue; and in 16 Ric. 2 (1392) Isabella, widow of sir William St. John of Plumpton, demised to

William Harwedon of Harwedon or Harrowden Magna and Margery his wife, daughter and heiress of her son sir Giles St. John deceased, all her right in the manor of her late husband in "Middleton Chenduit" for an annuity of 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.) with a covenant of entry, in default of payment on their lands in Harrowden, Wolde, "Thyngdon" (Finedon) and elsewhere.[y] John Okeden, prior of the house of the salutation of the mother of God, of the order of Carthusians near London, and the convent of the said place, by deed in Nov. 1 Hen. 4 (1399) appointed the prior of Chacomb, sir John Chetwode and others, their attornies, to take seisin of the manor of "Middleton Cheyne" which "Isabelle Seynt Jon" then held for life, with reversion to them and their successors;[z] and by another deed in Nov. 4 Hen. 4 (1402) reciting that William Harwedon of Magna Harwedon and Margery his wife, in right of Margery, hold the manor of "Middleton Cheynduit juxta Warkworth" to the said Margery in fee tail, with reversion to them and their successors if she die without issue, as by divers fines, charters, and other muniments more fully appear, they, in consideration of £40 remised and quit claimed all their right to the said William Harwedon in fee.[z]

From the Harwedons this manor descended by the same title as Plumpton to sir Edmund Knightley,* who sold it (int. al.) to king Henry 8th,[a] and it remained in the crown till 31 Aug. 1 Edw. 6 (1547), when it was granted to "the truly great man, the father of the reformation in England,"

Thomas Cranmer archbishop of Canterbury,[b] who two days afterwards had licence to alienate it to

Anthony Stringer of London gent.[c] by whom it was sold 22 Apr. 5 Edw. 6 (1551) to

John Blencowe ("Blynckoo") of Marston St. Lawrence, gent.[d] who, on the 30th of the same month re-sold the manor of "Middleton Cheyney" late parcel of the possessions of sir Edmund Knightley, with the lands thereto belonging, to

Thomas Parrys alias Taylor of Middleton Cheney, yeoman.[d] His descendants alienated nearly all the lands; but in Mar. 1740-1, John Parrys alias Taylor of Middleton Cheney, yeoman, son and heir of Richard Parrys alias Taylor, son and heir of John Parrys alias Taylor, son and heir of Thomas Parrys alias Taylor, yeoman, the purchaser, conveyed the manor or reputed manor of "Middleton Cheney" with all its rights members and pertinences heretofore belonging to sir Edmund Knightley, and afterwards to John Blencowe, gent. to

John Welchman of Banbury in Oxfordshire, gent.;[d] and in Jan. 1770 John Welchman of Brackley, gent. conveyed it to the late

Michael Wodhull, esq. of Thenford;[d] from whom it has passed with his other estates to Samuel Amy Severne, esq.

Canons Ashby Priory Lands have been anticipated under the Courcy manor. After the dissolution they were granted (int. al.) in 34 Hen. 8 (1532-3) to sir John Williams and Anthony Stringer.[e]

The Manor Houses cannot now be identified.

Ancient Custom. Bridges says, 'It is a custom here to strew the church in summer with hay gathered from six or seven swaths in Ash meadow, which have been given for this purpose. The rector finds straw in winter.'[f] This custom is now discontinued, and fell into disuse probably on the inclosure.

The Village, which is about three miles from Banbury on the turnpike road to Brackley, occupies a considerable portion of ground, and is divided into Upper or Church Middleton and Lower Middleton. 'And this distinction,' says Bridges, 'appears to have subsisted as early as the reign of Henry 2. In Upper Middleton, where the church stands, are three score and five families. In Nether Middleton, which lies about a quarter of a mile distant towards the east, are eighty families.'[g] By the census of 1801, Middleton Cheney contained 226 houses and 1153 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 240 houses, and 1172 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 283 houses, and 1398 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £147. 17s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £5088. The poors' rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £2327. 0s. 5d. at 13s. in the £. Tammy making and other branches of the woollen manufacture were carried on here to a considerable extent within the last twenty years; and since their decline, stocking frames have been partially introduced. The wake is kept on the Sunday preceding All Saints day.

The Advowson attended St. Ebrulf's abbey manor till the dissolution of religious houses. In 36 Hen. 8 (1544) it was granted to William Belfeld, esq.;[h] and passing by mesne conveyances to the Yate family, was given by the rev. Dr. Thomas Yate, patron and rector, to Brasen-nose College, Oxford,[i] of which he was principal; and it remains vested in the principal and fellows of that college.

The Rectory is in the deanery of Brackley. In the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3) it is rated at 25 marks (£16. 13s. 4d.) per ann. deducting a yearly pension of 24s. to the prior of Ware;[k] and the same in the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) with the further deduction of 20s. yearly to the prior of Ware for a portion of tithes.[l] In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it is valued at £34. 13s. 8d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton, and an annual pension of 52s. to the prior and convent of Shene.[m] This pension was granted out after the dissolution, and in the time of Bridges was paid to the lady Bathurst.[n] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified Middleton Cheney to be a rectory worth £130 yearly, in the alternate patronage of sir John Dryden of Canons Ashby, bart. Edward Gibbs of Watergall in Warwickshire, esq. and sir William Kingsmill of Sydmerston in Hampshire, kt.; and that John Cave was incumbent.[o] The rectory now consists of 214 a. 3 r. 15 p. including roads, allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the glebe land, and of all the tithes of the open fields and small old inclosures in Middleton, properly so called; and also of 126 a. 2 r. 21 p. exclusive of roads, allotted by the commissioners for inclosing Warkworth in lieu of the tithes of that portion of Warkworth called Middleton Tything, and in exchange for an old inclosure called Franklow.

The rectory house is a respectable residence east of the church-yard. It was rebuilt by Dr. Meare, principal of Brasen-nose college, but has been enlarged and improved by the present incumbent.

Rectors. "Radulphus parsona de Midelton," is one of the witnesses to the foundation charter of Chacombe priory [p] between 1180 and 1205; and to a grant to Wroxton priory in Oxfordshire [q] subsequent to 1230.

Mast. Henry de Hales, by the prior of Ware, procurator general of the abbot and convent of St. Ebrulf 1235.

Adam de Fileby.

Robert de Fileby, subdeacon 8 Sept. 1273. He had the prebend of Preston in Hereford cathedral about 1277,[r] which he vacated about 1282.

Walter de Wermyngton, already noticed under Byfield. He had also the prebend sexaginta solidorum, in Lincoln 1305, which he quitted for Leighton manor before 1310.

Henry de Wermyngton, chaplain, 29 Apr. 1298, exchanged for the rectory of Weston Favell with John de Benyngton or Benyton, 29 July 1320. He exchanged for the vicarage of Dallington with Willam de Edyngdon, priest, 5 Apr. 1327, who had previously held the rectory of Cottingham. In 1345 he was as well by royal favour as papal provision raised from the prebend of Leighton Manor, in Lincoln, to the bishoprick of Winchester, having a few months before been made lord treasurer, when a new coinage was struck under his direction, of diminished weight and augmented value, a plausible but dangerous experiment which is said to have deranged and unsettled the price of commodities for a long time afterwards. He was made lord chancellor and the vacant seal delivered to him 19 Feb. 1357-8. On the death of archbishop Islip in 1366 he was elected to succeed him, but declined the honor, with the sarcastic remark, said to have been used afterwards by bishop Fox, that, if Canterbury had the higher rank, Winchester had the deeper manger. A better reason was, that with encreasing years and declining health, he perceived his end approaching and died before the year ended 7 Oct. 1366. He was interred at Edington, Wilts, the place of his nativity, and had also a splendid tomb erected to his memory in his cathedral at Winchester, where his epitaph, of better sense than latinity, represents him as mild and prudent, a vigilant guardian of the rights of the people, the father and protector of the poor; to whom, as a contemporary writer says, he gave in his life time nearly all he had.

Like his successor, Wykeham, whom he ordained, Edyngdon was a great builder. The church which he built at Edington, is esteemed at this day, one of the handsomest private churches in the kingdom, "and, an able judge in these matters, who had no hypothesis to serve, having pronounced that the church at Middleton was built in his time, and probably while he was rector, I please myself," says the present venerable incumbent, "with thinking that the beautiful east window, and the curious porch, a sharply pointed arch of solid stone, are early specimens of the ingenuity and taste of bishop Edyngdon." The chapel of St. Stephen's, Westminster, founded by Stephen in honor of the proto martyr of that name, was rebuilt and made collegiate for a dean and twelve canons in 1347 by Edward III., who perhaps in constructing that beautiful edifice, availed himself of the skill and taste of bishop Edyngdon, as he is known to have done in framing regulations for the new establishment, whence in the register of St. Stephen's, still extant, he is gratefully recorded as "conditor statutorum." Contemporary with this royal foundation in its renovated state, and similar in form, was an institution by Edingdon himself, who, when he had built the beautiful church at Edington, Wilts, the place of his nativity, and whence he had his name, established in it about the year 1347 a dean and twelve ministers, whereof part were prebendaries; but he afterwards changed them at the desire of the Black Prince into a reformed sort of friers of the order of St. Austin called Bonhommes, who were settled here under the government of a rector. He was succeeded in the see of Winchester by the famous William of Wykeham; as he had been long before in the rectory of Middleton, by one, of whom nothing is known but the name of

Adam de Aylineton, priest, 13 July 1335.

John Geraud, acolyte, 17 May 1349.

Richard de Selby, chaplain by the king, 25 Feb 1349-50. He was previously rector of Alderton.

John Robtot, rector of East Hendred, Berkshire, 1 Oct. 1417.[y]
Sir Wynnot Chamberlayn, priest, 20 Sept. 1421. He exchanged for the rectory of St. Christopher's London, with Walter Adam, priest, 23 July 1433,[y] who exchanged for the prebend of Asgarby, Lincoln, with William Scrop, priest, 31 Aug. 1437.[y]
Henry Huslapp, priest, 2 Sept. 1448.
Henry de Grene, 18 Oct. 1452, already noticed under Boddington. He was installed in the prebend of Marston St. Laurence 1450, and resigned before Apr. 1453;[z] and the same or another of both his names was collated to the prebend of Flixton, Lichfield, 1459, and died before Jan. 1472.[a] On his resignation
William Faldingworth, priest, 8 May 1453. He was presented to Rowsham, in Oxfordshire, in 1462-3,[b] and had the prebend of Sutton in the Marsh, Lincoln, which he resigned in 1486.[c] He exchanged this benefice for Gayton in the Marsh, Lincolnshire, with Mast. John Tristhorp, priest, 20 Sept. 1461. He was of Linc. coll. Oxf. of which college he was chosen rector in Feb. 1460, and died before Feb. 1479. He exchanged Middleton for the vicarage of Newark, Nottinghamshire, with Mast. Nicholas Langton, priest, 1477, previously noticed as Master of Aynho hospital. On his decease Mast. James Benet, A. M. 17 Oct. 1478. An agreement about tithes in Middleton and Warkworth, was made between him and the monastery of Shene in 1479.[d] He resigned on condition of receiving a pension of £16 yearly, in favor of Mast. John Goderiche, B. D. 7 Nov. 1509,[e] who resigned his fellowship of Oriel Coll. Oxf. for this living. Either he, or a contemporary of both names, was rector of Hadley, Essex, 1515, and probably was of kin to Thomas Goderiche, bishop of Ely, one of the compilers of the liturgy. On his decease Oswald Stannaker, was presented by Thomas Wilkes, of London, and inst. 26 June 1544.
Edward Browne, inst. 22 Jan. 1571, and buried here 1 Feb. 1579-80,[f] but had previously resigned, for William Wood, rector of Plumpton, was inst. 4 Mar. 1579, on the presentation of sir Walter Mildmay, vice Ralph Taylor deceased. He was buried here 4 Oct. 1633.[f] But, his successor
Thomas Yate, A. M. was inst. 30 Sept. preceding—probably in the interval between his death and interment—on the presentation of the king, p. h. v. He was re-inst. 3 Nov. 1639, his title being contested by William Kingsmill, esq. on whose presentation
Edward Hasell, A. M. was inst. 10 Dec. 1640 vice William Wood deceased. The final decision however was in favor of Thomas Yate, who was a third time inst. 19 Aug. 1642. He endured many hardships we are told in his living at Middleton, until 1646, when he was totally dispossessed of it, which was the more to be lamented, says the historian, "because he had prepared stone, timber, &c. to build a parsonage house there, but his successor with a meanness of spirit peculiar to the party, sold the materials, and contented himself with fitting up an old malt house."[g] In 1648, when Dr. Radcliffe, the aged and infirm principal of Brasen-nose, whom, grievously sick as he was, neither the threats nor the promises of the parliamentary visitors could prevail upon to betray his trust, and resign the headship, had vacated it by death, the fellows of the college, prevented from holding an election (as the statutes require) in the chapel, contrived to meet in a retired chamber, and unanimously elected Mr. Yate 13 July 1648. Mr. Yate having been ejected,
John Cave took possession of the church of Middleton Cheney 9 June 1646, and signs the register commonly as "rector" till Sept. 1658, when two blank leaves follow. Of Cave nothing more has been discovered but that he was related to the Oxford antiquary A. Wood, who in April 1649, visiting his relations at Stoke Lyne near Bistre, went thence with a large party, two coaches full, to Middleton Cheney, "to visit his cozen John Cave and those of his family." He continued there two or three days, in which time he took his rambles to Banbury and to Warkworth, and speaks with feeling of the "woful" havoc which the war had made in the antiquities of the place; for of 60 coats of arms that were in the windows of the very fair church of Banbury before the war began, only 12 or 13 were then to be seen.[h] On the restoration of the king, justice returned with him, and
Dr. Yate was restored to this rectory, and the headship of Brasen-nose, where he presided as principal almost one and twenty years, and dying in 1681 in his 79th year, is justly characterised in his epitaph—as well from his wise and paternal regimen as from various acts of permanent munificence—as the father and patron of the college, "et tertius tantum non fundator." One of his donations to the college was the living of Middleton Cheney, to which he had presented his brother
Samuel Yate, who was inst. 8 May 1678, and who had been curate from the restoration. He was buried here 7 Apr. 1693,[f] and John Meare, of Brasen-nose coll. Oxf. A. M. 1671, B. and D. D. 1684, was presented by the rector of Lincoln college, p. h. v. and inst. 10 Apr. 1693. He was a native of Cheshire; succeeded his predecessor in this living Dr. Yate, as principal of Brasen-nose college in 1681, and for some time held the rectory of Rollwright, Oxfordshire with his headship. In 1697 he was vice-chancellor of the university. He died 10 May, and was buried 18 May 1710, when Thomas Stanley, A. M. another native of Cheshire, was presented by the principal and fellows of Brasen-nose college, and inst. 19 July following. He was also rector of Begbrook, Oxfordshire. On his decease Richard Garnett, A. M. was inst. 14 Jan. 1739-40. He was buried here 5 May 1764,[f] and Herbert Mayo, D. D. was inst. two days after, but re-

Charles Everard, A. M. rector of Gretworth, was inst. 17 July 1764, and afterwards adopted the name of Booth on succeeding in 1786 to the estate of his uncle Thomas Booth of Twemlowe, Cheshire, esq.[k] He was also rector of Llangarn, Wales, and prebendary of York and Salisbury. He died 7 Mar. 1792,[k] and on the 14th of the same month was instituted

Ralph Churton, A. M. whose liberality has contributed a plate of the church to the embellishment of this work, and whose kindness has assisted me in the notices of his predecessors. The bishop of Limerick (Dr. Jebb) has characterised his memoir of Dr. Townson as an admirable biographical sketch, uniting the fine simplicity of Isaak Walton with the classic elegance of Lowth. His various writings, both theological and biographical, bear the impress of a conscientious devotedness to principle, under the guidance of a cultivated taste, and a sound understanding. He has published, Bampton Lectures; eight Sermons on the prophecies respecting the destruction of Jerusalem, preached before the Univ. of Oxford, 1785, 8vo. The Will of God the ground and principle of civil as well as religious obedience; a Sermon preached before the Univ. of Oxford 25 Oct. 1789, 8vo. Archdeacon of Richmond and rector of Malpas, Cheshire, &c. prefixed to "a Discourse on the Evangelical History from the Interment to the Ascension," published after Dr. T.'s death by John Loveday, esq. D. C. L. Oxford, 1793. This memoir has been twice reprinted, in 1810 prefixed to an edition of Dr. Townson's Works, 2 vols. 8vo., and in 1828 with a private impression of "Practical Discourses," by the same author, edited by the present bishop of Limerick. It is now in the press for the fourth time, the latter works being in process of re-printing. The duty of maintaining primitive Truth; a Sermon preached before the district committee of the archdeaconry of Coventry 1 July, 1819. He was born at Bichley in Cheshire 9 Dec. 1754; entered at Brasen Nose college Oxford in 1772; and elected fellow in 1778; appointed Whitehall preacher by bishop Porteus in 1788; presented by his college to the rectory of Middleton Cheney in 1792; which he holds with the archdeaconry of St. David's, to which he was collated by bishop Burgess in 1805.

The Registers commence in 1558.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, stands near the middle of the village, and is a handsome edifice, consisting of a tower (containing six bells) and spire, nave, north aisle, south aisle, porch, chapel, and chancel. The tower, spire, and clerestory are of perpendicular character about the time of Henry VI. The west door of the tower is highly enriched, presenting a crocketted ogee arch, and finial, which enters into a cornice with demi angels holding shields: the architrave mouldings, which are bold, run down the sides nearly to the ground, and one of the principal is charged with a series of roses. The spandrils are ornamented with trefoil-headed arches, and at each side is a statuary niche and canopy, with one of the statues remaining. Over all is a deep square headed dripstone, connecting with the cornice. Above it is a handsome window of three lights, and the tower is crowned by pierced battlements with lofty crocketted pinnacles at the angles. The spire is banded near the centre, and rises to the height of fifty yards. It has been three times struck with lightning, and it is remarkable that the electric fluid each time escaped at the east window of the north aisle. The first time was on the 18th Dec. 1720, when some of the stones and iron were carried beyond the parsonage into what is now the glebe. The second time, 13 June 1794, fragments of the stones were thrown against the opposite house near the corner of the church yard, south of the spire. The third time, 28th June 1797, the smoke issued out at the upper apertures of the spire, as from a furnace. The aisles and chancel are of the decorated style, and probably erected as previously hinted by William de Edyngdon. The south porch is of very peculiar and almost unique construction, no other specimen being known except the one already mentioned in the neighbouring church of Chacomb, probably by the same architect. It is entirely of ashler stone, the roof having neither wood, brick, slate, or tile about it, but composed of stones sloping to an angle unusually acute. The tower is 14 ft. 8 in. square; the nave is 54 ft. the north aisle 49 ft. 10 in. and the south aisle 52 ft. 5 in. long, the nave 15 ft. 9 in. and the aisles 12 ft. each wide; the chancel 41 ft. 2 in. by 15 ft. 9 in.; and the south chapel 25 ft. by 10 ft. 8 in. The interior is paved with Hornton stone, and in addition to the pews there are north and west galleries. A neat octagonal font stands near the western pillar of the south aisle. The aisles are characteristic of the same style as the exterior; being uniformly divided from the nave by four lofty arches on clustered pillars with circular bases, and capitals of plain mouldings following the contours of the shafts: a dripstone is continued round both faces of the arches, springing from corbel heads—two of which on the south face of one of the southern arches are portraits of the contemporary king, probably Edward III. and the bishop. The chancel is entered under a handsome wooden screen. In the south wall is a piscina under a triangular pediment. In the north wall is a square locker. with a smaller one inside. The vestiary on the north side of the chancel has also a piscina.

II. Against the south wall, on a tablet of white marble:

RICHARD GARNETT, A: M:
Rector of this Parish 24 years who died May the fifth 1764,
Aged sixty six,
He was born at Farnworth
in the parish of Prescott
Lancashire.
By will to different charitable uses he gave one thousand Pounds.
To ornament this Chancel fifty;
to the Poor of this Parish one hundred and fifty.

Bridges records the following inscription now obliterated.

Hic jacet D'n's Willielmus Baron capellanus qui obiit XII die Junii Anno d'ni milessimo cccc secundo, cujus anime propitietur Deus, Amen.

THE PARTICULAR OR CALVINISTIC BAPTISTS have a neat chapel in Upper Middleton, 40 ft. 7 in. long by 38 ft. 7 in. wide, erected of stone in 1806. Adjoining to it is a house and garden appropriated to the officiating minister.

BENEFACTIONS. (p. 541.)—TAYLOR'S CHARITY. William Taylor of Banbury gent. by deed 29 Mar. 1622, conveyed to twelve trustees half a yard land, which he had purchased of Fulk Botry, esq. for £100, in trust for the relief of the poor of Middleton Cheney at the discretion of the rector and churchwarden for the time being. The estate now consists of about 19 a. allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the original land, and is let, together with somewhat less than an acre appropriated to the repair of the church, at £50 per ann. The rent, deducting £2. 10s. per ann. for the value of the church land, is distributed yearly in sums varying from 1s. to 15s. according to the number of persons in each poor family.

HALL'S CHARITY. Joyce Hall, widow, by will 6 Feb. 1657, devised a messuage and small close adjoining, &c. at Northend in the parish of Burton Dasset, Warwickshire, in trust for the rents to be equally divided between the poor of Cropedy in Oxfordshire, and of Middleton Cheney, at the discretion of the incumbents of the said parishes for the time being. This charity estate now consists of "three tenements and something better than an acre of land" at Northend, and is let at £12 per ann. one moiety of which is yearly distributed to the poor of Middleton in "sums of 2s. and under."

GARNETT'S CHARITY. The rev. Richard Garnett, rector of Middleton, by will 4 May 1764, bequeathed £200 in trust, £50 to be delivered to the churchwardens for erecting an altar piece, and purchasing communion plate, and the interest of the remaining £150 to be given yearly at the discretion of the rector for the time being, one moiety in money or books of piety, and the other in clothes amongst poor persons of the parish. This bequest was invested in 1793 in the purchase of £200, 3 per cent. consols, and the dividends £6 per ann. are yearly distributed in clothes among poor children attending a charity school in the place; books being provided for the children from other sources.

THE SCHOOL HOUSE was built about 1752, and enlarged in 1816. It is now in connection with the National School society, and educates about eighty boys by voluntary subscription.

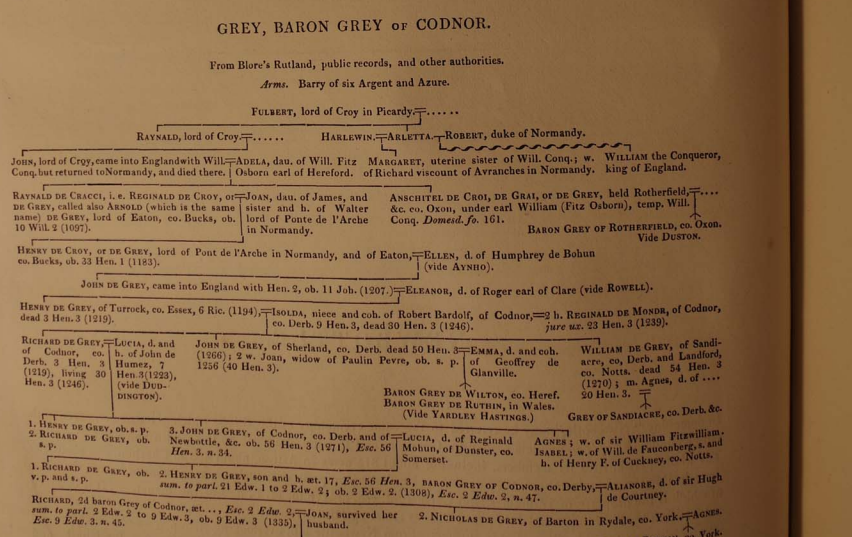
A small piece of land in the Hog market in Banbury, 16 ft. long by 14 ft. wide, with a shop on it, belonged immemorially to the poor of Middleton Cheney, and was let in 1663 for 99 years at 4*s. per ann.* but since the expiration of the lease it has been ascertained that the identical spot was part of an ironmonger's shop with rooms over it, and it has been recently exchanged for a close of land rather less than an acre on the road from Banbury to Thorp Mandeville, let for £2 per ann. and a small cottage in Lower Middleton, let for £1. 5*s. per ann.*

Battle, 6 May 1643. The earl of Northampton having received information of a considerable body of Parliamentarians being at Culworth meditating an attack on Banbury, of which he was governor, drew out his forces towards Bodicot within a mile of the town, where he saw the enemy about seven hundred foot and four or five troops of horse on the opposite side of the river; and sent a detachment commanded by capt. Trist to face them and keep them in action. The earl then advanced with all his cavalry about ten or twelve troops, and found the enemy in a close body in Middleton Cheney town field, where they made a stand, and after firing on the earl with their brass piece, they gave him a very hot volley of musket shot, when he charged them in front, sergeant major Daniel on the right wing, and capt. Trist on the left, and routed them. But to avoid the former errors of too rashly pursuing the fugitive horse, the earl charged their foot and totally defeated them; killed two hundred and seventeen on the spot, and took above three hundred prisoners with their ordnance and ammunition, four hundred and sixteen muskets, one hundred and fifty pikes, and nearly five hundred swords. The earl lost only three men! and none of any note, nor any officer so much as wounded except major Daniel slightly in the leg.[l] Forty six soldiers were buried here the day following 7 May 1643.[m]

NEWBOTTLE,

In domesday "Niwebotle," may be referred to the same etymology as the village which gives name to Newbottle Grove hundred.* The hamlets of Astrop, Charlton, and Purston, are partly in this parish and partly in Sutton. The whole parish, with its members, including about 315 acres in Astrop, about 425 in Charlton, and about 320 acres in Purston, contains about 1670 acres. Newbottle, properly so called, contains about 610 acres, the whole of which is the property of William Ralph Cartwright, esq. of Aynho, M. P. lord of the manor. It is bounded on the north by Farthingho and Middleton Cheney; east by Hinton; south by Aynho; and west by King's Sutton. The lordship is agreeably diversified in surface. From Newbottle hill, overlooking Astrop, is an extensive view, in which the three spires characterized by the local adage of "Adderbury for strength, Bloxham for length, and King's Sutton for beauty," are interesting and prominent objects. The lordship is nearly divided between arable and pasture; the former is for the most part light turnip-land, and the latter a strong clay.

[l] King's Pamphlets, 107. art. 1. Mercurius Aulicus, &c. [m] Par. Reg. * Vide Newbottle.



MANORIAL HISTORY. GRENTEMAISNIL FEE.* HONOR OF LEICESTER.† "Niwebotle," with soc and sac, belonged to Baldwin in the Saxon era. At the domesday survey Ivo held it with its appendages of Hugh de Grentemaisnil as six hides. The arable land was fifteen carucates, of which three and a half were in demesne with eight servants; and four were in the hands of a knight, twelve villeins, and four bordars: leaving no less than seven and a half waste or unaccounted for. There were seven maidens; and seven acres of meadow. The whole had been rated at £4 yearly, but was then raised to £6.[a]

MANOR. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 it was certified that William de Le Pyn, or Pinu, had held, and Regis de Reynes then held, six hides and one small virgate in "Newbottle" of the fee of the earl of Leicester.[b] In the succeeding reign, as may be inferred from a plea for the advowson, the manor was in the possession of Richard (Humez), whose granddaughter Lucia carried it in marriage to Richard de Grey, who in the Testa de Nevill about 27 Hen. 3 (1242) was certified to hold one fee in Newbottle and Purston of the fees of Simon de Montfort of the honor of Leicester.[c] John de Grey died in 56 Hen. 3 (1271) seised (int. al.) of Newbottle manor, parcel of the honor of Leicester, leaving Henry de Grey, lord Grey of Codnor, Derbyshire, his son and heir, aged seventeen years,[d] who in 25 Edw. 1 (1296) was found to hold three fees and a half in Newbottle, (King's) Sutton, Charlton, and Byfield, of the late Edmund earl of Lancaster[e] and Leicester. In 29 Edw. I. (1300) he bound himself to Robert Fitz Pagan or Fitz Pain under a penalty of £10,000 not to sell or alienate the manor of Newbottle, and certain other manors in the counties of Essex, Kent, Leicester, Nottingham, and Derby, but suffer them to descend to his son and heir Richard de Grey,[f] who in 9 Edw. 2 (1315) was lord of Newbottle and Charlton.[g] In 4 Edw. 3 (1330) he obtained a grant of free warren here, and in his manors in the above counties,[h] and afterwards granted this manor for life to Edmund de Bereford,‡ on whose decease in 28 Edw. 3 (1354)[i] it reverted to his son John de Grey, lord Grey of Codnor, who in the 45th of this reign, being incapacitated for public business by age and infirmities, had a special dispensation from the crown to exempt him from any future attendance in parliament and council, or upon the king and his heirs in war.[k] His grandson and heir Richard, lord Grey of Codnor, enfeoffed trustees in this manor, who assigned it in dower to his wife Elizabeth Basset,[l] who survived till 29 Hen 6 (1451), when it descended to her grandson and heir Henry, lord Grey of Codnor, aged sixteen years.[m] He was much attached to the study of chymistry, and obtained a licence in 3 Edw. 4 (1463) to practice the transmutation of metals by his philosophical skill. In 10 Hen. 7 (1494) he, in conjunction with Catherine his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Newbottle and Charlton to William (Smith) bishop of Lichfield and Coventry and others, probably for purposes of trust, in fee;[n] and died the year following without legitimate issue.

(1592) is erroneously stated to have died 4 April 1 Edw. 6 (1547);[p] but he was certainly living in May 11 Eliz. (1569), as appears by a deed whereby Thomas Keble of Charlton gent. cousin and heir apparent of George Keble esq. viz. son and heir of Thomas Keble, gent. deceased, son and heir apparent (whilst living) of the said George Keble, conveyed a messuage and lands formerly called Mantel's lands in Astrop, Newbottle, and Purston, to Richard Chambers.[q] The male line of the family terminated with this Thomas Keble, who died in 37 Eliz. (1595), leaving three daughters within age.[r]

THE MANOR-HOUSE stood north of the church, and was a hunting-seat of the earls of Thanet, but has been taken down by the present proprietor, except a small portion reserved for the tenant of the farm.

THE VILLAGE, equidistant about four miles from Banbury and Brackley, has dwindled to the remains of the mansion-house, the vicarage-house, and one or two cottages. In the time of Bridges it 'contained about forty houses,'[u] in which its hamlets must have been included. By the census of 1801 Newbottle and its hamlets contained 71 houses and, 297 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 69 houses and 329 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 72 houses and 332 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax for this parish is £183. 17s. 4d. at 4s. in the pound. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of £10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815 amounted to £3,795. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, the portions of Charlton, Astrop, and Purston within this parish inclusive, raised £459. 7s. 4d. at 7s. 3¾d. in the £. The wake is held on the Sunday after St. James O.S.

The Advowson or church of "Neubotle" with all its benefices, by which, I apprehend, is meant its dependencies in Charlton, Astrop, and Purston, was given between 1147 and 1167 by William de Pinu for the souls of his brother Morin de Pinu, and of Robert earl of Mellent, and Robert Earl of Leicester, to the priory of Dunstaple in Bedfordshire.[x] Jordan de Humez and Hathewisa or Hawise his wife, probably heiress of Pinu, confirmed the grant of Neubotle church, and two virgates in "Cherletone," with all the benefices which belonged to the church of Neubotle, the day Morin de Pinu "was alive and dead;" and in addition a messuage near the church in the south culture; the prior and convent remising to them three virgates, viz. one in "Cherleton," one in "Neubotle," and the third in "P'stona" (Purston), and granting that mass should be celebrated every Sunday in the chapel of Purston.[x] Notwithstanding this donation was still further confirmed by John de Humez,[y] their and heir of Jordan, the right of the priory was contested before the justices itinerant at Northampton in 13 Edw. 1 (1285) by sir Henry de Grey (of Codnor) who claimed by writ the advowson of "Neubotle juxta Sutone Regis," of which Richard (Humez) his ancestor was seised in the time of king Richard, on whose presentation Jordan Humet or Humez was instituted, and the right descended from Richard to Jordan son and heir, John brother and heir, Lucia daughter and heiress, Henry son and heir, Richard brother and heir, John brother and heir, Richard son and heir, and Henry (de Grey) brother and heir, the claimant; the jury presented that Jordan was not presented by Richard (Humez), and adjudged that the prior and his successors should hold the advowson for ever.[z] It appears that the prior expended in this suit at Northampton about 33 marks (£22) in presents, gifts, proper expenses, and in procuring knights for the assize (in militibus assisa procurandis).[a] After the dissolution, the impropriate rectory and advowson of the vicarage were granted in 35 Hen. 8 (1543) to sir Michael Dormer.[b] Anne, second wife of Peter Dormer esq. of Purston, and at the time of her death widow of Francis Ingoldsby esq. died seised of them in 22 Eliz. (1580) leaving Francis Ingoldsby her son and heir aged fourteen years.[c] Thomas Keble esq. lord of the manor, purchased them prior to 37 Eliz. of John Alderford and Elizabeth his wife,[d] and they have subsequently attended the manorial estate down to W. R. Cartwright, esq. M. P. the present impropriator and patron.

The Rectory was not rated in the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3), but in the taxation of Pope Nicholas 1291 (20 Edw. 1) it was valued at 14 marks (£9. 6s. 8d.) per ann. deducting a portion of £1 to the prior of Ware.[e] In 1294 the prior and convent of Dunstaple, to raise their contribution to the king towards the Welch war, leased their tithes of Newbottle for five years at 15 marks (£10) per ann. receiving 45 marks (£30) in advance.[f] In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it was rated at £4. 13s. 4d. per ann.; and in the minister's accounts at the dissolution of the priory, the farm of this rectory was returned at £3. 6s. 8d. per ann.[g] The impropriate rectory, so far as relates to Newbottle, is merged in the manorial estate; but the impropriator is entitled to the rectorial tithes of that portion of Purston which is within this parish; though, by a singular anomaly, the great tithes of all Astrop belonged to the impropriate rectors of Sutton, and of all Charlton to the impropriate rector of Newbottle, as appears by the respective acts for inclosing these hamlets, when allotments were awarded by the commissioners in exoneration of the rectorial tithes.

The Vicarage is in the deanery of Brackley. This church was appropriated to the priory of Dunstaple soon after the original grant of the advowson. R. prior of Dunstaple, probably Richard canon of Merton elected in 1202, and the convent, gave and confirmed to Sir Roger de Mores, chaplain, the altarage of the church of Newbottle, with all small tithes and oblations, and a croft near the church with its pertinencies, on condition that he should minister in the said church honorably, and provide it in books and ornaments, and acquit them against the bishop and archdeacon and their nuncios in accustomed dues, retaining to themselves the tithe of garbs in the said church, and the arable lands, meadow, pasture, and houses in their demesne, and such a pension as the bishop should be pleased to indulge them with.[h] A vicarage was afterwards ordained by Hugh (Wells) bishop of Lincoln between 1209 and 1234, when Jordan (Humet) was instituted, and endowed with the altarage, small tithes, and messuage and croft near the churchyard, and charged with the payment of synodals only; the prior and convent to sustain all other charges due and accustomed, and the bishop, if by stricter inquiry he found the vicarage insufficiently endowed, to make it more ample according to the value of the whole benefice.[i] In the taxations of 1254 (38 Henry 3)[k] and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[e] it was rated at 7 marks (£4. 13s. 4d.) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at £10. 3s. 4d. per ann. deducting 2s. 8d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton.[g] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a vicarage in the patronage of sir Thomas Wilbraham, worth £30 per ann.; and that Kirby was the incumbent.[l] It is a discharged living, returned under the Act 5 Anne (1707) to be of the clear yearly value of £37. 13s. 10s. but has never been augmented by Queen Anne's bounty. In the return of livings under £150 per ann. in 1809, the bishop of Peterborough certified it to be of the clear yearly value of £85 arising from glebe and money payments; and in the account of benefices and population, presented to parliament in 1818, the income is stated at £130 per ann. The vicarage now consists of the vicarial tithes of Newbottle properly so called; one ground containing about 22 acres in Astrop old field, allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the vicarial tithes of that portion of the hamlet which is within this parish; one ground containing 34 acres in Charlton, allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the vicarial tithes of that portion of the hamlet which is within this parish, and which were recovered by the present incumbent in 1817 by a suit in the exchequer.

The Vicarage-house is south of the church-yard.

The Church, dedicated to St. James, consists of a low tower, containing two bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. The windows are principally square headed. The tower is 13 ft. 9 in. long by 10 ft. wide; the nave and aisles 50 ft. 7 in. long, the north aisle 10 ft. the nave 14 ft. 9 in. and the south aisle 9 ft. 8 in. wide; and the chancel 27 ft. 9 in. by 15 ft. A plain circular font on a high square base is attached to the western pillar of the north aisle. Between the tower and nave is a Norman arch on square piers with shallow voluted capitals. The nave is divided from each aisle by four pointed arches on multangular pillars with capitals of plain mouldings. In the south wall of the chancel is a piscina, and the altar is approached by three steps.

probably a combination of the Saxon ceopl, a rustic or husbandman, and tone, a town, is an extensive hamlet south-east of Sutton, and south of Newbottle, and extending into both parishes. In its open field state, thirty five and half yard lands, or virgates, belonged to the former, and twenty three and a half to the latter parish. It was enclosed by act of parliament 12 Geo. 3 (1772), and is now found to contain about 1240 acres, of which about 815 are in Sutton and about 425 in Newbottle. The late Henry Smyth, esq. had about 280 acres; William Ralph Cartwright, of Aynho, esq. M. P. has about 300 acres; Colonel James Delap of Stoke park, near Guildford, Surrey, about 170 acres; Mr. John Haddon, about 155 acres; and John Ingram Lockhart, of Sherfield house, Hants, esq. many years M. P. for Oxford, about 125 acres. There is a mill on a brook which runs into the river Cherwell.

Manorial History. Baieux Fee.* At the domesday survey, Adam held of the bishop of Baieux, three virgates and the fifth part of a virgate in "Cerlintone" within the soke of Sutton. The arable land was two carucates, of which one was in demesne with two bordars. It had been, and was still valued at 10s. yearly.[t]

Wahull or Wodhull Fee, or Manor.† In the hydarium of Hen. 2. Maynard was certified to hold one hide and a half and a small virgate in "Cherleton," and Odo Dapifer, or the steward, eight small virgates of the fee of Colchester; besides one hide and a half and a small virgate held by Simon Chendut of the fee of Berkhampstead,[u] as will be shewn under the Moreton fee. Odo's land may be referred to the Baieux fee; but, as the paramountcy of Maynard's estate is withheld, no clue is furnished for tracing it to the domesday lord.

[t] Domesd. p. 220. [u] Cott. MSS. Vesp. E. xxii. fo. 94 b. * Vide Hartwell. † Vide Patishull or Thenford.

Neither Maynard nor Odo occurs amongst the feudatories of the barony of Wahull in the Liber Niger,[x] and it may therefore be presumed that family had not then acquired an interest here; but in the Testa de Nevill about 27 Hen. 3 (1242) John de Sutton accounted for half a fee in Cherleton, and Godfrey de Lanort for the fourth of a fee, of the fees of Saher de Wahull.[y] On collecting the aid for knighting the king's eldest son in 20 Edw. 3 (1346) Richard de Harrington paid 10s. for the fourth of a fee in Charlton, of the fee of Wahull * or Wodhull.

In 19 Hen. 6 (1440-1) sir Thomas Chetwode of WARKWORTH made a settlement (int. al.) of his manor of Charlton alias Chorlton on the heirs male of his body in fee tail, remainder, if he should have more daughters than Joan then wife of Elias Langeworth, on the said Joan and her sisters in fee tail.[a]

In 9 Eliz. (1567) the Harrington estate is again recognised, in the Inq. p. m. of Bartholomew Cresswell of Purston gent. who died seised (int. al.) of seven virgates and a half in Charlton formerly belonging to Richard Hetherington, or Harrington, and three virgates and a half there, held of the manor of Sutton, leaving Robert his brother and heir, aged 27 years.[b]

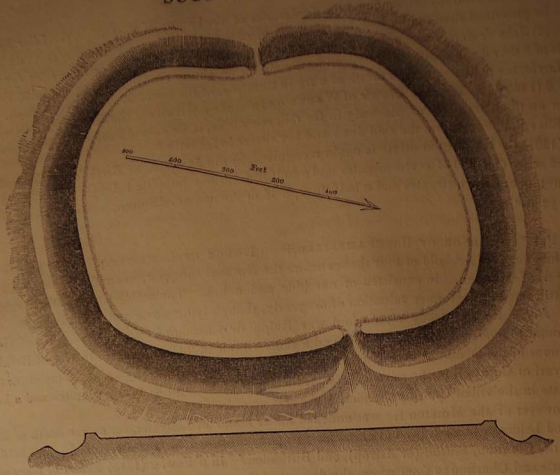
MORETON FEE.* HONOR OF BERKHAMPSTEAD.† HONOR OF LEICESTER.‡ The portion of "Cerlintone," which had been the freehold of four thanes before the Norman conquest, was at the domesday survey held by Ralph of the earl of Moreton. It consisted of one hide and a half. The arable land was three carucates and a half. It was still rated at the former valuation of 5s. yearly, though lying waste and uncultivated.[c]

MANOR. Ralph, the domesday mesne lord was Ralph de Chenduit.§ In the hydarium of Hen. 2. Simon Chendut was found to hold one hide and a half and a small virgate in "Cherleton" of the fee of Berkhampstead;[d] and in the account of the members of the manor of Middleton Chenduit held by knight's service, extracted from the roll of the earl of Cornwall in the reign of Edw. 1. there was certified to be twelve virgates and a half and four parts of a virgate in the vill of Charlton, rendering the service of half a fee.[e]

Some part however of the Moreton fee was annexed to the honor of Leicester, for on the death of Edmund earl of Lancaster and Leicester in 24 Edw. 1 (1296), Henry de Grey answered for three fees and a half held of the late earl in Newbottle, Charlton, Sutton (or Astrop), and Bittlesden.[f] In 9 Edw. 2 (1315) Robert de Grey was returned lord of Newbottle and Charlton; [g] from whom the descent of the conjoined manor has been already deduced under Newbottle.

DUNSTAPLE PRIORY LANDS. The grant of a virgate of land in Charlton by William Pinu, and the confirmation of two virgates by Jordan de Humez to Dunstaple priory have been recited in a former page. Ralph Chenduit gave to the priory three virgates and a half at "Seibroc" (Seabrook in Buckinghamshire) in exchange for this land at Charlton; and the agreement was confirmed by his grandson Ralph Chenduit.[h] The prior and convent were at this time in possession of a more considerable estate in Charlton, through the bounty of Alan son of Gilbert de Hide, who gave them a hide of land and a messuage here which he had of the gift of his brother Thomas.[i] In 1224 (8 Hen. 3) Ralph Chenduit, father of the last named, demised to the priory all his demesne in Charlton, consisting of seven virgates and a half, with a capital messuage and the works of his tenants for sixteen years at a rent of 40s. yearly.[j] In 1245 Vivian, the tenant of the prior and convent, surrendered to them their farm of "Neubotle," or more correctly of Charlton, and they stocked it with two hundred and forty six sheep, six oxen, three heifers, one palfrey, four cows with three calves, ten quarters of wheat, one quarter of pease, half a quarter of cheese, two hogs of the value of 7s. an iron shod cart with two others, and 40s. to defray the expenses of harvest.[j] In 1256 the prior and convent demised their land of Charlton to John de Chendut at fee farm for a fine of 15 marks (£10) and a yearly rent of 3½ marks (£2. 6s. 8d.) and 8s. for the houses; they retaining in their own hands two granges, the old hall, the tithes of garbs, hay, and mill, and 2s. 8d. rent from two tenants of the church.[k] The same year a grand dissension arose between sir William Chenduit and John Boyver, who meeting at the vesper hour in the principal street of Charlton, John by a sudden blow struck the knight to the ground, and left him severely bruised.[k] In 1283 the chamberlain of the prior and convent, at his own private cost, built at (Charlton in) Newbottle an infirmary, in which a separate apartment was appropriated to each of the monks.[l]

After the dissolution, the messuages and lands called Cokeslands and Paynslands and a titheable grange in Charlton, parcel of the late priory of Dunstaple, were included in the same grant with the rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Newbottle to sir Michael Dormer.[m]



THE VILLAGE contains 90 houses, 50 in the parish of Newbottle, and 40 in Sutton, but they are so intermixed on both sides of the road, as to defy all attempt to assign a reason for their parochiality. At the south end of the village is the neat residence of the late Henry Smyth, esq. which has recently been purchased, with about twenty-three acres adjoining, by the rev. R. W. Leonard, vicar of both parishes.

CHAPEL. The chapel has been long since desecrated, and the site is now unknown; but it occurs as late as 1523, when sir Walter Mauntell by his will bequeathed 10s. each to the churches of Heyford, Bugbrook, Flore, Farthingho, and King's Sutton, and the chapel of Charlton.[n]

SMYTH'S CHARITY. Mrs. Mary Smyth, bequeathed a sum of money to the poor of Charlton, with which £150. 3 per cent. consols. was purchased, and the dividends are annually laid out by the churchwardens of Newbottle in bread, and distributed at Christmas among the poor inhabitants of this township.

Rainsborough Camp is thus described in Anthony à Wood's MSS. in the Ashmolean museum at Oxford. "In the limits of Charleton and in the parish of Newbottle in Northamptonshire, on the top of a little hill, which has a prospect round about it is a camp with a double fortification. The mound about it, which is a barren soil, hath as it seems been woodland. The inward fortification is more than a quarter of a mile about; the outward, half at least. This camp and hill is commonly called Rainsborough-hill, though some gentlemen in the neighbourhood would have it Danesborough-hill, as if it had been a camp of the Danes. Within the memory of man, the land within the inward fortification, together with the inward fortification itself, hath been plowed up by several persons, each having his lot allowed him. And a certain person of Charleton, who had the middle part allowed him, did not only plow up the middle part, but levelled the inward fortification, so far as his share went. In digging down the said apartment, there was discovered several broken pots, glasses, ashes, and the neighbourhood of Charleton say it was an apothecary's shop. Whether this was a camp belonging to the Britains, who encamped themselves, when the Romans invaded them, within woods, or of the Saxons or Danes, I cannot tell." Morton has added to the description that "the figure of the Fortification is almost oval, and so the more likely to have been Danish, is narrower to the East than to the West. 'Tis now encompass'd with only a single Trench, and a double bank. That on the inside of the Trench is of the two the highest. There are now two entrances on the Southern part of the Encampment, and two other on the North. A little below the Encampment to the South East is a much smaller Piece of Ground entrenched."[o]

Since the above period the lordship has been enclosed, and the late Mr. Gilkes about fifty years ago surrounded the camp with a stone wall, and planted several fir and beech trees upon its summit. The area contains about six acres, and the whole circuit including the fosse rather more than eleven acres. The inner vallum rises about seven feet above the level of the area, and is fifteen feet wide on the summit, and twenty-four at the base. The fosse is thirteen feet deep and sixty wide. The outer vallum is traceable throughout, and in some parts strongly marked. The principal entrances are nearly opposite on the east and west sides, and there are slight indications of minor ones at the two other cardinal points.

Morton attributes this fortification to the Danes principally on the ground of the traditional predatory incursions of that people in the adjacent country, and the circumstance of the form not assimilating with the camps of the Romans, and none of their coins or remains having been found here.[o] Bridges, or rather his editor, justly observes that 'the vicinity of the fortification to the Portway and to the Wall or Vallum in this neighbourhood, both which are supposed to have been Roman works, may incline us however to conjecture it was a station of that people. The figure of the camp is no express argument to the contrary; and Mr. Morton himself hath elsewhere observed,[p] that towards the declension of the empire, the fashion of the Roman camps was frequently changed to a circular or oval form. 'A few years ago a gold coin of Vespasian was plowed up at a little distance from Rains-'borough hill. . . . . It weighed one dram, two scruples, and sixteen grains. Round the head was T. CÆS. IMP. on 'the reverse a person sitting on a Sella Curulis, with an Hasta in his right hand, and the left hand stretched out. 'Under his feet was a Scabellum, and the inscription TRI. POT. PONTIF. On this camp the inhabitants of Aynho 'have right of common for their cattle.'[q]

Numerous Roman coins have been turned up here of late years in the process of agricultural cultivation, and were in the possession of the late Mr. Smyth, the proprietor, who had unfortunately disposed of them prior to furnishing me with this information. The probable course of communication between this camp and the Roman road from Isannavaria or Benaventa (Borough hill near Daventry) to Ælia Castre (Alchester near Bicester) has been pointed out under Aynho.*

PURSTON,

in domesday "Prestetone" and "Prestone," is a hamlet of old inclosure, north-west of Newbottle, containing about 620 acres, of which 320 acres formerly called Dormer's Purston are in Newbottle parish, and about 300 acres formerly called Blencowe's Purston are in Sutton parish. Henry Metcalfe Wardle, esq. late of Wardington, Oxfordshire, has about 210 acres, and the devisee of the late Charles Parkhurst, esq. of Catesby and Mr. John Franklin, of Purston, an undivided property of about 150 acres, principally in Newbottle parish; and the Savilian professors in the university of Oxford about 160 acres, and John Jackson Blencowe, esq. of Marston St. Lawrence, nearly 100 acres, principally in Sutton parish. The lordship is chiefly in permanent pasture.

It is a singular anomaly, that the portion of Purston which at the domesday survey lay within the soke of Sutton, was by one of the early paramount or mesne lords annexed to the parish of Newbottle; whilst the other portion of the hamlet became a member of the parish of Sutton, though not within its civil jurisdiction. The fact is clearly established by the tenures of the manorial or usufractuary estates, which identify the Moreton fee with Dormer's Purston, and the Doyley fee with Blencowe's Purston.

DORMER'S PURSTON.

MANORIAL HISTORY. MORETON FEE.* HONOR OF LEICESTER.† Alric held freely in the Saxon era a portion of "Prestetone" within the soke of Sutton, rated at 10s. yearly, and continued at the same valuation in the domesday survey, when it was held by William under the earl of Moreton. It contained half a hide. The arable land was a caracate in the occupation of a bordar. There were two acres of meadow.[r] This estate in the hydarium of Hen. 2, was described as half a hide of the fee of the earl of Leicester.[s]

MANOR. William, the domesday mesne lord, was ancestor of the family of Keynes, and in the Testa de Nevill about 19 Hen. 3 (1235), Richard de Fardingeston was certified to hold one small fee in Evenley and "Purston" of the fees of Richard de Keynes ‡ of the small fees of Moreton,[t] which was included also in the inquisition after the death of Edmund earl of Lancaster (and Leicester) in 25 Edw. 1 (1297), amongst the fees held of him by sir Thomas de Lewkenore the heir of Keynes.[u] In another part of the Testa de Nevill, about 27 Hen. 3 (1242), Richard de Grey was found to hold one fee in Newbottle and Purston of the fees of Simon de Montfort of the honor of Leicester.[x] This portion of Purston continued merged in the manor of Newbottle by unity of ownership till alienated by the Keble family in 38 Hen. 8 (1546) to Peter Dormer esq.[y] who died in 26 Eliz. (1583), seised of 350 acres of land in Purston held of the queen as of the duchy of Lancaster, of which the honor of Leicester is parcel, leaving Fleetwood Dormer his son and heir aged fourteen years.[z] From him this estate descended agreeably to the subjoined pedigree down to Robert Dormer, esq. one of the justices of the common pleas, who died in 1726 leaving four daughters and coheiresses. Mary Dormer in 1726 vested her fourth part of the manor or reputed manor of Purston, with capital messuage and lands in the parishes of Newbottle and King's Sutton or one of them, in trustees for sale, of whom it appears to have been purchased by her sister Ricarda, wife of John Parkhurst, esq. of CATESBY, who by will devised the moiety or half part of the manor of "Purston," to her eldest son the rev. John Parkhurst, with divers remainders over.

Blencowe's Purston.

Doyley Fee.* Honor of Wallingford.* In the Saxon era Lewin had a portion of "Preston," which he might alienate, but the king had a soke or jurisdiction. It was then valued at 10s. yearly, but was rated at 12s. in the Domesday survey, when it was held by Roger under Robert de Oilgi or Doyley. It contained half a hide, and the fifth part of a hide. The arable land was a carucate and a half, with four villeins and two bordars. There were eight acres of meadow.[h]

The history of this division of Purston will be found incorporated in the manor of Thenford held of the honor of Wallingford, down to the reign of Henry 6; posterior to which it came into possession of the Blencowe family; for in 34 Hen. 8 (1542), Thomas Blencowe, esq. of Marston St. Lawrence died seised of lands in "Purston" held of the honor of Wallingford, leaving John Blencowe son and heir aged thirty years.[i] It is not described as a manorial estate in any of the Blencowe inquisitions; but in 19 Eliz. (1577), Thomas Parrys alias Taylor died seised of a small parcel of meadow, held of John Blencowe, esq. as of his manor of Purston.[k]

Sir Henry Saville, who died provost of Eton in Feb. 1621-2, had an estate in Purston of about 160 acres, with which (int. al.) he endowed two professorships of Geometry and Astronomy in the university of Oxford. On this estate is

The Manor House, not far from the turnpike road from Banbury to Brackley; and in the occupation of a tenant.

Purston Meadow was probably, at the original distribution of the adjacent manors debateable ground, for the lords of Newbottle, Purston, Farthingho, Thenford, Middleton Chenduit, and Chacomb, enjoyed in common the right of mowing it; and the modes of measuring and of apportioning the different shares, and of providing for the hospitable entertainment of the mowers, are detailed with an interesting minuteness in the "Booke of Purson Mede." There are two copies of the customs extant; one dated Dec. 1728, but the earliest commences with "The xxiiii[th] year of the Reign of King Henry the VII[th] this book was made of, for, and concernynge every man's office in Purson Mede."

Then follow eight or ten pages allotting the quantities or admeasurements of the maths, which go for seven years a sort of round, differing every year. They all run in this form. "The first sett. My Lord Grey hath vii Poolls. Mauntell hath iii Poolls," &c. &c. The next sett varying the quantities and the order, and so in each of the meads above named. The number of shareholders, if they may be so denominated, are now rather diminished, but the Lex loci, with a few slight variations, is still observed. W. R. Cartwright, esq. of Aynho, as representative of lord Grey at Newbottle, by his tenant, furnishes the goose and stuffing, J. J. Blencowe, esq. of Marston, as proprietor, I presume, of the St. John lands, provides the bread and ale, and all the intricate arrangements of the marks are settled annually by Mr. Goffe with the assistance of "the Booke."

Chapel. On the confirmation of the church of Newbottle by Jordan de Humez to the prior and convent of Dunstaple, they covenanted that mass should be celebrated every Sunday in the chapel of Purston. No further mention occurs of this chapel, and the site of it has not even been preserved by tradition.

in domesday and early records Rodeston, may possibly be compounded of the Saxon pobe, a cross, and tone, a town, though it must be admitted there is no ancient cross standing, or tradition of one, to support the conjecture. The lordship is all old inclosure, and contains about 1250 acres, the exclusive property of William Holbech, of Farnborough in Warwickshire, esq. It is bounded on the north by Helmdon; east by Whitfield; south by Brackley; and west by Hawes in Brackley. The soil is principally a stiff loam. More than half the lordship is in pasture. There is a wood of about 100 acres.

MANORIAL HISTORY. CHESTER FEE.* "Rodestone" formed part of the possessions of Hugh earl of Chester at the domesday survey, and contained two hides. The arable land was five carucates, of which two were in demesne with six servants, and ten villeins and five bordars had the remaining three. There were twelve acres of meadow, and six acres of wood. The whole had been, and was still, valued at 100s. yearly.[a] In the hydarium of Hen. 2. "Rodeston" was certified to contain two hides of the fee of Chester;[b] in the Testa de Nevill about 27 Hen. 3 (1242), William de Fortibus (earl of Albemarle) held half a fee in "Rodeston," parcel of the honor of Chester, of the earl of Arundel;[c] and in 2 Ric. 2 (1378), Thomas de Lucy, or, in strictness, his heir, for he had been dead several years, answered for half a fee in Rodeston, amongst the fees of the late prince of Wales and earl of Chester.[d]

MANOR. The mode of its entry in domesday admits a doubt whether "Rodeston" was held in demesne by the earl of Chester, or under him by Robert (de Rothelent); but the point is of no importance in the subsequent descent, as Robert died without issue, and his lands escheated to the earl as paramount lord.†

It may fairly be presumed that Ranulph de Meschines 3d Earl of Chester enfeoffed his brother William de Meschines in this manor; for, in 13 Hen. 2 (1166), Alexander Fitz-Gerold, second husband of Alicia de Romelli, eldest daughter and coheiress of William, rendered an account of half a mark for Rodeston.[e] This estate did not, however, descend to his posterity, but to the issue of Alice by William Fitz-Duncan her first husband; in 2 Joh. (1200), Baldwin de Betune earl of Albemarle, and Hawise his wife, granddaughter of Alicia and William, claimed "Rodeston" against Robert de Courtney and Alicia his wife, the other coheiress;[f] and in 9 Joh. (1207), it was confirmed to the earl.

His successor was William de Fortibus, earl of Albemarle, son and heir of Hawise by a former husband, and in 9 Hen. 3 (1224), a writ was directed to the sheriff to deliver to the earl of Albemarle the manor of "Rodeston;"[g] in 11 Hen. 3 (1226), the earl attorned Peter Clark and William Anglicum against Thomas de Maunsell,[h] who in the following year levied a fine of the manor to the earl.[i] The male line of this noble family determined in his son earl William; on whose decease in 44 Hen. 3 (1260),[k] the earldom of Albemarle devolving on his only surviving child Aveline, with the earldom of Devon and the Isle of Wight in expectancy on the demise of her mother, and an immense inheritance in possession and reversion, the king regarded her as too great a prize for a subject, and in 54 Hen. 3 (1270), gave her in marriage to his second son Edmond earl of Lancaster.[l] In 4 Edw. 1 (1276), she, being then childless, the king induced her to convey and assure to him the Isle of Wight, with all her castles and lands, advowsons, and knights' fees (except two or three lordships specifically named) in which she had only a life estate, in consideration of 20,000 marks (£13,333. 6s. 8d.) in money, and a feoffment to her of lands and tenements of equal value in fee.[m] She died the same year, when John de Eston, the obscure lord of a manor in Craven, claimed before the king and council all her inheritance except what descended to her from her grandmother Aveline after the death of Richard de Montfitchet, which fell to the king; and Alicia de Lucy and Thomas de Multon at the same time claimed the manors of Rodeston, Cockermouth, Allerdale, and Skipton, of which she died seised, and which had also fallen into the king's hands. Eston deduced his right, step by step, from Avicia sister of countess Hawise; and Lucy and Multon from William Fitz-Duncan and Alicia his wife; but it is unnecessary to enter into a verbal detail of their respective descents, as they are included in, and correspond with, the subjoined pedigree. The fact of countess Hawise having had a sister Avicia, the alleged ancestor of Eston, was denied by the two other claimants, and a mandate was issued to take an inquisition thereof by twenty-four knights and other legal men of the counties of York and Lincoln, twelve of whom to be knights girded with swords, and certify the result to the king.[n] In 6 Edw. 1 (1278), John de Eston released to the king all his right, for a grant of £100 yearly in land at Thornton near Pickering in Yorkshire;[o] but in 33 Edw. 1 (1304), Thomas de Multon, grandson of the above Thomas, and Thomas de Lucy, grandson of the above Alicia, petitioned parliament that the king would have respect to their right in the manors of Cockermouth in Cumberland, Skipton in Yorkshire, and "Rodeston" in Northamptonshire, which they claimed as heirs of Aveline daughter of William de Fortibus their ancestor, and prayed the king, for the health of his soul and the exoneration of his conscience, to grant them that part of their inheritance, and they would, if he required it, release and quit claim to him the remainder. tion was directed to be sent to the justices of the King's Bench;[p] before whom, in 35 Edw. 1 (1306), the plaintiffs brought their suit, when the attorney-general and king's serjeant pleaded the claim of, and release from, John de Eston, already noticed; and John de Eston, cousin and heir of the said John, was summoned to appear prior to any further proceedings.[q] An extent of the manor of Rodeston, and the chattels there, ordered by the crown in 2 Edw. 2 (1308), describes them as late belonging to Isabella de Fortibus, late countess of Albemarle, who survived her daughter Aveline many years; and by which it may be inferred that she held this manor in dower. Amongst the items are, a capital messuage, with garden, curtilage, and fish-pond, worth 6s. 8d. yearly; two hundred acres of arable land in demesne, worth 6d. per acre yearly; twenty-five acres of meadow, worth 12d. per acre yearly; twenty-two virgates of land held by twenty-two villeins, worth 5s. per virgate yearly; rents from certain customary tenants and cottagers, seventy-two hens yearly, worth 1½d. each; a certain common pasture, worth 30s. yearly; a water-mill with toft, worth 20s. yearly; total £27. 2s. 6½d. yearly. The chattels include eighteen oxen, worth 14s. each; one bull and eight cows worth 8s. each; three young oxen worth 5s. each; two carthorses worth 10s. each; four boars worth 6s. 8d. each; old and new hay worth 50s.; two ploughs and harness worth 10s.; and three carts with harness worth 3s.; total £44. 5s. 4d.[r] This survey was evidently preparatory to a grant the same year to Amicia, widow of Eustace de Hacche, who having been jointly enfeoffed with her husband in the manor of Patenesham in Sussex, and he having given it the King in fee, she sought a compensation, and the king, acknowledging the justice of her request, granted her for life in recompence £20 yearly in land, for which he assigned to her this manor of "Rodeston" extended at £27. 2s. 6½d. yearly, she rendering him the surplus of £7. 2s. 6½d. yearly.[s]

In 5 Edw. 2 (1311), *John de Clavering having enfeoffed one Stephen de Trafford in the castle and manor of Warkworth, with other manors in Northumberland, and Evre in Buckinghamshire, amounting to £700 yearly, to re-enfeoff him of part for life and the residue in tail male, with reversion of the whole to the king in fee; the king in return granted to him for life various manors and hundreds in Norfolk and Suffolk, with the manors of "Rodeston" and Apethorp in this county, to the value of £400 yearly.[t]

In 8 Edw. 2 (1314-15), Thomas Multon de Egremont and Anthony de Lucy, reciting the former petition of the said Thomas Multon, and of Thomas de Lucy, deceased, brother of Anthony, and that proceedings respecting their right had been continued before sir Roger Brabazon and his associates, justices of the King's Bench, for a long time, but had ceased by the death of King Edward, father of the present king, petitioned parliament that the king would command the justices to review the said process, and place the petitioners in the same state as when the late king died. It was answered, that mandates should be issued to sir Roger de Brabazon to examine the record mentioned in the petition; and to the treasurer and chamberlains to search the charters and memoranda concerning the said lands, and certify the king thereof in the next parliament:[u] at which parliament, in 9 Edw. 2 (1315-16), the plaintiffs again petitioned, and their petition, together with the process before sir Roger Brabazon, was sent to sir William Inge and his associates, the King's justices, who were commanded to examine the matter diligently and do justice, but to certify the king concerning the record and process before they rendered judgment; and it was also ordered that, if necessary for the right of the king, all the reasons and evidences which could be found in chancery and the exchequer should be examined, and also the inquisition after the death of Aveline, daughter of William de Fortibus, returned into chancery in the time of the late king, as well as the quit claim from, and the grant to, John de Eston. Then follows as an appendix—but irregularly arranged—a record of all the petitions and proceedings, from the first claims of John de Eston, Alicia de Lucy, and Thomas de Multon, in the 4th of Edward the first.[x] In the next Easter term (9 Edw. 2) the plaintiffs exhibited to sir William Inge, and the other justices of the King's Bench, their pedigree in support of their claim, when the king's sergeants reiterated the right of, and release from, John de Eston, and the plaintiffs denied the existence of Amicia, sister of Hawise, from whom the said John derived his title, which they were ready to prove, and a day was given; but in the mean time Thomas de Multon, one of the plaintiffs, died, and the plea consequently becoming void, further proceedings were again stayed.[y]

In 1 Edw. 3 (1327), to the petition in parliament of Anthony de Lucy, and John son and heir of Thomas de Multon of Egremont, that justice might be done them in a suit which they had in the court of King's Bench against the late king, father of the present king, for delivery of the manors of Cockermouth, Skipton, and "Rodeston," it was answered, let them have a writ in chancery to the judges of the King's Bench, that they proceed in that plea with all possible haste, provided they proceed not to judgment without the king's privity.[z] In 3 Edw. 3 (1329), John de Clavering was summoned by writ of quo warranto to shew by what right he claimed view of frankpledge, correction of assize of bread and beer, warren and wayf, in "Radeston," when he pleaded that Isabella de Fortibus had enjoyed those privileges by prescription, and at her decease without issue the manor escheating to the king, was, as has been already stated, granted to him for life, with reversion to the crown;[a] and the same year Anthony de Lucy and John de Multon, impleading him for this manor before the justices itinerant at Northampton, he again pleaded the royal grant, and prayed the aid of the king, without whom he could not answer; whereupon a day was given before the justices of the King's Bench at Westminster.[b] The same year Robert de Ardern obtained a grant of the reversion of this manor in tail male.[c] 'In the eighth year of Edward 3[d] the manor of Rodestone was given in custody to William Trussell the king's valet;[e] but this grant was resumed the same year by reason of the claim of John de Multon and Anthony de Lucy.[f] In 11 Edw. 3 (1337), Robert de Ardern had a second grant of it in tail male, with remainder to the king in fee.[f] The same year, however,

Anthony de Lucy came into possession of it, either by purchase, exchange, or a legal verdict in the long-protracted suit with the crown: for, by inquisition in 11 Edw. 3 his manor of "Rodeston" was found not to be within the limits of Whittlebury forest.[g] In 13 Edw. 3 (1339), he had a grant of it in fee,[h] probably in confirmation of his title; and in 17 Edw. 3 (1343), a grant to himself and his tenants at "Rodeston" of pasture for all their cattle in Whittlebury forest during his life.[i] His son Thomas lord Lucy died in 38 Edw. 3 (1364), seised (int. al.) of this manor, held of the earl of Chester (prince of Wales) by service of half a fee, leaving his son and heir, Anthony lord Lucy, aged twenty-four years;[k] whose only daughter and heiress Joan dying an infant in 43 Edw. 3 (1369), her inheritance resorted to her aunt

Maud, then wife of Gilbert de Umfraville, earl of Angus.[l] Radston had been granted by King Edward the third, during the wardship of Joan Lucy, to his favourite mistress, Alice Perers, and is included in her manors forfeited to the crown in 1 Ric. 2 (1377),[m] and subsequently restored to sir William Windsor and Alice his wife, late Alice Perers.[n] In 21 Ric. 2 (1397), Maud Lucy, and her second husband, Henry Percy earl of Northumberland, levied a fine of the reversion of this manor, then held by John de Windsor for life of the said Alice, of the inheritance of the said Maud, to her husband's brother, Thomas Percy earl of Worcester, in tail male, remainder to sir William Melton,[o] her cousin and paternal heir, being son and heir of her aunt Joan Lucy, as found by inquisition the year following.[p]

On the demise of Alice Windsor in 1 Hen. 4 (1400) Radston became vested in the earl of Worcester,[o] who, engaging in the rebellion of his nephew Hotspur, was beheaded after the battle of Shrewsbury, in 4 Hen. 4 (1403), and attainted in parliament,[q] when, having left no male issue, this manor, by virtue of the above settlement, devolved to the heir by inheritance as well as entail,

John de Melton, son and heir of sir William de Melton, aged twenty-four years.[o] From him it passed by lineal descent according to the subjoined pedigree down to

John Melton, esq. who in Jan. 2 Hen. 8 (1510-11), "for certain wares and merchandizes to the value of £660," conveyed the manors and advowsons of "Radstone" in Northamptonshire, and Aston in Yorkshire, to John Bruges, or Bridges, alderman of London, and Nicholas Lambert, of London, citizen, redeemable on re-payment of the said sum by a specified day; and in March following covenanted with Thomas Darcy, lord Darcy, to deliver Dorothy, his daughter and heir apparent, before the 26th of April next, "untrothed, unaffianced, and unbetracted to any person," and to settle on her marriage with George Darcy, son and heir apparent of the said lord, certain manors in Yorkshire, with Radston and Aston if he were able to redeem them.[r] Aston he appears to have recovered; but in June 5 Hen. 8 (1513) the lord Darcy joined him in conveying Radston to the mortgagees in fee.[s]

Sir William Spencer, of Yarnton in Oxfordshire, who had previously acquired the impropriate rectory and advowson.[2] His grandson sir William Spencer,† bart. for payment of certain debts vested his entire estate here in trustees for sale, of whom it was purchased in Jan. 13 Car. (1637-8), by

John Browne, esq. of Eydon, clerk of the parliament,[1] who in Mar. 28 Car. 2 (1675-6), settled it on his only surviving child

Martha, in marriage with sir Roger Cave, bart. of Stanford; and by an act of parliament in 30 Car. 2 (1678), for better enabling the trustees of Sir Thomas Cave, kt. and bart. deceased, to sell lands for the performance of his will, the manor, impropriate rectory, and advowson of Radston, being substituted for lands at Stanford directed to be sold by the said will, were purchased, in September the same year, of the trustees appointed under the said act, by Brackley Hospital had lands here, which passed with its other possessions to Magdalen college, Oxford, and were sold by the president and scholars in 1806 to the late William Holbech, esq. under the provisions of the act for redeeming the land tax.

The Manor House stood a short distance from the church.

The Village is about two miles from Brackley. It was formerly a place of some importance, divided into Upper Radston and Nether Radston, but has now dwindled down to two or three small farm-houses and a few miserable cottages. Bridges says 'the present village hath in it nineteen houses, and about one hundred inhabitants. The footsteps of the old demolished town are still remaining.'[x] By the census of 1801, it contained 24 houses and 128 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 33 houses and 168 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 36 houses and 212 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £74. 0s. 10d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £1070. The poor's rate for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £208. 5s. at 7s. in the £.

The Advowson and Impropriate Rectory are not specified in the grants to the Norman abbey of St. Ebrulf in the Monasticon;[y] but the chartulary of its possessions after its annexation to the priory of Shene, refers to the charters from Ranulph Meschines (earl of Chester) and Alicia de Romeli of the chapel of Rodeston;[z] a composition between the abbot and monks of St. Ebrulf and the prior and convent of Huntingdon respecting "Rodeston" chapel[a]—probably during the time of William Meschines, as he was benefactor to the latter monastery; a copy of a sequestration of the fruits of the chapel;[a] a document stating that the vicar of Marston St. Lawrence was held to repair the chancel and ornaments of "Rodeston"—from which it may be inferred that it was originally an ecclesiastical member of that parish; and a composition without date, between William earl of Albemarle lord of Rodeston and the parishioners on the repair of the chancel of the chapel.[a] In 37 Hen. 3 (1253) William de Fortibus earl of Albemarle levied a fine of Rodeston advowson to Richard abbot of St. Ebrulf[b]; and in the inquisition after the earl's death in 44 Hen. 3 (1260), Rodeston church was returned to be held by the prior of Ware in appropriation, worth 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.)[c]

On the suppression of the alien priories by Parliament in 2 Hen. 5 (1414),[d] the priory of Ware with all the English possessions of the abbey of St. Ebrulf became vested in the crown, and was annexed the following year to the king's newly founded priory of Shene in Surrey.[e] After the dissolution, this rectory was demised by the crown to lessees for years or lives, till Feb. 20 Eliz. (1577-8), when it was granted (int. al.) to Edward (Clinton) earl of Lincoln and Christopher Goffe at a fee farm rent of £4. 13s. 4d. per ann.;[f] who, the following day conveyed it to Thomas Crompton and John Morley;[g] by whom it was sold in Mar. 27 Eliz. (1585) to sir William Spencer;[g] and since which time it has accompanied the manor down to William Holbech, esq. the present impropriator and patron.

The rectory is not valued in any of the ecclesiastical taxations. In Mar. 25 Car. 2 (1672-3), sir Humphrey Winch, bart. who had purchased from the trustees for the sale of fee farm rents, the fee farm rent of £4. 13s. 4d. per ann. arising out of this rectory, conveyed it to John Browne, esq. the impropriator, who thereby covenanted to pay a pension of £3 per ann. to the vicar, or perpetual curate.[g]

The perpetual Curacy or Donative is in the deanry of Brackley. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified that Radston was a parsonage presentative in the patronage of John Browne of Twickenham in Middlesex (and of Eydon), esq.; that Richard Morton was the incumbent; that the parsonage had for many years been underlet for £30 per ann. and that the stipend for serving the cure was only £10 per ann. but the patron allowed a competent and liberal maintenance.[h]

There is no endowment; but the impropriator pays the curate £24 per ann. and the living has been four times augmented by queen Anne's bounty, viz. in 1730, 1790, and 1792, with £200 by lot, and in 1759 with £200 to meet a donation of £200 from William Holbech, esq. the patron, which sums have been vested in the purchase of 25 a. of land at MiddletonCheney and Warkworth, and 9½ a. at Bourton in Oxfordshire. In 1814 the curacy was exonerated from land tax by the commission appointed 46 Geo. 3 (1806), being entered under the clear yearly value of £150. Since the augmentation by queen Anne's bounty it has been subjected to episcopal visitation.

The parsonage is a mere cottage at the west end of the church yard.

Henry Parsons. On his decease

Richard Bolton, A. M. vicar of Chacomb, was presented by William Holbech of Farnborough, esq. and instituted 25 Sept. 1750. His death introduced

Robert Jackson, A. B. who was presented by William Holbech, esq. and inst. 18 Dec. 1766. He died in 1768 and

John Gaskarth, of Queen's coll. Oxf. LL. B. was inst. 8 Sept. 1768, in the presentation of William Holbech, esq. There have been no subsequent episcopal institutions, but Charles Holbech, of Christ ch. coll. Oxf. A. M. vicar of Farnborough, Warwickshire, brother of the patron, is the present incumbent.

The Registers of burials commence in 1566, of baptisms in 1568, and of marriages in 1606.

The Church or Chapel, dedicated to St. Laurence, stands at the south end of the village, and consists of a tower containing two bells, nave, south aisle and porch, and chancel. The tower is low and roofed, or what is locally called, a packsaddle steeple. The west window of the aisle is of three lancets connected by a general drip stone. The south door of the chancel is trefoil headed with a dripstone of the hatched moulding. The tower is 14 ft. 4 in. long, by 9 ft. 6 in. wide; the nave and aisle 42 ft. 7 in. long, the nave 16 ft. 5 in. and the aisle 12 ft. 5 in. wide; and the chancel 25 ft. 9 in. long, by 16 ft. wide. The font is placed in the middle of the nave, and is a rude specimen of the Norman style; circular, with a double series of semicircular arches. The dividing arch between the tower and nave is also Norman, on plain imposts. The nave is separated from the aisle by three pointed arches on unusually lofty octangular pillars; the eastern one and the demi pillars have highly enriched foliated capitals; but the western one has only plain mouldings. At the east end of the aisle is a piscina. The chancel is entered under a closed arch, and at the east end of the south wall is another piscina.

in domesday and early records "Sigresham," and in modern pronunciation abbreviated to Siseham, is probably compounded of the name of the first settler, with the Saxon termination ham—Sigre's house or home. It was inclosed by act of parliament 5 Geo. 3 (1765), and contains, including about 460 acres of old inclosures, about 1780 acres; of which about 460 acres of copyhold and leasehold belong to the president and fellows of Magdalen college, Oxford; about 200 acres to Mr. John Timms, of Bittlesden in Buckinghamshire; about 185 acres, including copyhold, to George Morgan, esq. of Bittlesden; about 160 acres, including copyhold, to Mr. John Kendall, of Pury Lodge; about 140 acres to the duke of Buckingham and Chandos; about 140 acres to Mr. William Sharp, of Brackley, and Mr. John Wrighton, of Fawcote; and about 100 acres to Nicholas Segar Parry, of Little Hadham in Hertfordshire, esq. It is bounded on the north by Wappenham and Astwell and an isolated portion of Whitfield in Haselborough walk, one of the divisions of Whittlebury forest; east by an isolated portion of Brackley called Brackley or Siresham hatch; south by the river Ouse, which divides it from Bettlesden in Buckinghamshire; south west by Whitfield; and west by Radston and Fawcote.

The soil varies from strong clay to gravel. Morton says, "the brick which is made at Sisham is particularly esteemed;"[a] the brick kilns here are not now in particular estimation. There is a mill on the branch of the Ouse which rises in this parish near the Royal Oak public house.

MANORIAL HISTORY. AUBREY FEE.* This estate, the largest of the three portions into which Siresham was divided in the Saxon era, was a member of Halse, and is consequently included in the domesday survey under BRACKLEY.† In the hydarium of Hen. 2. Thomas Sorel was certified to hold a hide and a half; and the earl of Leicester a small virgate in "Siresh'm."[b]

HONOR OF LEICESTER.‡ On the partition of the earldom of Leicester, the paramouncy of the Sorel estate, instead of passing with the bulk of the Aubrey fee to the honor of Winchester, appears to have been assigned to the second earldom and honor of Leicester, which included also the above virgate held in demesne by the earl, and which, I apprehend, was a portion of the Moreton fee.

The Leicester abbey manor, the Bittlesden abbey manor, and the Chetwode manor, were all subordinate to this honor.

LEICESTER ABBEY MANOR is interwoven with, and has been consequently anticipated under the abbatial manor of FARTHINGHO.§ According to "Charyte's Rentale" in 1477 every virgate belonging to the abbey in "Sygresham" owed aid, frank pledge, and heriot;[c] and every tenant there at the will of the lord gave to the lord on every surrender or death, his best beast.[d] The abbot had several natives, or hereditary villeins here, and it is noted that William Parker married Matilda, daughter of William Gorale, of Sygresham, one of the lord's natives, without the lord's licence. John Lane married Matilda the sister without licence. Walter Chery married Joan the sister without licence. And Sir William, chaplain, their brother, received (holy) orders without the lord's licence.[e] The total receipts of the abbey from Sygresham in 1477 amounted to £6. 3s. 8¾d.[f] After the dissolution, all the messuages and lands in "Sigresham," parcel of the late monastery of Leicester, were granted (int. al.) in 34 Hen. 8 (1532-3), to sir John Williams and Anthony Stringer;[g] from whom they have passed by mesne conveyances to

The president and fellows of Magdalen college, Oxford, the present lords, who hold a court baron for this manor, to which belongs about 300 acres of copyhold land here, about 310 acres in Whitfield, and about 80 acres in Westbury, Buckinghamshire.

Bittlesden Abbey Manor. Robert de Meperteshal (of Mepershall in Bedfordshire), lord of Bittlesden in the reign of Henry 1, having stolen one of the king's hounds, surrendered the whole vill, with five virgates of land adjacent in Whitfield to Geoffrey de Clinton the chamberlain, one of the royal favourites, to secure his interest for a pardon or remission of punishment. In the mean time William Fitz Alured lord of Preston (in Buckinghamshire) and of all Marieland (in Siresham), gave him a moiety of Marieland that he might have a residence near Silveston; and Clinton subsequently restored to him Bittlesden and the land of Whitfield in free marriage with one of his relations: but during the civil war between Stephen and the empress Maud, residing at Mepersal and deserting Bittlesden, and neglecting either by himself or deputy to render the feudal services due for these lands to the earl of Leicester, they were seised as an escheat by the earl, and bestowed on his steward Ernald de Bosco,* who, perceiving that he might be unable to retain quiet possession, disposed of them with the sanction of the earl, in the endowment of an abbey for Cistercian monks, which he founded at Bittlesden in 1147 (15 Steph.)[h] The monks, to corroborate their title, purchased for 10 marks (£6. 13s. 4d.) a ratification from Robert de Meperteshal, of all Bittlesden, and of Marieland—a certain part of Siresham—which Ernald de Bosco gave to found the abbey, and which king Stephen confirmed,[i] and Robert bishop of Lincoln, in a confirmatory charter in 1151, recites the controversy between Robert de Meperteshal, by the name of Robert son of William, and the abbot, respecting these lands, and that Robert in his presence renounced all claim, and confirmed the grant from de Bosco.[j] The general confirmation charter of king Henry 2 includes three caracates of land in "Siresham" called Mariland and whatsoever belonged to them.[k] In 8 Edw. 1 (1280), when scutage was levied on the conquest of Wales, the abbot and convent were distrained for the scutage of Mariland, and they had an inquisition by the favor of the earl of Leicester, the king's brother, to enquire if scutage were due; when the jurors presented that Mariland never paid scutage, because one of the earls of Leicester gave that land to a certain person named Marie—from whom it was called Marieland—so freely that it neither rendered service, nor paid tithes, but had a free chapel to which the tithes were annexed. On the death of Marie without issue, the land escheated to the earl, who gave it to Ernald, and he to the house of Bittlesden, so that it never rendered feudal service.[l] By an early but undated composition the canons of Leicester demised to the monks of Bittlesden the tithes of Bittlesden, of ten virgates in Whitfield reserving the third garb to the mother church of Brackley, and of twelve virgates of the land of "Marieland in Sigresham," on condition that the churches of Evinton and Humberston (in Leicestershire) should remain free to the abbey.[m] The churches had been given to Leicester abbey by Ernald de Bosco,[n] who might probably have intimated an intention of transferring them to his new foundation at Bittlesden. In 34 Edw. 1 (1306), the abbot of Bittlesden made a fine with the king of 5 marks (£3. 6s. 8d.) for licence to inclose twenty acres of waste in Siresham, which lay within the forest of Wittlewode[o] or Whittlebury; and in 9 Edw. 2 (1315), the abbot was certified to be co-lord of Siresham.[p]

In 32 Hen. 8 (1540), the king, reciting various leases, granted the reversion of the site and demesne lands of the dissolved abbey of Bittlesden, the impropriate rectories and advowsons of Bittlesden and Wedon Pinkeney, and lands and tithes in Wappenham and Astwell, Whitfield, Wedon and Weston Pinkeney, and four virgates of land and the Stocken fees and the tithes arising thence in Syresham, late parcel of the said abbey, to sir Thomas Wriothesley,[q] who, on the 1st of Nov. following, conveyed his entire interest for £700 to Edmund Peckham, esq.[r] The other lands and tithes in Syresham, late belonging to Bittlesden abbey, were granted in 36 Hen. 8 (1544), to John Fox, and Thomas Hall,[s] and in 37 Hen. 8 (1545), to John Doylye and John Scudamore.[t] A considerable portion of these lands was alienated in parcels, but the Bittlesden manor was purchased of Edmund Peckham, esq. in 26 Eliz. (1584), by Edmund Manning, gent.[u] who 'afterwards sold part of his estate here, being six yard lands, to Mr. Danser,'[x] whose descendants claimed the manor; and from whom, I presume, it passed with the Chetwode Manor. In the book of knights fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295) Robert Chetwode† was returned to hold the fourth of a fee in Siresham, of the earl of Leicester,[y] which in the inquisition p. m. of the earl, in the following year was certified to be in possession of Lucia Chetwode[z] his widow. In 9 Edw. 2 (1315), John Chetwode was co-lord of Siresham;[a] and in the compotus of Walter Parles 20 Edw. 3 (1346), Nicholas Chetwode accounted for the fourth of a fee here.[b] Fines were levied of this manor by the Thorne family in 3 Hen. 8 (1512),[c] and 42 Eliz. (1600);[d] and in 10 Jac. (1612-13), Peter Andrew, esq. died seised of the manor in "Sygresham called Peppers manor and Chetwodes manor," held of the duchy of Lancaster, which he had recently purchased of Edward Thorne alias Dorne, and Robert Hillersden, and another manor in Siresham (which will be subsequently noticed) leaving

Frances, wife of Francis Saunders, esq. his daughter and heiress, aged twenty-seven years.[e] Bridges states, that the Dansers succeeded to the possession of it by marriage with the family of Saunders.[f] In Mar. 1695-6, Jacob Danser, gent. settled the manor (or united manors) of Siresham on his son and heir apparent John Danser, gent. in marriage with Anne, daughter of Joshua Potts, of Parkhouse, Staffordshire, from whom it descended to Mr. Style Danser about the middle of the last century. It now belongs to Nicholas Segar Parry, esq. of Little Hadham in Hertfordshire, who was sheriff of that county in 1814.

Pinkeney Fee.* The Saxon freehold of Leuric in "Sigresha'," was held at the domesday survey by Goisfrid under Ghilo the brother of Ansculf. It consisted of half a hide. The arable land was one carucate. In demesne was one carucate and three villeins. It was valued, as heretofore, at 10s. yearly.[g]

Manor. In the hydarium of Hen. 2. Ghilo was certified to have half a hide in "Siresh'm."[h] He was probably the Ghilo de Pinkeney who held a fee and a half of the barony of Gilbert de Pinkeney in 14 Hen. 2 (1167).[i] In the Testa de Nevill, about 21 Hen. 3 (1237), Simon de Pinkeney was found to hold two fees in Morton (Pinkeney) and two fees in Sulgrave, "Siresh'm," Astwell, and Faucot, of the barony of Henry de Pinkeney;[k] and in 32 Edw. 1 (1303), after the barony had been alienated to the king, Robert, son of William de Pinkeney, did homage, and acknowledged to hold (int. al.) the manors of Morton and Siresham of that barony.[l] In 30 Edw. 3 (1336), Henry de Elington was found to hold lands in Sulgrave and Siresham of the manor of Morton Pinkeney.[m] Subsequently to this period no direct evidence of the Pinkeney manor has been retrieved, but it may with little hesitation be identified with the manor in Siresham, which Ferdinand Freckleton, gent. had licence to alienate to Francis Foxley, esq.† in 35 Eliz. (1592),[n] of whom, and Mary his wife, it was purchased by Peter Andrew, esq. who died seised in 10 Jac. (1612-13).[o]

Moreton Fee.‡ Honor of St. Walerie.§ In the Saxon era Levenot § had an estate in "Sigresha'" which was then valued at 20s. yearly, but was rated only at 5s. yearly in the domesday survey, when it was held by Ralph under the earl of Moreton. It consisted of half a hide. The arable land was ten bovates. There was one villein. The wood was one furlong in length and half an one in width.[o]

In the hydarium of Hen. 2. William Fitz Alin was certified to hold half a hide in "Siresh'm."[p] In 7 Ric. (1195), William de St. Marie Ecclesia rendered an account of £4. 14s. of the issues of Siresham and of 40s. of that part which belonged to Thomas de St. Walerie;[q] and in 8 Hen. 3 (1234), the receiver of the honor of St. Walerie gave the master and brethren of Brackley an acquittance for the payment of 20s. for their manor in Syresham.[r] In Feb. 28 Edw. 1 (1300), Edmund earl of Cornwall remitted to the hospital, suit of court at his manor of North Osney, and released the tenants of the said hospital in Syresham from his view of frank pledge in Buckinghamshire;[r] and in the inquisition p. m. of the earl of the same year, the hospital of Brackley was found to hold Siresham manor of the honor of St. Walerie,[s] then parcel of the earldom, and now of the duchy of Cornwall.

Brackley Hospital or "Kingeshull" Manor. John, son of Geoffrey, son of Pagan, by an early but undated deed, in consideration of 24s. and one mark, conveyed his manor of "Kingeshull," with a mill, meadow, and pasture, to the master and brothers of Brackley hospital. Simon Sorel gave them certain lands in Siresham, and Margaret countess of Winchester two virgates of land and an assart called Little Hay. They had also lands here of the fee of Pinkeney, for Ralph de Pinkney released to them 2s. yearly reserved on six virgates of land with meadow and wood in Syresha';[r] and in 4 Hen. 3 (1230), Ida, widow of Ralph, levied a fine of these six virgates which she claimed in dower, to the prior and hospital of Brackley.[s] In 7 Edw. 1 (1278), "William de Pinkeney de Gulden Morton" released them from suit at his court at Morton, and remitted his right to the 2s. yearly for their lands and tenements at Siresham, but retained the proportional contribution to the castle ward of Windsor. In 2 Hen. 5 (1414), the master and brothers of Brackley hospital demised their manor of "Kingeshull" with a wood called "Blechenho," a water mill called Kingeshull mill, a close called Little Hay, and certain other lands in "Syresha'," to John Dorne and Eleanor his wife, for their lives, rendering 4 marks (£2. 13s. 4d.) yearly;[r] and in 1 Ric. 3 (1484) they passed with all the other possessions of the hospital to the president and fellows of Magdalen college Oxford.

The Kingshull or Kingshill manor and the hospital lands in Siresham are so blended together, both in their history and locality, as to render it inexpedient, no less than difficult, to separate them; but Kingshull manor and mill, though contiguous to the village of Siresham, and situated between the back of it and the church, is in the parish of Whitfield; and Little Hay is partly in that parish and partly in Brackley.

The Manor House of the Dansers stands near the church, and is reduced to a common farm house. The other manor houses are not now distinguishable.

The Village is about four miles from Brackley on the side of the turnpike road to Towcester, and is partially intersected by a brook which flows into the Ouse near Bittlesden. Bridges says, 'the town is long, and contains about one hundred and twenty families, amongst whom are upwards of thirty freeholders.'[u] By the census of 1801 it contained 129 houses and 587 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 100 houses and 593 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 161 houses and 725 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax for this parish is £94. 0s. 4d. at 4s. in the £.

The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815 amounted to £1,976. The wake follows the feast of St. James.

The Advowson was included in the grant of the churches in the soke of Halse to the church of St. Mary ad Castro at Leicester by Robert earl of Mellent, and subsequently to the abbey of Leicester by his son Robert Bossu earl of Leicester.[x] It is a remarkable circumstance that the confirmation charter of King Henry 2 confirms to the abbey of Leicester, the church of Brackley with the chapels of Halse and "Sigresham," of the gift of the founder; and in a subsequent clause the churches of Thornton (in Buckinghamshire) and of "Sygresham" of the gift of Thomas Sorell;[x] but this apparent discrepancy may be reconciled on the probable supposition of this chapelry having been erected into a distinct parish in the interval between the two grants, and that Sorell the mesne lord of the Aubrey fee became the patron of the church, and ratified the original donation of the superior lord. The advowson remained in the crown after the dissolution of Leicester abbey till the close of the sixteenth century. In 1600 the patronage was vested in sir William Spencer, of Yarnton, in Oxfordshire;* from whom it descended to Jane, Constance, Elizabeth, and Katherine Spencer, daughters and coheiresses of the late sir Thomas Spencer, of Yarnton, bart. who, in May 1685, granted the next presentation to sir John Garrard, of Lamer, Herts.[y] Katherine, the youngest daughter, married John Dormer, of Ascot, Oxfordshire, esq. whose descendant sir Clement Cotterel Dormer, of Rousham, in that county, knt. is the present patron.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Brackley. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3),[z] and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1),[a] it was rated at 15 marks (£10) per ann. deducting a yearly pension of 6s. 8d. to Leicester abbey; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), at £13. 17s. 3½d. per ann. deducting the pension to Leicester abbey and 10s. 7½d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton.[b] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage in the patronage of sir Thomas Spencer worth £70 per ann. and that Samuel Evans was incumbent.[c]

The rectory now consists of 24a. 0r. 26p. of land in lieu of the glebe lands; an annuity or rent charge of £100, clear of all deductions except land tax, in lieu of the tithes of the open and common fields, and a further clear annuity of £20 in lieu of the tithes of the homesteads and old inclosures and of easter offerings, allotted and awarded by the commissioners of inclosure. The rectory house is in the village below the church.

The Registers do not commence till 1668. Bridges says, 'the old parish registers, some years ago, were accidentally burned.'[g]

The Church, dedicated to St. James, stands at the upper, or, as it is commonly called, the Duchy end of the village, and consists of a low tower containing five bells, nave, north and south aisles, and chancel. The windows are despoiled of their tracery. There is no external entrance to either of the aisles. The interior was neatly paved and pewed in 1809. The tower is 14 ft. 2 in. long, by 11 ft. 4 in. wide; the nave and aisles 55 ft. 3 in. long, the north aisle 11 ft. 4 in. the nave 17 ft. 5 in. and the south aisle 14 ft. wide; and the chancel 27 ft. 2 in. by 15 ft. 8 in. The font is modern. The nave is uniformly divided from each aisle by four lofty pointed arches on octangular pillars with capitals of plain mouldings, and a general dripstone continued round and connected by block corbels. There is a bracket on each side of the east chancel window, and underneath the northern one, a square locker.

Benefactions (p. 541). Mrs. Alice Hammond, by will 5 Jan. 1778 bequeathed to the rector and churchwardens of Siresham £200, in trust to distribute the interest yearly at Christmas amongst the poor of the parish.

The commissioners of inclosure allotted 9 a. 3 r. 20 p. of land, in trust for the poor not receiving parochial relief, which is now let for £10 per ann.

The sum of £21 per ann. the present amount of Mrs. Leeson's charity, Mrs. Hammond's benefactions, and the poor's allotment, is distributed by the minister and churchwardens on the 24th of December amongst such poor persons of the parish as they consider the most proper objects of charity; a preference being given to those who have the largest families, and who do not receive regular parochial relief.

School. The rev. George Hammond, by will 3 Feb. 1755 bequeathed to the rector and churchwardens of Siresham, and to the rector of Helmdon £300, in trust to pay the interest yearly to some able schoolmaster, of good morals, to teach ten poor children of this parish to read English, more particularly the Bible, and to repeat the catechism of the reformed church of England.

Conquest Jones, by will 2 May 1773 bequeathed £100, the interest to be applied yearly towards paying a master to teach the poor children of this parish to read and write.

The children are appointed by the minister as vacancies occur; and are instructed with other children taken by the master.

CROWFIELD,

a hamlet in this parish of fifteen families, formerly gave name to a common which was inclosed with the open fields of Siresham in 1765.

STEANE,

in Domesday "Stane," and in later records "Steane," points to an obvious etymology in the Saxon ꝥane, a stone, though its peculiar applicability to this place is not so apparent. The lordship is all old inclosure, and contains about 1100 acres, the whole of which belongs to George John earl Spencer. It is divided by the river Ouse from Farthingho for a short distance on the north-west, and after crossing the park, from Hawes in Brackley on the north; Hinton then forms its boundary on the east and south-east; Charlton in Newbottle on the south; and Newbottle on the south-west and west. The soil is very various, loam, stonebrash, sand, and clay; the arable and pasture are nearly equal.

Manorial History. Pinkeney Fee.* At the domesday survey Ghilo brother of Anculf held two hides in "Stane." The arable land was five carucates, of which three virgates were in demesne, two carucates in the occupation of four servants and two maidens, and three carucates in possession of eleven villeins and bordars. There was a mill worth 2s. yearly. To this manor also belonged four parts of a hide in Sutton hundred. The arable land was two carucates, of which a tenant had one carucate; the other, being unaccounted for, was probably waste.[a] Ghilo, was ancestor of the baronial family of Pinkeney, whose caput honoris was at Wedon Pinkeney.

Manor. Gilbert de Pinkeney in the certificate of his barony 14 Hen. 2 (1167) made a return of half a fee of his demesne which he had given to his younger son Gilbert,[b] who, it may be presumed was the Gilbert de Pinkeney certified in the hydarium of Hen. 2. to hold two hides in "Stanes."[c] In the Testa de Nevill about 25 Hen. 3. Robert de Pinkeney was found to hold the manor of "Stanes," of the barony of Henry de Pinkeney, by service of half a fee.[d] His descendant, sir John de Pinkeney was hanged in 21 Edw. 1 (1292) for certain thefts and depredations, and his lands seized by the king, who, after his year, day, and waste, delivered the manor and advowson of Steane to

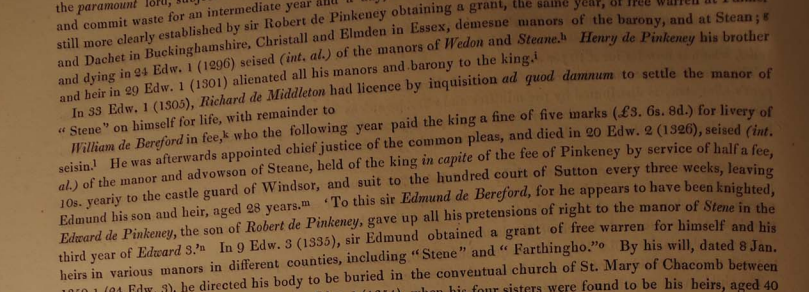
Sir Robert de Pinkeney, against whom Hugh de Odingsells claimed them, together with a moiety of the manor of Long Itchington in Warwickshire, by gift from sir John.[s] This sir Robert de Pinkeney has been generally considered the son of sir John;[t] but there is abundant evidence to prove the individual here alluded to was sir Robert de Pinkeney of WEDON, the lord of the fee. If the former supposition were correct, he would not have been entitled to inherit, for the estate of a manorial lord convicted of petit treason or felony became an escheat to the paramount lord, subject to an ancient royal prerogative whereby the king was entitled to receive the profits, and commit waste for an intermediate year and a day, as exercised in the present instance. But the identity is still more clearly established by sir Robert de Pinkeney obtaining a grant, the same year, of free warren at Fulmer and Dachet in Buckinghamshire, Christall and Elmden in Essex, demesne manors of the barony, and at Stean;[u] and dying in 24 Edw. 1 (1296) seised (int. al.) of the manors of Wedon and Steane.[v] Henry de Pinkeney his brother and heir in 29 Edw. 1 (1301) alienated all his manors and barony to the king.[w]

In 33 Edw. 1 (1305), Richard de Middleton had licence by inquisition ad quod damnum to settle the manor of "Stene" on himself for life, with remainder to



William de Bereford in fee,[x] who the following year paid the king a fine of five marks (£3. 6s. 8d.) for livery of seisin.[y] He was afterwards appointed chief justice of the common pleas, and died in 20 Edw. 2 (1326), seised (int. al.) of the manor and advowson of Steane, held of the king in capite of the fee of Pinkeney by service of half a fee, 10s. yearly to the castle guard of Windsor, and suit to the hundred court of Sutton every three weeks, leaving Edmund his son and heir, aged 28 years.[m] 'To this sir Edmund de Bereford, for he appears to have been knighted, Edward de Pinkeney, the son of Robert de Pinkeney, gave up all his pretensions of right to the manor of Stene in the third year of Edward 3.'[n] In 9 Edw. 3 (1335), sir Edmund obtained a grant of free warren for himself and his heirs in various manors in different counties, including "Stene" and "Farthingho."[o] By his will, dated 8 Jan. 1350-1 (24 Edw. 3), he directed his body to be buried in the conventual church of St. Mary of Chacomb between the steps and the altar,[p] and died in 28 Edw. 3 (1354), when his four sisters were found to be his heirs, aged 40 years and upwards;[q] but his Northamptonshire estates, by virtue of a fine levied by him in 22 Edw. 3 (1348),[r] passed (int. al.) to his natural son John de Bereford, and on his decease without issue to his brother Baldwin de Bereford, who, being barred by his illegitimacy from inheriting the privileges of free warren granted to his father, obtained a re-grant in 4 Ric. 2 (1380), of free warren in Stene and Farthingho and other places.[s] He was retained in the service of Edward the black prince by covenant for life; and became one of the leading favorites of his son Richard 2nd, in the 11th year of whose reign he was expelled from court by order of parliament, as one of the king's evil counsellors. When he died is uncertain, but in 2 Hen. 4 (1401), he entailed (int. al.) the manors of Steane and Farthingho on himself and Elizabeth his wife in fee tail, remainder to sir Philip St. Clere in fee;[t] and on the decease of his widow in 1 Hen. 6 (1423), they devolved on

Thomas St. Clere, esq.[u] grandson and representative of the said sir Philip St. Clere and Joan Audley,* whose connection with the Berefords will be best explained by the following pedigree.

By the failure of issue in Robert and Henry, the third and fourth sons, the entirety of the above manors vested in the second son William Lovell, lord Morley in right of his wife, who died seised in 16 Edw. 4 (1476);[x] and on the decease of whose son Henry lord Morley, in 4 Hen. 7 (1489), the estates and barony of Morley were carried in marriage by Alice his sister and heiress[y] to the family of Parker; but by the limitation of the entail Steane and the other settled manors would have resorted to Francis viscount and baron Lovell, as grandson and heir male of the testator, but he having incurred a forfeiture of his estates by double attainder in 1 Hen. 7 (1485),[z] and in 11 Hen. 7 (1495),[a] they escheated to the crown.

Baron Morley, &c. in abeyance.

The manors and advowsons of Steane and Hinton were granted in 11 Hen. 7 (1495), to sir Reginald Bray, an eminent statesman and architect, descended from an antient family in this county, whose pedigree has been introduced under East Haddon.* In the comparatively obscure post of receiver general to Margaret countess of Richmond, his talents and prudence attracted the notice of his friends, and he was selected by the partizans of her son as a "man sober, secret, and well witted," to negociate the marriage of the young earl with the princess Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Edward IVth, thereby eventually uniting the two rival houses of York and Lancaster. He was present with Henry at Bosworth field, and notwithstanding the suspicious temper of his royal master, retained his uninterrupted confidence through life, and reaped the reward of zeal and attachment in munificent grants and honorable appointments. He was made a knight of the bath at the coronation, a knight banneret at the battle of Blackheath, and subsequently knight of the garter. He had also a seat at the privy council, and besides minor offices, was lord treasurer, chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, and high steward of Oxford university. Though he amassed great wealth under a sovereign whose rapacious extortion has affixed a stain on his memory, yet so far was he from ministering to this disposition, that he frequently admonished the king when he acted in violation of equity; and historians concur in representing him as an excellent character, and a fervent lover of justice. Of his skill in architecture Henry the seventh's chapel in Westminster abbey—traditionally ascribed to his design—will be an imperishable monument: he laid the first stone, in conjunction with abbot Islip and others, 24 Jan. 1502-3, and dying on the 5th of August following (18 Hen. 7), was buried in a chapel of his own foundation within St. George's chapel, Windsor.

Sir Reginald, by a long and circumstantial will, dated dated 4 Aug. 1503 (18 Hen. 7), the day before his death, and proved 28 Nov. following, devised certain manors in the counties of Berks, Wilts, Sussex, and Middlesex, to his wife for life, remainder to such of his two nephews, sons of his brother John Bray, and their heirs, to be divided equally between them, as should marry his two wards Elizabeth and Agnes, daughters and heirs of Henry Lovell, esq.; and directed that all his manors and lands in the counties of Middlesex, Bedford, Buckingham, Northampton, Warwick, Berks, Oxford, Essex, Surrey, Gloucester, and Somerset, except such as his wife had for life, should be estated on his nephew Edmund Bray, son of his brother John Bray, and his heirs, when he attained his age of twenty-one years; with remainder to his niece Margery, wife of sir William Sandys, knight, and the heirs of her body.[b]

Edward Bray, one of his younger nephews, ancestor of the Brays of Shire in Surrey, married Elizabeth Lovell, from whom he was divorced, and Agnes the other sister, for reasons now unknown, did not marry one of sir Reginald's nephews, but became the wife of John Empson.† The will gave rise to a litigation attended with some peculiar circumstances, and terminated by an apparently unjust award. Dugdale, under the title of "Sandys," says that sir William Sandys (afterwards lord Sandys) "by the marriage of Margerie, only child of John Bray, Brother and Heir to Reginald Bray (of whom our Historians make mention with no little honor for his eminent services to king Henry the seventh) much increased his Estate. For Reginald going to Black Heath field (in 12 Hen. 7) left this Sands as his Heir; and after that Battel purchased a thousand marks per annum Lands more; whereof he made no disposition, so that they fell to him in her right. Whereupon great controversy arising betwixt Edmund lord Bray, and this sir William Sandys, who claimed by virtue of the will, and Bray, as his Nephew and Heir Male: a determination therein was at length made by the King and the Lords of the Council that they should part them equally."[c] The deed or award here alluded to is enrolled at the Rolls chapel, and is dated 4 May 2 Hen. 8 (1510). It is made between sir William Sandys and Margery his wife, cousin and heir of sir Reginald Bray, knight, deceased, of the one part, and Edmund Bray, esquire, of the other part; and after reciting that variance and disputes had been, and then were, depending between them concerning the right and title to all the manors and lands whereof the said sir Reginald was seized at the time of his death; by the mediation of William archbishop of Canterbury and lord chancellor of England, sir John Fineux, lord chief justice of the king's bench, and sir Robert Rede, lord chief justice of the common pleas, and divers other friends to both parties, and by advice of both their learned counsel, it was finally agreed, that said sir William and Margery his wife, should have certain estates there specified (but none in Northamptonshire), and all such estates as were given to her by sir Reginald's will, dated 21 Apr. 12 Hen. 7 (1497), to hold to her in tail male, remainder to said Edmund in tail male, remainder to said Margery in fee; and that the said Edmund should have divers manors there specified (but none in Northamptonshire), and all manors and lands given to him by the said will dated 21 Apr. 12 Hen. 7 (1497), to hold to said Edmund in tail male, remainder to said Margery according to the form and effect of the said will, but no form nor effect stated: the parties then mutually grant; and sir William and Margery covenant to levy a fine with warranty, except the affirmance of any will supposed to have been made by the said sir Reginald since 21 Apr. 12 Hen. 7 (1497).[d] This implied allusion, is the only notice taken of sir Reginald's last will, though any suspicion of forgery or fabrication must have been effectually rebutted by the minuteness of its details, the legal precision with which it was drawn, the witnesses, and the character of the executors by whom it was proved, and to whom the king (Hen. 7) granted a patent of general release or pardon for all the pecuniary accounts of the testator with the crown and the public; nor does it appear that any caveat was entered against the grant of probate, yet the deed of settlement was grounded on a prior will, which does not appear to have been either registered or proved, and every particular of which, except the mere date, seems studiously concealed in the very deed which substantiates its provisions. And it is still more extraordinary that the deed sets out with, and the whole proceeding rests on, the assumption that Margery Sandys was the heir; whereas sir Reginald being son of sir Richard, by his second wife, and John, father of Margery, by his first, she could only be niece of the half blood, and Edmund being son of sir Reginald's younger brother John by the same mother—for there were two brothers of the same name—was nephew of the whole blood.*

Of sir Reginald's Northamptonshire estates his nephew Edmund, afterwards lord Bray, had Edgcote, East Haddon, and Cottesbrook; and

Sir William Sandys, afterwards lord Sandys, and Margery his wife, had the manors and advowsons of Steane and Hinton. After successive demises to different individuals for terms of years from this William 1st lord Sandys, Thomas 2d lord Sandys, and William 3d lord Sandys, the latter nobleman in July 16 Eliz. (1574), conveyed the manors and advowsons of "Steane alias Stene," and "Hinton," together with all his manors and lands there and in "Wapnam" or "Siresham alias Sisham," to

Reginald Bray the elder, esq. and Alice his wife for life, remainder to Reginald Bray the younger, of the Middle Temple, London, esq. and Anne his wife in fee tail.[e]

The last named Reginald Bray, esq. died 25 Eliz. (1583), leaving five daughters and coheiresses.[f] Temperance, the fourth daughter, married sir Thomas Crewe, who, by purchase of the other shares, acquired the entire inheritance. His son and heir John Crewe, esq. represented the neighbouring borough of Brackley, and the county in several parliaments; and for his active exertions in promoting the restoration was elevated to the peerage in 1661 by the title of Baron Crewe of Steane. He was succeeded by his eldest son Thomas 2d lord Crewe, on whose decease in 1697 without male issue the title and estates devolved to his fourth but eldest surviving brother Nathaniel Crewe, bishop of Durham—the first individual who united the dignities of a spiritual and temporal peer. He was born at Steane 31 Jan. 1633, admitted a commoner of Lincoln college, Oxford, in 1652, and presided over the college as rector from 1668 to 1672. He took his bachelor's degree in 1655-6, but did not enter into holy orders till 1664. His professional career was as rapid as it was fortunate. Omitting minor preferments, he was installed dean of Chichester in 1669, bishop of Oxford in 1671, and through the influence of the duke of York, translated to Durham in 1674. To the views of his patron after his succession to the throne he was ever subservient, and became one of the most prominent actors in the inquisitorial ecclesiastical commission erected by that arbitrary monarch. So obnoxious had he rendered himself by his slavish compliances and bigotted proceedings, that he was exempted by name from the general amnesty on the accession of William and Mary. He fled into Holland for refuge, but succeeded in making his peace with the new government, and through the intercession of archbishop Tillotson was restored to his bishopric, though shorn of its ecclesiastical patronage and the lord lieutenancy of the county, which were retained by the crown. The indignation excited by his political servility is in some degree qualified by the munificence, hospitality, and charity, which marked the closing years of his life, and still more by the testamentary bequest on which is founded the princely establishment of Bamborough Castle in Northumberland, "the most extensively useful as well as the most munificent of all our private eleemosynary institutions." There are several engraved portraits of the bishop, 1. by Faber, from Kneller, fol. 1727; 2. by Loggan, from Kneller; 3. by Place, fol.; 4. by White, fol.; 5. in the Oxford Almanack for 1733; 6. in Hutchinson's Durham, oval. He died on the 18th of September 1721 without issue, at the advanced age of eighty eight years, when the barony became extinct, and the manor and estate of Steane under the contingent remainder created by the settlements of Thomas the second lord Crewe passed (int. al.) to his eldest daughter and coheiress by his second wife,

Jemima, wife of Henry Grey, duke of Kent.[g] The duchess died 17 July 1728, and was succeeded by her only son

Anthony lord Lucas, on whose decease without issue, 21 July 1729, his estate became vested in his four coheiresses, Jemima Campbell (afterwards Marchioness de Grey), daughter and heiress of Amabella lady Glenorchy eldest daughter of the duchess, Jemima, wife of John 1st earl Ashburnham, Anne, wife of lord Charles Cavendish, and their minority, an act of parliament was obtained in 2 Geo. 2 (1729), for vesting their two shares in trustees, on trust to join the other parties in a sale of the estate, which was then in contemplation; but the negociation was eventually abandoned, and the property continued to be held by the coheirs as tenants in common till May 1744, when the manor of Steane, and advowsons of Steane and Hinton, were conveyed by the trustees of Jemima Marchioness de Grèy as to one fourth part, the devisees in trust of John earl Ashburnham as to another fourth part, lord Charles Cavendish and the trustees of his marriage settlement as to another fourth part, and the rev. David Gregory, D. D. and lady Mary his wife as to the remaining fourth part, to Sarah, duchess dowager of Marlborough,[b] by whom it was devised to her younger grandson the hon. John Spencer, grandfather of George John, second earl Spencer, the present proprietor.

The Manor House stood two miles north of Brackley, in a walled park of about 150 acres, and was probably erected by, certainly coeval with, sir Reginald Bray; for, in one of the hall windows, was his device—erroneously supposed to be his arms[i]—a thorn with a crown in the middle, allusive to his having found King Richard's crown in a thorn bush, after the battle of Bosworth. Various arms and quarterings in the windows of the dining room are preserved in a MS. in the British Museum.[k] It was a large quadrangular building with a ballustraded gallery round the inner area. The duke of Kent occasionally resided here; but when transferred to the Spencer family it was deserted, and taken down between 1740 and 1750, except the kitchen and part of the inferior offices, which are converted into a commodious farm house.

The Village is now reduced to the old mansion, a farm house called Bunting near Charlton, and three dispersed cottages. According to Bridges, 'it is firmly believed in the neighbourhood, that there was once here a flourishing town, which was destroyed by the Danes.'[l] By the census of 1801, it contained 3 houses and 15 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 5 houses and 24 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 5 houses and 33 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £82. 15s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £1,405. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £59. 2s. 10d. at 9d. in the £.

The Advowson has been immemorially appendant to the manor.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Brackley. Ghilo, brother of Ansculf, the domesday lord of Steane, subsequently called de Pinkeney, gave the tithes of the demesnes of all his vills to the priory of Wedon Pinkeney, a cell to the abbey of St. Lucian near Beauvois in Normandy; as appears by the confirmation charter of his grandson Gilbert de Pinkeney;[m] and the grant was still further confirmed by Henry de Pinkeney, son of Gilbert, in which "Stene" is (int. al.) specifically named.[n] In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[o] and 1291 (19 Edw. 1)[p] this rectory is rated at 8 marks £5. 6s. 8d. per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at £6 per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations.[q] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage presentative in the patronage of John Crewe, esq. and that John Gibbs, the rector, supplied the cure, and received the profits, which were £7 yearly, besides a very liberal addition of maintenance from the patron.[r] It is discharged from first fruits and tenths, being certified under the act 5 Anne (1707,) to be only of the clear yearly value of £7. In 1747 it was augmented by queen Anne's bounty, with £200 by lot. In 1752 it was annexed to the neighbouring rectory of Hinton with the concurrent consent of the requisite parties; and the year following had a second augmentation of £200 from queen Anne's bounty to meet a donation of £200 from the countess of Arran, who vested another £200 in trust, to pay two thirds of the interest to the rector of the united rectories of Hinton and Steane, on condition of divine service being performed here once every month during the summer half year, and the other third to the clerk for cleaning the chapel and attending the minister. The pecuniary augmentations from queen Anne's bounty and from the countess of Arran have been vested in the purchase of an estate at Evenley; and in addition to the £7 per ann. the rector receives from the patron, 9s. 8d. yearly for the tithes of part of Overlands and Goosecham.

THE REGISTERS, if there ever were any, have disappeared.

THE CHURCH OR CHAPEL, dedicated to St. Peter, stands north-east of the mansion, and is a beautiful little structure, though a modern antique of incongruous design. In the centre of the pediment of the west front is inscribed, " Built by T. C. 1620,"—the initials of sir Thomas Crewe before he was knighted—and over the west door, " HOLINES BECOMETH THINE HOWSE O LORD FOR EVER." It is nearly square, without tower or bell, and built of ashler stone, the parapet profusely decorated with small pinnacles. The west front has a perpendicular door, over which is a handsome decorated window, between two plain perpendicular ones; the south front has a perpendicular window of a more ornamented character, and an entrance of the Ionic order, with an open circular pediment, and the arms of Crewe and Bray in the spandrils. The whole interior is 46 ft. 4 in. from north to south, by 31 ft. 6 in. from east to west. The body of the church is divided in the centre by two arches on clustered multangular pillars, and from the north chapel or cemetery of the Crewes by an open arch. It is paved with free stone in lozenges, and neatly pewed. Nathaniel lord Crewe bishop of Durham, gave to this church the furniture of crimson velvet for the altar, reading desk, and pulpit used in the chapel royal at St. James's, where he was clerk of the closet to king Charles II. and also the bible and common prayer book used by the king himself, together with six other common prayer books splendidly bound with the royal insignia of king William III. on the covers.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

I. At the east end of the north wall is a large altar tomb of black, white, and grey marble with the effigies of sir Thomas Crewe, and his lady Temperance Bray; over which is raised an arch between two circular Ionic pillars of black marble supporting an entablature, on which are placed three shields within circles: I. Crewe, impaling Bray. On the dexter side, II. Crewe, quartering G. fretty, and semée of fleurs de lis O. Hamelyn. And on the sinister, III. Bray, and Bray ancient, quarterly. The knight in sergeant's robes, coif, and quilted ruff, reclines on his right side, leaning his head on his hand, and holding in his left hand, a scroll. He has an expressive countenance; mustachios, and pointed beard. Below him, on a projecting slab of black marble, lies his lady, her head reposing on a cushion, and her hands carelessly disposed. Her veil or hood thrown back, short flowing hair, open ruff, boddice, and the cuffs of her sleeves edged with lace. Over the figures, on a black tablet within the arch,

III. Collateral to the last, is a lofty monument of white marble, raised from the ground on a stone basement. In a recess, on the dexter side, is a cherub in an attitude of surprise, and on the sinister one, a cherub weeping; the frieze above is composed of books, on which are placed two flaming urns, and in the centre, wreaths of flowers supporting Crewe and Bray quarterly, surmounted by coronet, helmet, and crest. On an oval tablet between the recesses,

This monument was erected by the bishop in memory of his second wife, to whom he was fondly attached, and he was accustomed frequently to retire to it and indulge in meditations on his irreparable loss. The sculptor had decorated the tomb with the common place emblem of mortality, a ghastly scull, and the bishop one day expressing a wish to his domestic chaplain Dr. Grey that it had not been placed there, the doctor sent to Banbury for the sculptor, and enquired if he could not substitute a more pleasing object. "Yes," after a little hesitation, was the reply, "I can convert it into a bunch of grapes," and it was metamorphosed accordingly.

has varied little in orthography since the domesday "Stotesberie," but it is now sometimes spelt, as it is generally pronounced, Stuchbury. In its present state it presents the singular anomaly of a parish without either church or village. The lordship is all old inclosure, and contains about 1020 acres; of which about 325 acres belong to Abraham Caldecott, esq. of Rugby, Warwickshire; about 260 acres to John Jackson Blencowe, esq. of Marston St. Lawrence; about 160 acres to Robert Haldane Bradshaw, esq. M. P. for Brackley; about 140 acres to the University of Oxford; and about 140 acres to Mr. Corbett Whitton, of Sulgrave. It is bounded on the north by Wedon in Norton hundred; east by Helmdon, and south-east by Halse in Brackley; south by Gretworth in Wardon hundred, and Marston St. Lawrence; and west and north-west by Sulgrave in Wardon hundred. Nearly nine tenths of the lordship is in permanent pasture. The soil is principally a strong loam or clay; and the arable land is a mixture of henmould and clay on a stony or gravelly substratum.

According to tradition, the hundred court for that portion of the present hundred of Sutton, surveyed in domesday under the name of Albodeston hundred, was held on an eminence in the field called the Gallows-field in this lordship, part of the estate granted to John Mole, gent. after the dissolution of St. Andrew's priory.

MANORIAL HISTORY. PINKENEY FEE.* Stotesbury and Thorp Mandeville were the freehold of Osmund the Dane, before the conquest, and at the domesday survey formed part of the fee of Ghilo brother of Ansculf, (ancestor of the Pinkeneys) under whom "Stotesberie" was held by Hugh and Landric. It contained two hides. The arable land was five carucates; of which one was in demesne with two servants; and five villeins, three bordars, and four other men or tenants, held another; leaving three waste or unaccounted for. There was a wood three furlongs long, and two wide. The whole had been valued at 30s. yearly, but was then raised to 40s. yearly.[a]

MANOR. HONOR OF HUNTINGDON.† The domesday survey could scarcely have been completed before this vill was alienated to Simon St. Liz earl of Huntingdon and Northampton, who in 18 Will. 1 (1084), founded St. Andrew's priory at Northampton, and endowed it (int. al.) with the whole of "Stoberiam," [b] or "Scoteberiam," as it is called in the earl's second charter in 8 Hen. 1 [c] (1107). An attempt was probably made on the death of the earl to dispossess the monks; for king Henry 1st by a confirmatory charter commanded that they should retain their land of "Stotysberia" and would listen to no entreaty, but willed that they should hold the land of earl David as they had done of his antecessor; and so the men of the hundred also adjudged.[d] This earl David was afterwards king of Scotland, and had married earl Simon's widow Matilda,‡ with whom his brother in law king Henry had assigned to him the earldom of Huntingdon. Stotesbyr' was certified to be in the possession of the monks of Northampton in the hydarium of Hen. 2.[e] The prior of St. Andrew's in 24 Edw. 1 (1295), accounted for one fee in "Stotesbury" held of John de Hastings,[f] one of the representatives of earl Simon.† In 3 Edw. 3 (1329), the prior was summoned by writ of quo warranto to shew by what right he claimed view of frank pledge and wayf in the manor of "Stutesbure," when he pleaded the grant from Simon de St. Liz; but it appearing that he amerced offenders against the assize of bread and beer, in the sum of 2s. instead of having recourse to the legal punishment of the pillory and tumbril, the view was taken into the king's hands, but restored again for a fine of half a mark.[g] At the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1), the temporalities of St. Andrew's priory in Stotesbury and Sulgrave were valued at £7. 9s. per ann. in lands, rents, fruit of the earth, flocks, and cattle; [h] and in the minister's accompts 30

Hen. 8. the farm of the priory lands in Stotesbury was returned at £37 per ann. and the profits of courts at 2s. 6d. per ann.[i]

After the dissolution, Stotesbury was granted out in parcels. In 30 Hen. 8 (1538-9), the Millfield in "Stuttysbury" was included (int. al.) with the manor of Sulgrave, parcel of the late priory of St. Andrew, in a grant to Lawrence Washington, of Northampton, gent.[k] This estate, in the time of Bridges, was 'in the hands of his successor Charles Howe, esq.'[l] and is now vested in Abraham Caldecott, esq. of Rugby Lodge, Warwickshire.*

In 31 Hen. 8 (1539), three closes and fields in "Stuttisbury," parcel of the late priory, were granted to Robert Tirwhitt, esq. and John Molle, of Northampton, gent.;[m] the former of whom released his interest two days after to the latter, in whose family this estate continued,[n] till Sept. 1647, when it was sold by Howard Mole, of Bliborow, Suffolk, esq. son and heir of John Mole, late of Culworth, esq. deceased, to John Cartwright, esq. of Aynho,[o] of whose lineal descendant William Ralph Cartwright, esq. M. P. for the county, it was purchased by Robert Haldane Bradshaw, esq. M. P. for Brackley, the present proprietor.

In 34 Hen. 8 (1532-3), the remaining lands in Stuttisbury, together with the advowson and right of patronage of the rectory, parcel of the late priory, were granted (int. al.) to sir John Williams and Anthony Stringer, esq.[p] Part of these lands, says Bridges, 'were purchased of them by Robert Pargiter, esq. of Gretworth, and now belong to Justice Blencowe.'[q] From him they have passed with Marston St. Lawrence, to John Jackson Blencowe, esq.

Lawrence Washington, gent. besides the lands in Stotesbury, of which he was the grantee, died seised of certain other lands, and of the advowson of the rectory there, late purchased of sir John Williams, of Thame, Oxfordshire, and Anthony Stringer, esq.[r] His grandson, Lawrence Washington, esq. sold these lands and rectory in Feb. 1613-14 to Fulk Botry, esq. of Marston St. Lawrence, who, in 1624, conveyed them to Paul Risley, esq. and he in 1628, to William, lord Spencer,† of whom they were purchased in 1632 by Peter Whitcombe, esq. and Thomas Palmer, esq. who, with sir John Tirrell, of Springfield, Essex, bart. and dame Martha his wife, daughter of sir Lawrence Washington, conveyed them, in 1646, to William Jesson, gent. In Dec. 1740 the trustees and devisees of the will of William Goodwin, gent. deceased, who had purchased of Pudsey Jesson, esq. sold a messuage and certain lands particularly described, in "Stuttesbury, otherwise Stotisbury," with the advowson of the parish church and all tithes thereto belonging, to the chancellor, masters, and scholars of the university of Oxford.[s]

Village. Morton mentions a tradition, that this town was destroyed by the Danes.[t] And Bridges remarks, [u]'as this part of the country was infested by them, probably it might suffer with Stene and Brackley, from the depredations they committed. [x]But it is certain there were here both a manor and a town, or the remains of a town, several centuries after the Danes were expelled.' It now consists only of four dispersed farm houses. By the census of 1801, "Stuchbury" contained 30 inhabitants; and by those of 1811 and 1821, 32 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £117. 14s. 6d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815 amounted to £1,496. The poor's rate for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £69. 14s. 4½d. at 1s. 6d. in the £.

Advowson. In the period immediately succeeding the Norman conquest many filial churches arose out of the larger parishes. When Hugh de Leycestre gave to the priory which he founded at Daventry the church of "Throp" with all its appendages as free as he received it from his lord Simon[y] (earl Simon St. Liz) this vill was doubtless included; for in 43 Hen. 3 (1258), Richard de Amundeville lord of Thorp Mundeville, released to the monks of Daventry all right in the advowson of the church of Thorp, and in the advowson of the church of Stotesbery, formerly belonging to that church.[z] There is no evidence, however, of the monks of Daventry ever claiming Stotesbury, and it was most probably detached from the mother church and converted into a separate parish through the influence of earl Simon, in order that the ecclesiastical patronage might accompany the manor or lay estate which he had bestowed on St. Andrew's priory at Northampton; and, in corroboration of this conjecture, the church of "Stotysbyry" with its pertinencies is found in the confirmation charter of the spiritualities of that priory by St. Hugh bishop of Lincoln, which, being attested amongst others by Walkeline, prior of Launde[a] in Leicestershire, must be placed between 1189 and 1200. The descent of the advowson subsequently to the dissolution has been already given.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Brackley. Henry, prior of St. Andrew's, Northampton, by deed without date granted to Adam the clerk, nephew of Reginald the priest of "Elmyndone" (Helmdon), the chapel of "Stotysbyry" with pertinencies, viz. a virgate of land and the tithes of the rustics or tenants of the vill, rendering yearly half a mark to the cellarer of the convent, and acquitting the convent of all dues to the bishop or his officer, and of the repair of the chancel.[b] This yearly pension to the priory is returned in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3),[c] and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1),[d] though the rectory is omitted in both, as well as in the printed copy of the ecclesiastical survey of 1535; but Bridges states, that 'in 1535, 26 Henry VIII. the clear yearly value of it amounted to lxvis. viiid. of which sum xxvis. viiid. appears to have been paid the rector by the convent of St. Andrew. In this record it is called the rectory or free chapel of 'Stuttisbury ex dono & patronagio Monasterii S. Andreæ in Northamptonia.'[e]

The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a rectory presentative without cure, church, or chapel, in the patronage of William Jesson, of Coventry, esq.; that Mr. Richard (qu. ?) Caresley, of Hardmead in Buckinghamshire, was curate, and that it was worth 20 nobles yearly, so paid by the monastery of St. Andrew, Northampton, to whom the lordship belonged, in lieu of all tithes, as a rate and accustomed tithe, and ever since the dissolution the said rate had been paid by the owners of the land and accepted by the incumbent.[f] This payment still continues.

Richard Knightbridge, A. M. presented by sir John Tirrell, of Springfield, in Essex, and inst. 5 June 1643, on the decease of the last incumbent. There have been no subsequent episcopal institutions, but

Richard Caresley occurs as "curate" in 1655,[f] and

John Smith in 1721.[g] Of late years, the benefice has been usually given to the rector of Helmdon, and Charles Milman Mount, A. M. rector of that parish, is the present incumbent.

The Church, was dedicated to St. John, and a piece of ground called the church yard, still denotes the site, though it has been long since demolished. Bridges says, 'the inhabitants usually bury at Gretworth or Sulgrave, or some other neighbouring parish.'[g] in domesday "Sudtone" and "Suttone" is obviously South-town, but whether so denominated from its relative situation to some other place, or from its position on the southern border of the county, is now unascertainable. It subsequently received the adjunct of Regis, and is commonly called King's Sutton to distinguish it from Sutton Basset, and Sutton by Peterborough.

Prior to the Norman conquest and the succeeding century, the number of parishes, or local districts under the ecclesiastical superintendence of separate incumbents, was very limited, and in point of extent strikingly disproportionate to the later foundations. The original Saxon parish of Sutton possesses the internal evidence of high antiquity in no common degree, as it includes within its range Buckingham with its hamlets of Bourton, Gawcote, and Lenborough, to the east, and Horley and Hornton in Oxfordshire, beyond Banbury to the west—thus stretching a distance of between twenty and thirty miles. The circumstance of a town which gave name to a county, being only a parochial chapelry of a village in another county, presents an extraordinary and unique anomaly in the civil and religious institutions of the kingdom; and it was not till the fifteenth century, that either Buckingham, or the Oxfordshire chapelry of Hornton cum Horley, was erected into a distinct vicarage.

This parish, in its present state, consists of Sutton—properly so called—part of Astrop, Charlton, and Purston, Twyford mill, and all Walton, comprising in the whole about 4340 acres. Sutton was inclosed by act of parliament in 44 Geo. 3 (1803-4), and contains about 1250 acres; of which about 740 acres belong to William Willes, esq. of Astrop, lord of the manor; about 150 acres (exclusive of about 30 acres in Astrop) to George Lovell, gent. and Mrs. S. Lovell; and about 110 acres to Henry Loggin, gent. It is bounded on the north by Warkworth and Middleton Cheney; north east by Farthingho and Steane; east by Newbottle and Hinton; south east by Croughton; south by Aynho; and on the west, the river Charwell divides it from Adderbury in Oxfordshire. The soil varies from a stiff clay to a light loam. About two thirds of the lordship is in permanent pasture, exclusive of two or three hundred acres of rich meadow land bordering on the Charwell.

Manorial History. Terra Regis or Antient Demesne. At the domesday survey the king himself was in possession of "Sudtone." It consisted of three hides. The arable land was six caracutes, of which two were in demesne with a servant; two in the occupation of seven villeins and ten bordars; and four villeins had two in another part of the manor. There was a mill worth 10s. 8d. yearly, meadows of the value of 20s. yearly, and the profits of a market 20s. yearly. To this manor belonged "Witefelle" (Whitfield) containing two hides, and two ploughs on the inland or demesne, and five on the land of the tenants. Two caracutes were in demesne with a servant, and eight villeins and three borders had three caracutes and a half. There was a wood a mile long, and seven furlongs wide. The whole had been valued at the time of Edward the Confessor at £19, but was then rated at £32, of 20d. to the ora.[a]

Manor. As no proprietor is mentioned in the Saxon era, it may be presumed, that Sutton was then, as at the Norman survey, part of the royal demesne; and it continued in the crown till 2 Hen. 2 (1156) when Simon Fitz Peter, the sheriff of the county, in rendering account of the corpus comitatus or royal manors and vills in his charge, deducted £30 blench, or blank uncoined silver, for "Sutton," which the king had granted to Richard Camvill;[b] and in 1 Joh. (1199), Simon de Pateshull, the sheriff, deducted the same sum for Sutton with the addition of 100s. for the hundreds of Sutton and Albodestow, then in possession of Gerard Camvill,[c] son and heir of Richard. In the inquisition taken in 12 and 13 Joh. of the tenure of all the lands throughout England held in capite, Gerard Camville was certified to hold £30 yearly in "Sutton," but by what service the jurors were ignorant.[d] He married Nichola, daughter and coheiress of Richard de la Hay,* by whom he had an only son Richard Camville, who in 16 Joh. (1214), had livery of Middleton castle in Oxfordshire, by descent from his father;[e] but the following year, having joined the confederated barons, the manor of "Sutton," parcel of the manor of Middleton, late belonging to him, was given to Ingelram de Cigon during pleasure, and a writ issued to the sheriff of this county to permit him to enter.[f] In 1 Hen. 3 (1216), he returned to fealty, and had restitution.[g] In 2 Hen. 3 (1217), he made a fine of 2000 marks (£1333. 6s. 8d.) for livery of the rest of his inheritance,[h] and in the pipe roll for this county the same year, stood indebted to the king 300 marks (£200) for livery,[i] probably the proportion due for this manor and hundred. His wife Eustachia, daughter and heiress of Gilbert Basset, died in 17 Joh. (1215), leaving by him an only child Idonea, whose wardship was obtained by William Longspé, earl of Salisbury, with liberty to dispose of her in marriage, with all her inheritance on the part of her mother, to his eldest son William Longspé,[k] and in 10 Hen. 3 (1226), being of full age, the king rendered to her and her husband all the lands of her late father Richard Camvill.[l] In 15 Hen. 3 (1231), Stephen de Segrave, sheriff of the county, deducted from his account of the corpus comitatus £30 blench for Sutton granted to William de Longspé and Idonea de Kamvill his wife.[m] This entry, had the preceding ones in 2 Hen. 2 and 1 Joh. been overlooked, would have led to the natural but erroneous assumption of these parties being the original grantees; and the principle on which these and similar casual and apparently capricious reiterations of prior grants are introduced—neither annually nor on the accession of an heir—is quite inexplicable.

The title of earl of Salisbury given to this William Longspé by Matthew Paris and the monkish historians was "a complimental error, that honor not being ascribed to him in any authentic record;" "and the reason," says bishop Kennett, "(which has escaped Mr. Dugdale) must be this. His father William earl of Salisbury, in the latter end of his life went out of the realm without the king's leave; for which offence his castle, town, and earldom of Salisbury, were seized and retained in the crown, as appeared by an inquisition taken in the 15 Edw. 3."[n] In 24 Hen. 3 (1240), William Longspé levied a fine of the manor of Sutton to his brother

Stephen Longspé,[o] and the following year, by deed, granted to him all his manor of "Sutton juxta Bannebir," with the hundred to the said manor belonging, reserving to himself and his heirs a certain meadow in Sideham, which his tenants of Middleton were accustomed to mow, and binding the said Stephen and his lawful heirs to keep the said meadow, and provide necessary meat and drink for twenty-five of his Middleton tenants the day they mow it.[p] By deed, without date, Stephen Longspé conveyed one virgate in "Sutton Regis," to Richard de Bedeford,[q] and William Longspé having inspected this grant from his brother sir Stephen Longspé, confirmed it.[q] In 36 Hen. 3 (1252), Stephen Longspé obtained a grant of market, fair, and free warren here, and fair and free warren at Wamberge, Wiltshire.[r] He married the widow of Hugh Lacy earl of Ulster in Ireland, who by courtesy retained the title of countess of Ulster in her second widowhood, and died in 4 Edw. 1 (1276), seised of this manor and hundred by feoffment from her youngest daughter Emmeline, and her husband Maurice Fitz Maurice in exchange for certain lands in Ireland, leaving Alan la Zouch,* son of her eldest daughter, aged eight years, and the said Emmeline, aged twenty-four years, her coheirs.[s] Emmeline succeeded to this estate, and after the death of Fitz Maurice, resumed, as was customary with great heiresses, her paternal surname. In 9 Edw. 2 (1315), she was certified to be lady of the manor and hundred of Sutton;[t] and in 18 Edw. 2 (1323), impleaded John Prewes, John Iryshe, and others, for digging in her free ground and cutting down the banks of the Charwell in divers places to the destruction of her meadow; to which they replied that the said water runs in the bishop of Winchester's manor of Adderbury, between the counties of Oxford and Northampton, in which the bishop has a free fishery in right of the said manor, and because the said Emmeline made a sluice on the bishop's ground, the said John Irysh, then the bishop's bailiff, removed it without doing any injury to her ground in King's Sutton.[u] The result is not recorded. In 3 Edw. 3 (1329), Emmeline Longspé was summoned by writ of quo warranto to shew by what right she claimed in her manor of "Sutton" view of frank pledge, correction of assize of bread and beer, wayfs and strays, infangtheof, and gallows, pillory, tumbril, free warren, market, and fair; and in the hundreds of "Sutton and Abbotstowe," under the name of "Sutton" hundred, correction of assize of bread and beer, pillory, tumbril, wayfs, and strays, and execution of the king's writs by her bailiffs, so that the sheriff shall not enter unless by default of of her bailiffs, but the sheriff shall hold two tourns in the hundred yearly, receiving at the tourn after St. Michael 40s. 8d. and at the tourn after Easter the same sum, by the hands of the bailiff of the hundred for a certain custom called "Schirevesyeld;" to which she pleaded as to the market, fair, and free warren, the charter from Henry (3d), the king's great grandfather, to her father Stephen Longspé; and as to all the other privileges, that she, her father, William Longspé and Idonea his wife, and the ancestors of Idonea, had enjoyed them with the manor from time beyond memory. The king's attorney replied that neither Maurice Fitz Maurice, formerly husband of Emmeline, nor Emmeline herself, who in the last iter was called Emma, claimed any of those privileges except view of frank pledge, and prayed that the privileges not claimed in the last iter might be seized into the king's hands; but Emmeline rejoined that the non claim ought not to operate to her injury, because at that time she had a husband, and in consideration of half a mark given to the king she was allowed to replevy. The king's attorney, as to the hundred, contended, that it was a royal jurisdiction belonging to the crown, which no one could possess without special grant from the king, which Emmeline did not shew, and that whereas she asserted her father Stephen to have purchased it of William Longspé, it was a free tenement held in capite, and could not be alienated without the king's licence which she did not shew, and therefore prayed judgment. And as to infangtheof, he contended that, under colour of that privilege, she had arrested William de Lyndsye, John le Poleter, of Fynmere (Oxfordshire), and John Germyn, of Whitfeld, for theft and felony committed at Mixbury, in Oxfordshire, at the suit of Walter Phelip, for stealing twenty two wether sheep (multones) of which felony they were convicted in her court in the manor of Sutton and hanged there, and this he was prepared to prove for the king, and claimed judgment; but Emmeline alleged they were not arrested, nor adjudged in her court for the said foreign felony (out of her jurisdiction), but at the suit of John le Carte for stealing thirty tegs or two-shear sheep (bidentes) within her said manor of Sutton. A jury having been summoned, presented that Emmeline was entitled to all the privileges as claimed, but it appearing that she punished offenders against the assize of bread and beer by fine of 10s. instead of the legal punishment of pillory and tumbril, the view of frank pledge was forfeited, but restored again on payment of 20s. to the king.[x] Emmeline de Longspé died in 5 Edw. 3 (1331), and her great niece

Matilda, wife of Robert de Holland, was found, by inquisition, to be her heir aged forty years;[y] upon whom the reversion of the manor and hundred was settled by fine in 8 Edw. 2 (1314).[z] From her they descended with BRACKLEY through the Holands and Lovells till they became vested in the crown by the attainder of Francis viscount Lovell in 1 Hen. 7 (1485).[a]

Sir John Willes was a native of Warwickshire. Educated for the bar, he was appointed second justice of Chester in 1726, and chief justice in 1728, but resigned in 1733, on being nominated attorney general. In 1737 he was elevated to the chief justiceship of the common pleas, over which court he presided with distinguished credit, during the long period of twenty-one years; and the posthumous publication of his "Reports" by C. Durnford, in 1799, will continue his name as a lawyer in as high estimation in succeeding ages, as it was held by his contemporaries. He survived his resignation only three years, and died at his house in Bloomsbury on the 15th Dec. 1761. There is an engraved portrait of him by Faber, from a painting by Hudson, fol. His grandson John Freke Willes, esq. died in 1802, and devised his estate here and in Astrop to his first cousin, the late rev. William Shippen Willes, father of William Willes, esq. the present proprietor.

A court leet and court baron are occasionally held for this manor.

The Manor House, a respectable old mansion with gables and transom windows, stands on the south side of the church-yard. It has been deserted since the Kenwricks, in whose time there is a tradition that king Charles the First was concealed here.

Ancient Custom. Bridges says, 'a the wake is kept on the Sunday after the feast of St. Peter; at which time it is a custom to cover the floor of the church with rushes.' This custom, it is evident, was originally maintained at the expense of the prebendary; for, though it is now discontinued, a fee of 28s. yearly for the observance of it is still claimed by, and paid to the parish clerk, by the proprietor of the prebendal estate, and till the consolidation of the prebend in the family of Willes was borne proportionably by the different impropriators.

The Village is situated three miles from Banbury and six from Brackley. On the 15th of July 1785 a fire broke out here which burnt so rapidly that notwithstanding every exertion to suppress its fury, in about three hours forty houses were consumed with the greater part of the furniture and effects, to the damage, as verified on oath, of nearly £3,300.[e] In the time of Bridges, there were in Sutton and its hamlets 'one hundred and thirty four families.'[f] By the census of 1801, Sutton contained 221 houses and 1021 inhabitants; by that of 1811, Sutton with Astrop contained 227 houses and 1020 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, Sutton with its hamlets contained 267 houses (occupied by 326 families) and 1323 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £211. 16s. 10d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property in Sutton with Astrop, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £4,399. The poor's rates for Sutton and its members, for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £2,217. 2s. 4½d. being upwards of 8s. in the £. but this was the most expensive year ever known, owing partly to the prevalence of the typhus fever, and in the year following they were reduced to £1,788. 18s. 3½d. The wake is kept on the Sunday after the feast of St. Peter.

Market and Fair. Among the very few markets in this county recorded in Domesday, was one at "Sudtone," worth, in its profits to the lord 20s. yearly.[g] In 36 Hen. 3 (1252), Stephen Longspé had a grant of a weekly market here every Monday, and a fair annually on the vigil, day, and morrow of St. James the Apostle;[h] both which privileges were allowed on a writ of quo warranto in 3 Edw. 3 (1329),[i] but have long since sunk into desuetude.

The Statute for hiring of servants for the hundred of Sutton, after a discontinuance of more than seventy years, was renewed here in 1827. It was proclaimed by the chief constable, and an ox was roasted whole on the occasion.

The Advowson has been immemorially appendant to the prebendal estate.

Prebend, and Prebendal Manor. The observations on the Saxon parish of Sutton in the introductory page were grounded on the statement of Browne Willis;[k] but further investigation has thrown a shade of doubt on the original dependance of Buckingham on Sutton, though its subsequent subordination remains incontrovertible. It appears by domesday that the church of Buckingham had belonged to bishop Wulwyn in the time of Edward the Confessor, and was then in possession of his successor bishop Remigius,[l] who had recently translated the see from Dorchester in Oxfordshire to Lincoln, with the consent of William the Conqueror declared in a charter, by which, at the "exhortation" of the bishop he granted, or rather confirmed amongst other churches held by the bishop's predecessors, "Buckingham;"[m] and which was further confirmed by William 2nd, in the third year of his reign (1090);[n] but so far from Sutton and Horley being granted at the same time—as asserted by that laborious antiquary[k]—Henry 1st, by a special charter between 1099 and 1123, addressed to Robert (Bluet) bishop of Lincoln and the canons of St. Mary of Lincoln, the barons of France and England, of Lincolnshire and Oxfordshire, and all the barons of the bishoprick of Lincoln, granted the churches of "Sutton" with all lands, customs, tithes, and whatsoever belonged to them, and the land of Horley [Hornleia] which Ralph (Flambard) bishop of Durham held of him, for increasing the prebend which bishop Ralph and Elias his son had in the church of St. Mary of Lincoln; stipulating that Elias should hold it with this increase for life, with reversion to bishop Ralph his father, and after the death of both to remain to the church and bishop of Lincoln; which conditions bishop Robert in the royal presence ratified to bishop Ralph and his son.[o] The prebend here alluded to, of which this grant operated as an augmentation, there can be little doubt was Buckingham, and it is far from improbable, though not absolutely certain, that it was one of the filial churches implied in the plural expression; indeed if its dependence had not been precedent to, why should it have been consequent on this annexation? and yet henceforward this prebend, which was the most richly endowed of any in the kingdom, except Mussam in Yorkshire, was invariably styled the prebend of Sutton cum Buckingham, Horley, and Hornton.

To the corps of this prebend I shall venture to assign a small estate in "Sutone" held under the crown by Godwin the priest and Ulwin. It contained three virgates and the fifth part of a virgate. The arable land was two carucates cultivated by nine bordars. There was a mill worth 32d. yearly, and the whole was valued at 15s. yearly.[p] In the valuation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1), the prebend of Sutton with the churches of Buckingham and Horley was rated at £173. 6s. 8d. per ann.[q] About this time it seems to have been in lease to the prior and convent of Burcester or Bicester in Oxfordshire, who in 1300 (29 Edw. 1), having a controversy with the prior and convent of Alneto or Aulney in Normandy, demised to Galvan Beke of Florence, and Stephen his cousin (in trust for them) the prebendal church of Sutton with the chapel of Buckingham, and their respective manors, for a term of two years at the rent of £200 sterling.[r] In 3 Edw. 3 (1329), Neopolio, cardinal of St. Adrian, prebendary of King's Sutton, gave the king half a mark to be admitted to claim what he had neglected to claim on the first day of the iter, viz. view of frank pledge of his tenants in "Kynges Sutton," and correction of assize of bread and beer, in right of a certain manor which he had there belonging to the said prebend, and which privileges the prebendaries his predecessors had enjoyed from time beyond memory; but the jury presenting that he punished offenders by fine of 2s. for breach of assize, instead of the legal punishment of pillory and tumbril, the view was taken into the king's hands, and restored again on payment of 10s.[s] In 16 Edw. 3 (1342), William de Kildesby, then prebendary of Sutton, had a grant of free warren in all his demesne lands of Sutton, Buckingham, and Horley.[t] In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), this prebend was valued at £123 per ann.;[u] but in July 1 Edw. 6 (1547), it was converted into a lay fee, being surrendered to the crown by Richard Cockes, or Cox, D. D. the prebendary, who the same year took a demise of his late prebend of Sutton and Buckingham, otherwise Sutton, Buckingham, Horley, and Hornton, for the term of twenty-one years, at the yearly rent of £11. 4s. 0½d.[v]

PREBENDARIES. William, archdeacon of Buckingham, occurs between 1203 and 1206.[x]

Matthew de Stratton, archdeacon of Buckingham, and prebendary or rector of Sutton about 1240, entered into an agreement with the prior and convent of Dunstaple respecting the tithes of Charlton mill.[y] The succeeding list is adopted from Browne Willis,[z] and commences with

Richard de Gravesend, archdeacon of Northampton, who occurs about 1265, and presented the first vicar in 1275-6. He was elevated to the see of London in 1280, and

Geoffrey de Edenham was in possession of this prebend in 1300, and Neopolio, cardinal of St. Adrian in 1300 and 1329. He died at an advanced age in 1347, having resigned this stall to

William Killesby, who occurs in 1342, as does

Thomas de Brembre, in 1349. His successor, in 1368, was the illustrious

William of Wykeham, who in 1367 was promoted to the bishopric of Winchester, when

John Branspath, was collated to this prebend, and in his place

The Cardinal of Albanum in 1378. He is said to have been deprived of his preferment in 1381, and John Bacon, substituted in his room. He held it in 1385, but

Peter, Cardinal of St. George, was introduced by the pope in 1388, notwithstanding the king's edict against foreigners taking ecclesiastical preferments; he retained it however only a year, when he was succeeded by

Henry Beaufort, who was compelled to resign it to Henry, Cardinal of Naples, 16 Feb. 1389.

Henry Rumford, alias Cirencester, was collated 17 Sept. 1402. He obtained the archdeaconry of Canterbury in 1416, and was succeeded here by

Robert Gilbert, S. T. P. who was collated 31 Oct. 1420. He was raised to the see of London in Oct. 1436, and

William Ayscough, was instituted 10 Nov. following. On his elevation to the bishopric of Salisbury, Nicholas Dixon, was collated 28 July 1438. He died 10 Oct. 1448, and

John Breton, was collated 2 Nov. following. He died 6 Apr. 1465, and was buried in Lincoln cathedral, but

John Chedworth, was instituted in Apr. preceding. He was rector of Stepney in Middlesex, and dying in 1471 was buried there, and

John Ruding, LL. B. was collated 6 Aug. the same year. He died in 1481, and was buried at Biggleswade, in Bedfordshire, where he built the chancel, and erected a monument for himself. His successor

Richard Lavender, B. D. was collated 6 Nov. 1481. He is supposed to have finished Buckingham chancel, begun by his predecessor Ruding, and was buried there, His death introduced

William Smith, LL. D. archdeacon of Lincoln, who was collated 18 Feb. and instituted 23 Feb. 1507. He died in 1528, and was succeeded both in his archdeaconry and prebend by

Richard Pate, A. M. He afterwards obtained the mitre of Worcester, but was attainted in 1542, for opposing the ecclesiastical measures of king Henry VIII. and

Richard Cox, or Cocks, was instituted by the royal mandate 11 June the same year. He was promoted to the bishopric of Ely in 1559; but in 1547 had surrendered this prebend to the crown, which henceforward became a lay fee, though nearly a century after the surrender

George Heath, obtained a title to it in 1643, as did

Hugh Barcroft, S. T. P. in 1660, and was instituted 17 June 1661. On his decease

Thomas Stanhope, A. M. was instituted 13 June 1669; but as no legal title could be made to it, there has not been even a nominal prebendary since his death in 1674 or 1675.

The lease to Dr. Cockes, the late prebendary, was cancelled or relinquished; and another granted by the king to his uncle, the protector duke of Somerset,[a] which, however, was forfeited by his attainder. In 1 Mary (1553), this prebend was granted to John Mason, afterwards sir John Mason, for life, at the yearly rent before mentioned;[a] and in 11 Eliz. (1569), it was granted for life at the same rent to Henry lord Seymour,[b] who, in 37 Eliz. (1594-5), surrendered this lease for a new one granted to himself for life, remainder to Anthony Wingfield, esq. and Robert Johnson, afterwards sir Robert Johnson, for their lives successively, at the yearly rent of £90. 2s. 5d. and £6. 13s. 4d. for an heriot on the death of each lessee, and further charged with the yearly payment of £5. 13s. 4d. to the dean and chapter of Lincoln, £2 to the senior vicars choral, and 3s. 4d. to the junior or minor vicars choral of Lincoln, £6. 13s. 4d. each for the increase of the stipends of the vicars of Sutton, Buckingham, and Horley cum Hornton, to maintain a preacher; and charged also with the repairs of the chancels of the said churches and chapels.[b] Sir Robert Johnson, farmer of the manor of Sutton prebend, held a court baron in 3 Jac. (1605),[c] and the prebend appears to have been soon after granted out in fee to the Denton family of Hillesdon near Buckingham.[d] Sir Robert Brett, who sold the Buckinghamshire portion of it to the Denton family of Hillesdon near Buckingham.[d] Sir Robert Brett held a court baron at Sutton for his prebendal manor in 12 Jac. (1614),[e] and from him it passed by mesne conveyances to sir John Elwes and Elizabeth his wife, and George Holman, esq.* who held court leet and court baron for this manor in 1692. Bridges says, 'at present Capt. John Elwes, of Gloucestershire, hath two thirds of the prebend, manor, and impropriation, and William Holman, of Warkworth, esq. hath one third.'[f] how the family William Holman, esq. sold his third part of the prebendal manor in 1740 to sir John Willes; acquired the remaining two thirds I have had no means of ascertaining, but the whole is now vested in William Willes, esq.

The commissioners for inclosing Sutton, Astrop, and Charlton, respectively allotted lands to the impropriators, or proprietors of the prebendal estate in lieu of the impropriate glebe lands and tithes in those lordships. The portion of Purston in Sutton parish remains subject to the impropriate tithes, but Walton pays neither tithe nor modus to the impropriator.

The Vicarage or Donative is considered a peculiar in the diocese of Lincoln; but since the conversion of the prebend into a lay fee, it is doubtful whether the jurisdiction of the vicarage is not transferred to the bishopric of Peterborough. The church of Sutton was annexed to the prebend, and the incumbent from time to time nominated by the prebendary. Richard Gravesend, archdeacon of Northampton (and prebendary of Sutton), presented Henry de Thornberg, priest, to the vicarage of the prebendal church of Sutton, who was instituted 9 Mar. 1276-7, when it was found by inquisition that the vicarage was ordained with all manner of oblations arising to the said church, as well in money as in wax or candles, with anniversaries and processionals, the tithe of cows, calves, foals, pigs, pigeons, eggs, and bread, arising to the altar, the tithe of milk, and of money as well from wool as lambs, arising in the name of tithes, and the tithe of mills, and mortuaries as well as in animals when they happen, with the tithe of flax, hemp, orchards, and geese; moreover the vicar for the time being received yearly two marks (£1. 6s. 8d.) from the chapels of Buckingham and Thorley belonging to the said church, all which things were estimated at 15 marks (£10) yearly, by the inquisition thereupon made; and in addition, the manse, which was of the fee of the church and contiguous thereto, in which the priest used to dwell, was set apart and assigned to the vicar, who, by himself, with a deacon and a clerk, should serve the church, and provide six wax candles and a lamp in the chancel at his own cost, and the extraordinary charges he should answer for according to his portion, and the prebendary should demand nothing more from him than divine service, and all other charges, ordinary and extraordinary, the prebendary should acknowledge according to his portion.[g]

In the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3),[h] and of 1391 (20 Edw. 1)[i] the vicarage of the prebendal church of Sutton is rated at £6. 13s. 4d. per ann. but it does not occur in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8). The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a vicarage in the patronage of Carey Rawleigh, esq.; that Robert Mansell was the incumbent; and that the profits arose from tithes worth £10 yearly £18 yearly out of the impropriation, and 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.) more, yearly in dispute whether to be paid to the minister of Buckingham and the minister of Horley, or to the vicar of King's Sutton.[k] The vicarage at present consists of an allotment by the commissioners for inclosing Sutton, of 10 acres out of the allotment to the impropriator, to the use of the vicar, another allotment of six acres in lieu of the annual sum of £6. 13s. 4d. heretofore paid by the impropriator to the vicar, and a third allotment of six acres in lieu of the vicarial tithes of homesteads; an allotment of nearly eight acres in Astrop, and of nearly four acres in Charlton by their respective commissioners of inclosure in lieu of vicarial tithes of homesteads, &c.; certain customary annual payments, amounting to about £2, from homesteads in Sutton, Astrop, and Charlton, not exonerated by the inclosure acts; a composition for the vicarial tithes of Purston within this parish; and an annual payment of 21s. from Walton; the whole value of the vicarage, including easter offerings, surplice fees, and other dues, averaging only about £85 per ann. The vicarage-house is small and mean; unfit for the residence of a clergyman. Attached to the north side of the church is a tenement, not improbably the manor mentioned in the endowment.

Vicars. Henry de Thornberg, priest, by Richard de Gravesend, archdeacon of Northampton and prebendary of Sutton, 9 Mar. 1276-7.[g]

Sir Richard de Mikeltone, perpetual vicar of Sutton, granted a messuage and a virgate of land in Sutton to Thomas Markewarde, by deed without date.[l]

John Attediche, by John Bacoun, prebendary.

John Bedeford, priest, 12 Jan. 1384-5.

John Wayte, of Wodhows, priest, by Thomas Southam, &c. 18 Oct. 1389. He was rector of Steane from 1402 to 1427.

Richard Prowryng, by John Breton, prebendary.

Richard Kynthorp, priest, 4 Dec. 1451.

John Coke, priest, 11 Aug. 1461.

Sir William Barnester, by William Smyth, LL. D. prebendary, 20 May 1525.

William Browne, by John Mason, A. A. (lessee of the prebend) 3 Dec. 1556.

The preceding vicars were regularly instituted at Lincoln, but no other institutions to this benefice occur in the episcopal registers there till 1715.

James Smith, vicar, was buried here 16 May 1614.[m]

John Creeke, occurs in 1618,[m] "John Creeke, clerk, sometime vicar of this town and afterwards parson of Bramshulse, in Staffordshire, was buried at Bramshulse 31 May 1652." [m]

William Bradley, vicar, occurs in 1695 and was buried here 26 Apr. 1710.[n]

Thomas Kirby, vicar, buried here 13 Feb. 1713-14.[n]

Thomas Couch, was instituted to this vicarage by the bishop of Lincoln 10 Nov. 1715, since which time there is no entry respecting this benefice in the episcopal registers.

Nicholas Smith signs as "minister" 1715, and was buried at Banbury . . . Mar. 1730.[n]

William Thomas Bowles, son of the vicar of Brackley, occurs in 1760, and resigned in 1773.[n]

All his successors have been admitted by the commissary of the dean and chapter of Lincoln.

John Deacle, of Lincoln coll. Oxf. A. M. already noticed under Newbottle, was appointed to "the donative or vicarage of King's Sutton," by John Willes, of Astrop, esq. and admitted 20 Apr. 1773. He was buried here 20 Oct. 1809,[n] and the lord of the manor and patron

William Shippen Willes, of Christ ch. coll. Oxf. A. M. was admitted 19 Feb. 1810, on his own nomination. He was also rector of Preston Bisset, Buckinghamshire, a prebendary of York, and many years perpetual curate of Cirencester, Gloucestershire. He was buried here 30 Oct. 1822,[n] when Richard Weston Leonard, of Queen's coll. Oxf. A. M. vicar of Newbottle, was nominated by John Williams Willes, of Astrop, esq. and admitted 12 Apr. 1823.

THE REGISTER of marriages commences in 1570, of baptisms in 1582, and of burials in 1614.

THE CHURCH, dedicated to St. Peter, is a large handsome edifice, consisting of a tower containing eight bells,* surmounted by a spire, which, by its height and beauty attracts attention from every point of the surrounding country: the fabric, in addition, includes a nave, north and south aisles and porches, and chancel. The west front presents a fine composition of the Perpendicular style; the tower, about 80 ft. high, is flanked by plain buttresses placed diagonally; the belfry windows are long and square-headed; the parapets pierced in quatrefoils, and in the centre of the cornice beneath, on the successive sides of the buildings are an angel, a lion, a bull, and an eagle, the four emblems of the evangelists. The tower is crowned at each angle with a rich pinnacle with crocketted canopy and finial above 18 ft. high, from which springs an open flying buttress intersected in its progress to the spire by another pinnacle of similar design to the outer one, but 7 ft. higher; and from the centre rises a crocketted spire 100 ft. in height, of a peculiarly light and airy character, elegantly banded between two tiers of windows on alternate faces. A large porch projects from the tower, having buttresses surmounted by crocketted pinnacles at the sides, and the sloped gable terminating horizontally in the centre. Over the entrance door, which has a Tudor arch, is a statue—now headless—of St. Peter in a canopied niche. The western ends of the aisles are in a line with the tower, and exhibit two large windows. The southern one has five lights forming in the head two ogee arches filled with quatrefoils and elongated trefoils, surmounted by a quatrefoil in the crown of the general arch. The north window has the same number of lights, but the head of the arch was cut away when the roof of the aisle was lowered. The tower and spire are of good masonry, but both aisles are built of rubble stone, and the windows are a mixture of Decorated and Perpendicular, but none deserving of particular notice. The cornice of the chancel is enriched with heads, and some of the windows are ogee headed. The interior is paved and pewed, and has a west gallery across the nave. The west porch, which has a groined roof is 12 ft. 3 in. long by 11 ft. wide; the tower 20 ft. 3 in. by 17 ft. 9 in.; the nave 44 ft. 6 in. by 17 ft. 9 in.; the north aisle 59 ft. 10 in. by 22 ft. 7 in.; the south aisle 59 ft. 10 in. by 21 ft. 7 in.; and the chancel 42 ft. 5 in. by 16 ft. 10 in. At the west end of the south aisle is a rude circular font of extraordinary dimensions, on a low octagonal base with buttressed angles, evidently of a later period. Of the primitive Norman fabric, the font, the arcade of pillars in the south aisle, and the stalls in the chancel were retained, when the exterior of the building was renovated. The Nave is lofty and lighted by four square-headed clerestory windows on each side. The north aisle is divided from it by three large pointed arches on simple clustered pillars dying into a circular form above the base, which is octangular; and having capitals of plain mouldings conforming to the general contour of the column. The aisle west of the nave has been partitioned off many years, and appropriated to a school. The south aisle is also separated from the nave by three pointed arches, which have a dripstone round them with a rude hatched moulding, and rest on massive Norman circular pillars, the two eastern ones having shallow capitals slightly voluted. The east end of this aisle is parted off by a rich wooden screen formerly painted. In the south-east angle is a piscina. The chancel is entered under a lofty pointed arch. At the entrance on each side is a range of six Norman stalls divided by circular columns with plain capitals, supporting circular arches. These seats were not improbably appropriated to the officiating ministers of the mother church and the affiliated chapels when assembled on high festivals, and may therefore be regarded as a strong collateral corroboration of the early history of the parish.

Bridges says, "At the upper end of the south aisle is an altar monument covered with marble, on which were the portraits of a man and his three wives with their children in brass. The figures of the man, his wives, and three children of riper years are torn off; but the effigies of eight male and eight female children are left still remaining. This is probably the monument taken notice of by Leland,[o] who saith, 'Here lyeth one Westall in a tombe in a chapell on the south syde of the body of the church. He was a rich man, and new re-edified the church of Sutton.'"

BENEFACTIONS (p. 541). HAYNES'S GIFT. The sum of £100, bequeathed by John Haynes in 1688, the interest to be distributed among poor persons of the parish not receiving parochial aid, has been applied towards the purchase of a house as a poor-house for the parish, and the yearly sum of £5 is paid under the denomination of rent by the parish officers in respect of this charity.

CARTWRIGHT'S CHARITY is an annual payment of £4. 6s. 8d. charged on certain estates, which is applied in the purchase of twopenny loaves, given to ten poor widows every Sunday. Richard Cartwright, esq. by will 1 Feb. 1633, gave to the poor of King's Sutton £3. 9s. 4d. per ann. part of a rent charge of £23. 8s. per ann. out of his manor of Dedington and lands there, and in Hempton and Clifton, Oxfordshire; but it is not known how the remainder of the £4. 6s. 8d. originated.

POOR'S ALLOTMENT. The commissioners for inclosing Astrop, awarded 10 acres of land for the poor, in lieu of the right of cutting gorse, which is now let for £15 per ann. It is usual to apply the sum of 17s. yearly out of the rent towards the repair of the church, and the remainder is distributed about Christmas, as a dole, among all the poor of the parish.

WILLES'S CHARITY. Dame Margaret Willes, by a testamentary paper, dated 16 Nov. 1751, desired that the interest of £100 then in the hands of the lord chief justice Willes, should be disposed of in moieties; one half on the feast of St. Peter's to the master of the free school at King's Sutton, to teach four or more of the poorest children in the parish to read and spell; and the other half equally among six of the oldest and poorest widows, not excepting those who receive alms in the parish of Sutton and the adjoining village of Astrop.

JENKINSON'S CHARITY. Mrs. Ann Jenkinson, by will, dated 3d Jan. 1810, bequeathed to two trustees all her stock in the Navy 5 per Cent. Annuities, as a fund for charitable purposes, and directed them to unite with themselves three of the most respectable inhabitants of, or owners of estates within the parish of King's Sutton, though out resident, so that there should be five trustees in the whole, of which number the vicar of the parish for the time being should be one; and she desired that the stock should be transferred into the joint names of the five trustees, and that the dividends should be applied according to the discretion of the majority of them, in putting out apprentices to proper trades or occupations the children, as well girls as boys, of poor persons residing in the parish of King's Sutton, not able of themselves so to provide for their families, and she earnestly entreated the trustees to use their utmost diligence on every occasion, that the children should be apprenticed to honest persons of good morals, and well skilled in their several trades or occupations; Provided that, if in any one year there should not be a sufficient number of poor children fitly qualified to be placed out apprentice, or proper masters or mistresses with whom to place them, so that the dividends should not be wholly expended in apprenticing poor children, then she directed that the residue should be employed by the majority of the trustees, at their discretion, in adding to the comforts and conveniences of the poor, honest, and industrious inhabitants of the parish and their families, but so as not in any case wholly to maintain any poor person, it being her design to better the condition of the poor, and not to exonerate the parishioners from contributing to their maintenance of them, as they are bound by law; and she desired the trustees on any vacancy arising in their number, to elect, as before directed, some other fit and proper person or persons, so always that the vicar of the parish should be one of the trustees, and that there should not be less than three nor more than five trustees at any one time. The charity fund consists of £3,150 New 4 per Cent. Annuities (substituted for £3,000 Navy 5 per Cents, the fund derived under the will), producing an annual dividend of £126.

For some years after the death of the testatrix, the demand for the benefit of the apprenticing fund was not sufficient to exhaust it, and in those years the surplus was distributed among poor people. Of late, however, there have been six children, with premiums of £21 each, apprenticed every year.

Church Lands. By an inquisition at Northampton 9 Sept. 6 Car. (1630), before commissioners appointed by the court of chancery, it was found that the churchwardens of the parish of King's Sutton, from time immemorial, received the rents of an ancient messuage and tenement in King's Sutton, commonly called "the Great Church House" with appurtenances, and certain doles and pieces of meadow called "the Nothinge" in Lake meadow and Wethames, worth 58s. 4d. yearly, another messuage called "the Little Church House," and certain doles of meadow in Lake Meadow and Westhames, worth 36s. 8d. yearly, with a messuage called "the Church Barn," worth 10s. yearly, another messuage called "the Church Kitchen," worth 20s. yearly, and another messuage called "the Chamber and Church Shop," worth 6s. 8d. yearly, belonging to the parish church and parishioners of Sutton, in trust, for the repair of the said parish church, bells, and clock, for ever; but that Richard Chambers, being in possession of the said premises as churchwarden in the 6th of Elizabeth, by colour of a copy of court roll granted to him by the then lord of the manor, entered on them and employed the rents to his own use for life, and they were still withheld from the church and converted into private property.

The commissioners therefore, by virtue of their commission, ordered and adjudged, that whereas John Blencowe, esq. Thomas Tommes, and Edmund Carpenter, parishioners of Sutton, were the only means and procurers of the said commission at their own costs and charges, they should take and receive the rents of the said premises until they had repaid themselves their expenses, and that afterwards the rents should be received by the churchwardens as before the 6th of Elizabeth, and applied to the repairs of the church as heretofore.

The houses mentioned in the inquisition are not now standing, but there are five cottages, probably on their site, adjoining the church yard, and 3 a. 3 r. of land in the meadow near Twyford, vested in the churchwardens for the above purposes.

William Lisle Bowles, A. M. one of the most elegant, pathetic, and original living poets, is a native of this place, where his father was the resident incumbent. He was baptized here on the 25th of September 1762, when Lisle was added to his christian name in compliment to a family from whom he was maternally descended, and whose pedigree associated with Bowles, has been introduced under Evenley.*

Mr. Bowles was placed on the Wykeham foundation at Winchester, under Dr. Joseph Warton, and at a subsequent period defended his alma mater from the attacks of Mr. Brougham, in a pamphlet, entitled, "Vindiciæ Wycchamicæ." From this seminary in 1781 he was elected a scholar of Trinity college, Oxford, and gained the chancellor's prize for Latin verse in 1783, but left the university before he became a fellow. He entered at Trinity college, there being in that year no vacancy at New college, to which he would otherwise have succeeded as senior of the boys on Wykeham's foundation. He married Magdalene, daughter of the rev. Dr. Wake, prebendary of Westminster.

To the recommendation of his maternal grandfather Dr. Grey, of Hinton, the late archbishop Moore owed his engagement as tutor in the family of the duke of Marlborough, which paved the way for his future advancement, and in remembrance of this act of friendship, the archbishop in 1804 collated the doctor's grandson to the valuable vicarage of Bremhill, Wiltshire, in his gift as an option pro hac vice. He had been nominated by bishop Douglas to a prebend, and in 1828 the dean and chapter unanimously elected him a canon residentiary of Salisbury; prior to which appointment Bremhill had been his constant residence for nearly the fourth of a century.

Mr. Bowles's earliest poetical effusions submitted to the public, were "Fourteen Sonnets," printed in 4to, 1789; which were followed by "Verses to John Howard, F. R. S." 1798, "The Grave of Howard," 1790, "Verses on the institution of the Philanthropic Society," 1790," Monody written at Matlock," 1791, "Elegiac stanzas written during sickness at Bath," 1796, and "Hope an allegorical sketch," 1796, separately printed in the same form. These were collected, and with a few additions, published in 1796 under the title of "Sonnets and other Poems," in a small 8vo. volume, handsomely embellished, which, in 1798, had passed through six editions. Between this year, and 1809, three other volumes, uniform in size and title with the first, made their appearance, including original pieces, with several previously printed in quarto, and such has been their deserved popularity that they have now reached the eleventh edition.

His other poetical works, are, "The Spirit of Discovery," 1805, sm. 8vo. 2d ed. "The Missionary," sm. 8vo. 3d ed. 1815. "The Grave of the Last Saxon," 1822, sm. 8vo. "Village Verse Book," sm. 8vo. several editions. And "Banwell Hill, or Days Departed," 1828, sm. 8vo. In 1807 he edited, "the Works of Alexander Pope, in Verse and Prose," in 1808, 8vo. Some of the statements and opinions advanced in the prefixed memoir and critical dissertation were vehemently controverted; and allowed him "for fifteen years of life scarce breathing-time from self defence," in a series of vindicatory Letters addressed to Lord Byron, Roscoe, Campbell, and Gifford.

In the exercise of his professional duties he has published, "A Discourse delivered to the military association for the town and district of Shaftsbury," 1790, 4to. "A Sermon preached at the anniversary meeting of the Sons of the Clergy," 1804, 4to. "Sermons on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans," 1 vol. 8vo. "The Bible and Protestant Christian," 8vo. And "St. Paul at Athens," 1828.

Mr. Bowles having promised to contribute to sir R. C. Hoare's splendid History of Wiltshire, a topographical sketch of the parish in which he resided, and finding its peculiar claims on the attention of the antiquary and parish historian too extensive for incorporation in the general work, he produced in 1828 a most interesting volume on "The parochial History of Bremhill; containing a particular account, from authentic and unpublished documents, of the Cistercian Abbey of Stanley in that parish, with observations and reflections on the origin and establishment of parochial clergy, and other circumstances of general parochial interest, including illustrations of the origin and designation of the stupendous monuments of antiquity in the neighbourhood, Avebury, Silbury, and Wansdike," 8vo. with plates. And before the close of the year appeared "Hermes Britannicus; or a dissertation on the Celtic deity Teutates, the Mercury of Cæsar, in further proof and corroboration of the origin and designation of the great temple at Avebury, in Wiltshire, being a supplement to a dissertation on the same deity in the parochial History of Bremhill," 8vo.

Tumuli, &c. In the vicinity of the presumed course of the Roman Portway near Buston hall or lodge, at the south extremity of this lordship are two tumuli, well known in the adjacent villages as the two lows; and a third in a very prominent situation on High Thorns' hill above the house. About half a mile to the south-west are some arable fields of red land; in one of them called Black Lands' piece, from the soil being of a darker hue, skeletons have been found at various times, lying with their heads to the east, within rude cests of sarson stones. The surface of the field is level, and the interments are at the depth of two feet. In 1825 on the same level was discovered a cinerary urn of reddish unbaked clay 10¼ in. in height, and varying in girth from 1 ft. 2½ in. to 1 ft. 9½ in. It was filled with burned bones and earth, and was standing upright, with a stone placed over the mouth. Close to it was a small coin of the emperor Adrian, and at a short distance two large brass of Marcus Aurelius. About two yards from the urn were found three skeletons. Nearer to the village in Lake meadow and barton are traces of an intrenchment; and a skeleton was dug up there at the time of the inclosure.* In other parts of the field coins of Tetricus, Claudius, Gothicus, and Constans, have been found.

a corruption of East-thorp or village, is a large hamlet on the east of Sutton and west of Newbottle, and a member of both parishes. In its open field state it consisted of sixty-one yardlands or virgates in the former, and sixteen in the latter parish. It was inclosed by act of parliament 12 Geo. 3 (1772), and is now found by survey to contain about 1250 acres in Sutton, and 315 acres in Newbottle parish, making a total of 1565 acres, of which about 1295 acres belong to William Willes, esq. the lord of the manor. The soil is principally a dark loam, and nearly two thirds of the lordship is in pasture.

Astrop Wells. In April 1664 Dr. Richard Lower, an eminent physician travelling with Dr. Willis to visit patients, made a discovery of the medicinal spring at Eastthorp, commonly called Astrop near King's Sutton, his companion, being then, as usual asleep, or in a sleepy condition, on horseback; but afterwards, imparting his discovery, they, on their return, made some experiments upon it, and being persuaded of its efficacy, recommended it in their practice. "Soon after, the water was enclosed in a well, and upon the said commendations 'twas yearly, as to this time it is, frequented by all sorts of people."[o] So says Anthony a Wood, who, in 1694 paid a visit to it himself, which is thus recorded in his diary: "July 10th. I went to Astrop Wells; took up my lodgings at Wm. Upton's at King's Sutton near thereunto; and continued there till the 15th of August. 12s. for my carriage backwards and forwards, and £5 for my being there; 4s. 6d. I gave for my lodgings per week."[p] Aubrey gives a different version of the discovery, and attributes it solely to Dr. Willis. "About 1657, riding towards Brackley to a patient, his way led him through Astrop, where he observed the stones in the little rill were discoloured of a kind of Crocus Martis colour; thought he, this may be an indication of iron; he gets galls, and puts some of the powder into the water; and immediately it turned blackish; then said he, "Ile not send my patients now so far as Tunbridge," and so in a short time brought these waters into vogue, and hath enriched a poor obscure village."[q] The celebrated Dr. Ratcliffe, of Oxford, patronised Astrop very warmly, and in 1749 a new well at Sutton, half a mile from the old spa, was opened with great solemnity, and a breakfast given by Anthony Keck, esq. of Leicestershire, in gratitude for the benefit he had received. Astrop was then in the height of its popularity, and could boast of its public ball every Monday, and breakfast, cards, dancing, and ordinary for ladies and gentlemen every Friday during the season.[r] Its attraction began rapidly to decline about the commencement of the present century, and it is now completely supplanted by more fashionable rivals.

Dr. Short, in his account of mineral waters, characterizes Astrop as a noble, brisk, very spirituous, clear, pleasant tasted chalybeate, and states that the spring discharges between three and four hundred gallons of water in an hour. With galls there it is of a deep purple, but carried a quarter of a mile to the house, its only a pink. He describes very minutely the accommodation for strangers, and cites some very remarkable cures.[s]

Morton made many analytical experiments and observations on this water, but none of sufficient novelty or importance to require repetition.[t]

MANORIAL HISTORY. The name of this hamlet is not found in domesday, but it is evident by the subsequent tenure of the lands, that the two portions of the Grentemaisnil and Moreton fees surveyed under Sutton, constituted Esthorp or Astrop—so denominated from being situated in the east division of the parish.

GRENTEMAISNIL FEE.* HONOR OF LEICESTER.† Willa and Turbern in the Saxon era had a freehold in "Sutone" rated at 10s. yearly, and trebled at the domesday survey when it was held by Hugh under Hugh de Grentemaisnil. It contained a hide and a half, and the tenth part of a hide. The arable land was four carucates; one in demesne with two servants; half an one in the occupation of two bordars; and the remainder waste, or unaccounted for. There was a mill worth 2s. yearly.[u]

MORETON FEE.‡ HONOR OF LEICESTER.† At the domesday survey William held of the earl of Moreton the fifth part of a hide in "Sutone." The arable land was half a caracute. There was one villein there.[x] In the hydarium of Hen. 2. under Sutton, William de Quincy was certified to hold a hide and a half and a small virgate of the earl of Leicester; and Pagan the same quantity of the earl, which Robert son of Osbert had held.[y] On the partition of the earldom of Leicester, the paramouncy of these estates fell to the honour of WINCHESTER.

MANOR. Amongst the feudatories of the late Roger de Quincy, earl of Winchester,§ enumerated in the inquisitions 54 Hen. 3 (1270), and 55 Hen. 3 (1271), William de Stapleton, and William Mordant held half a fee in Easthorp or Astrop worth 100s. yearly[z] in feudal perquisites. According to Bridges, 'in Edward III.'s time this moiety was in possession of Henry de Ferrers,[a] who died seised of it in the seventeenth year of this reign, and left it to his posterity, who were Lords of the Manor of Newbottle, and enjoyed this part of Astrop for many generations.' But this statement involves a double mistake, for it was not this Newbottle, but the other place of the same name in Brington parish which was possessed by the Ferrars family ‖; nor had they the usufructuary interest in this estate at Astrop, but only the paramouncy by inheritance from Quincy, for in the successive inquisitions of the family it is invariably described as the half fee held by the heir of William Stapleton;[b] and in June 11 Hen. 8 (1519),

Ralph Dorne, son and heir of Thomas Dorne, son and heir of John Dorne and Joan his wife, daughter and heir of Thomas Stapleton and Margery his wife, vested all his lands in King's Sutton and Astrop in trustees,[c] preparatory to levying a fine of them in Martinmass following to

Fulk Barker, gent. and the said trustees, in fee,[c] whose father Thomas Barker, gent. died in 14 Hen. 8 (1522) seised (int. al.) of three messuages, a mill, and lands in King's Sutton and Astrop, held of George Keble, esq.¶ by service of 3s. yearly, leaving the said Fulk his son and heir, aged twenty-nine years.[d] His lineal descendant Thomas Barker, esq. died in 18 Jac. (1620), seised (int. al.) of a capital messuage in Astrop in tenure of Thomas Barker, sen. held of the heir of sir Roger Wilbraham as of his manor of Newbottle by 3s. yearly rent; another capital messuage in Astrop called "the Mote-house," held of Richard Kenwrick, esq. as of his manor of King's Sutton by 21s. 3d. yearly rent and suit at court, and Twyford mill held also of the manor of Sutton, leaving Richard his son and heir aged fourteen years;[e] who, in June 7 Car. (1631), conveyed the above estates by the description of a capital messuage in Astropp, late in tenure of dame Dorothy Pigott, widow, with a close and four and a half yard-lands or virgates thereto belonging, another capital messuage in Astrop, in the parish of King's Sutton, called the Mote-house, with nine and a half yard-lands thereto belonging, and Twyford mill, with a yard-land in Sutton thereto belonging, to Richard Cartwright, esq. of AYNHO.[c]

The Barker estate continued in the Cartwright family till sold by William Ralph Cartwright, esq. M. P. for the county, together with an estate of three and a half yard-lands in Astrop, in the parish of Newbottle, purchased by John Cartwright, esq. in 1641, from Michael Chambers, gent. to

The rev. William Shippen Willes, father of the present proprietor. In addition to the above, the Willes estate in Astrop comprises a number of small freeholds acquired at various times by the lord chief justice and his successors.

OSENEY ABBEY near Oxford, had lands in Esthorp of the gift of Matthew de Stretton, archdeacon of Buckingham,[f] and a messuage and three virgates of the gift of Walter de Feye and Isabella his wife in 53 Hen. 3 (1269),[g] which, after the dissolution were granted to the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford.[h]

THE MOTE HOUSE was probably the original mansion of the manor or estate of the Stapletons.

ASTROP HOUSE stands in the parish of Newbottle, and was erected by the lord chief justice Willes. It is an uniform elevation of stone, and contains a good collection of family and other pictures. The Hall and Staircase: lord chief justice Willes with the seals of Chester, Jarvis; another, in his judge's robes; Edward Willes, justice of K. The village consists of 34 houses in Sutton, and 12 in Newbottle parish, and is about four miles from Banbury, and five from Brackley.

gives name to a water mill and bridge over the river Charwell, dividing the parish of Sutton from Oxfordshire.

Bridges has erroneously assigned to Twyford[i] the domesday entry of "Teworde," which will be shewn in a future page to refer to THENFORD. The earliest notice which has been retrieved of Twyford is in the inquisition in 1 Eliz. (1559), after the death of Fulk Barker, gent. who died seised (int. al.) of Twyford mill and a virgate of land in Sutton thereto belonging,[c] and the subsequent descent has been incorporated under ASTROP.

WALTON,

in domesday "Waltone," may not improbably be "the town upon the bank or wall," as suggested by Morton,[l] who conjectures that the vallum described under WARDON,* extended southward to the river Charwell below this place; but, it must be confessed, there is now no indication of its course here, though, as observed in a former page,† the Roman Portway may be traced along the upper part of Walton grounds into Aynho field.

Walton is situated between Aynho and King's Sutton, but approaches nearest the former, of which it is a member in its civil relations, though ecclesiastically connected with the latter. It is all old inclosure, and contains about 735 acres, the property of the three coheiresses of George Augustus third earl of Guilford. The soil is principally a rich loam, and nearly the whole lordship is in permanent pasture.

MANORIAL HISTORY. MORETON FEE.‡ BARONY OF KEYNES.§ Two of the three estates into which this hamlet was divided, were of the Moreton fee at the domesday survey. Prior to the Norman conquest, five thanes had half a hide in "Waltone," within the soke or jurisdiction of Sutton, but where-ever they removed they were at liberty to dispose of their land, which was then rated at 10s. yearly, but was doubled in value at the survey, when it was held by William under the earl of Moreton. The arable land was one carucate, cultivated by two servants and two bordars.[m]

Another portion of "Waltone" was the freehold of Alwin before the conquest, and rated at 3s. yearly, but raised to 10s. at the survey, when it was held by Ralph under the earl of Moreton. It consisted of half a hide and a bovate or oxgang—the largest estate in extent, though the lowest in value. The arable land was one carucate, in the occupation of three bordars, with one acre of meadow.[m]

BAIEUX FEE.‖ The third portion of "Waltone" presents one of the comparatively rare instances of subinfeudation in the Saxon era, being held by Ulfric under Alnod of Canterbury. It was then rated at 10s. yearly, but raised to 15s. at the survey, when it was held by William, of the bishop of Baieux. It lay within the soke of Sutton, and contained one virgate, and the fifth part of one virgate. The arable land was one carucate, in the occupation of one servant and two villeins. There was a mill worth 4s. yearly.[n]

HONOR OF LEICESTER.§ The paramouncy passed to the honor of Leicester, but the family of Keynes had an intermediate seignory, and the lord of Walton did suit to their court at Dodford.[o]

MANOR. William, the mesne lord of the Moreton fee, may without hesitation be referred to William Keynes, of DODFORD, and there can be little doubt of William who held under the bishop of Baieux, being the same individual. His descendants, however, subinfeuded their interest here at a very early period; for in the hydarium of Hen. 2, one Guonild was found to hold in Walton one hide with two virgates.[p]

In the book of knights fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295), John de Mohaut answered for half a fee in Walton of the fees of the earl of Leicester;[q] and in 9 Edw. 2 (1315), Robert de Bereford ¶ was returned lord of Walton.[r]

In 3 Edw. 3 (1329), John "de Insula Vecta," or Lisle, of the isle of Wight, was summoned by writ of quo warranto to shew his right to view of frank pledge in his manor of "Waleton," when, the privilege not having been claimed at the last iter, he gave the king half a mark for liberty to claim, and pleaded prescription: it appearing, however, that he punished offenders against the assize of bread and beer by amerciaments, instead of the legal punishment of pillory and tumbril, the view was taken into the king's hands, but restored again for a fine of half a mark.[s] He died in 5 Edw. 3 (1331), seised of this manor, held of the earl of Lancaster and Leicester, the paramount lord, leaving Bartholomew de Lisle his son and heir, aged twenty-three years;[t] on whose decease, in 19 Edw. 3 (1345), it was found to be held of the heir of John de Keynes, the intermediate lord, by the service of half a fee and suit at the court of Dodford.[u] His grandson John de Lisle appears to have alienated it, as it is not included in the inquisition after his death in 9 Hen. 4 (1407);[x] and a fine was levied of it in 5 Hen. 4 (1404), to

John Abberbury,[y] who, or his son of the same name, in 7 Hen. 6 (1429), did suit at the court of Dodford for his lands in Walton.[o]

John de Lisle, æt. 22, Esc. 7 Hen. 6.

In a "rental renewed and made" 20 July 3 Hen. 7 (1488), from an old precedent in 11 Edw. 1 of the tenants of the manor or barony of Dodford, it is stated that John Mohaut held half a fee in Walton, which John Boyle late held, and now the heir of the said John, by the same service.[x]

In 9 Hen. 7 (1493), Hugh Shirley levied a fine of Walton to John Golyn,[y] who in Jan. 22 Hen. 7 (1507-8) died seised of the manor of "Walton in the parish of King's Sutton," leaving Elizabeth his daughter and heiress aged six years;[z] but a few months prior to his decease he had married Eleanor sister of Christopher Bambridge, clerk, and settled this manor on her for life, remainder to himself in fee.[a] On the determination of his widow's interest, it passed to

John Roys, son of Margaret, aunt of the settler, as his next heir, and by inquisition after his death in 16 Hen. 8 1524, Thomas Rigby, clerk, was found to be his brother and heir aged forty years.[a] In 22 Hen. 8 (1530) he levied a fine of this manor to

Richard "Farmer" or Fermor, merchant of the staple of Calais,[b] and ancestor of the earls of Pomfret.* Being a very zealous papist, and having been convicted in 1540 (32 Hen. 8), of sending eight pence and a couple of shirts —for no more could be legally proved against him—to the relief of his former confessor Nicholas Thane, then a prisoner in Buckingham gaol for denying the king's supremacy, he was attainted of præmunire, and his whole estate, real and personal, forfeited to the king, who in July 1544 in consideration of £304 granted the reversion of the manor of Walton, subject to a demise from the said Richard Fermor in 1538 to Thomas Rigby, clerk, for life, to

Robert Wilford, and Thomas Farmer merchant of the staple of Calais.[c] In Feb. 2 Edw. 6 (1547-8) Thomas Farmer had licence to alienate this manor to William Farmer or Fermor, esq.[d] of Somerton in Oxfordshire, who in 6 Edw. 6 (1552) died without issue, when this manor reverted again to the line of Richard the original purchaser, whose eldest son John Farmer or Fermor, esq. afterwards knighted, was nephew and heir of William;[e] and from him it lineally descended to his grandson sir Hatton Fermor,[f] who alienated it about 1630.

In April 1636 sir Thomas Pope of Wroxton, Oxfordshire, afterwards 3d earl of Downe in Ireland, settled the manor and tithes of Walton on his intended marriage with Beata Poole,[g] and dying in 1667, was succeeded by his son Thomas 4th earl of Downe, on whose decease without issue the following year, the title became extinct, and the family inheritance devolved on his three sisters and coheiresses, Beata, Frances, and Finetta.[h]

Frances married sir Francis North, 1st lord Guildford, who, by the purchase of another third of the manor and tithes of Walton in Nov. 1680 for £3,200, from William Soame of Thurlow, in Suffolk, esq.[h] and of the remaining third in June 1681 for £3,000 from Robert Hyde, of Dinton, in Wiltshire, esq. and Finetta his wife,[h] obtained the intirety, which descended agreeably to the pedigree under Chipping Wardon, down to Frederick 5th earl of Guilford, on whose decease in Oct. 1827 it passed by the settlement of George Augustus, the 3d earl, to his three daughters and coheiresses Maria, wife of John 2d and present Marquis of Bute, lady Susan North, and lady Georgiana North.

Bicester Priory Lands. 'The prior of Burcestre [Oxfordshire] held also lands in Waltone, for which he did suit and service in Aienho court, and in which he was assoyned, as were also his successors sir Thomas Pope, and other tenants, and owners of the manor of Walton, temp. Henry VI, Edward IV, Henry VII, Henry VIII, and Elizabeth, and accounted for waifs, estrays, and felons' goods, to the lords of Aynho.'[i] These possessions of Bicester priory are not noticed in any of the ecclesiastical taxations or surveys.

No trace of the Manor House is now remaining; and there are only two farm houses in the lordship.

St. Rumbald's Chapel. According to the monkish legends, the infant St. Rumbald or Rumoalde, son of the king of Northumberland, by a daughter of Penda king of the Mercians, was born at King's Sutton 1 Nov. 662, baptised by bishop Widerino, received into baptism by Eadwold the priest, and living only three days, was buried there by Eadwold, translated the following year by bishop Widerino to Brackley, and the third year to Buckingham, to rest ever after; where a shrine was erected for him in the church, to which great resort was made by pilgrims.[k] Leland, in noticing King's Sutton, says, "St. Rumoalde was born in this Paroch. There was a late a Chappell dedicated to him, standing about a mile from Sutton in the Medes, defaced and taken down."[l] It stood in the Chapel field, near the principal farm house in Walton grounds, and the site is still marked by traces of old foundations.

By a deed without date, William (de Bleys) bishop of Lincoln, who presided over that see from 1203 to 1206, confirmed the award of Maugere, bishop of Worcester, the arbitrator appointed by William archdeacon of Buckingham, and sir William de Kaines or Keynes,* in a controversy between them respecting the chapel of "Walton," and the tithes of the demesne of the said knight, as well of blade as of other small tithes, and other things to the said chapel belonging; whereby it was adjudged that J. chaplain of the said knight, at his presentation, and the admission of the said archdeacon and canon (or prebend) of the mother church, should hold the said chapel with all the said tithes thereto belonging, for the term of his life, rendering to the mother church of St. Peter of Sutton two besants [bisancios] or 4s. yearly, in the name of a pension; but when J. should die or change his mode of life, the chapel with all its intirety should revert to the mother church for ever, so that it might be at the will of the canon either to keep it in his own hands or to assign it to what clerk he pleased; but the canon of the prebend or he to whom he assigned the chapel, should one day in the week, excepting Sunday when there should be no service, cause divine service to be performed in the said chapel. And J. chaplain having been presented and admitted accordingly, sir William de Keynes gave the chapel with all the tithes aforesaid, to the mother church as fully as pertained to a lay gift, and by a book placed all his right in the hands of the bishop of Worcester, who, by the same book assigned the chapel to the archdeacon; after which, sir William by his charter to the mother church, ratified the above composition.[m]

By the inquisition after the death of sir George Fermor in 11 Jac. (1613), he was found to die seised (int. al.) of the great and small tithes of Walton, held of the king as of his manor of East Greenwich in free socage;[n] and they have subsequently attended the descent of the manor.

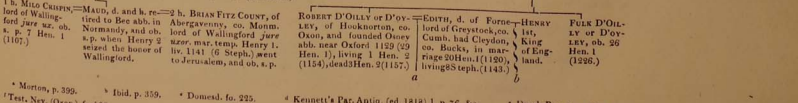
occurs in domesday as "Taneford" and "Teworde," and in later records as Fenford and Thenford. The termination is obviously the Saxon ford, and may refer to the passage over the stream which divides it from Middleton Cheney and Farthingho; but the initial syllable suggests no appropriate or satisfactory etymology. It was inclosed by act of parliament 6 Geo. 3 (1766), and contains about 950 acres, including about 350 acres of old inclosure. Samuel Amy Severne, esq. lord of the manor, has about 850 acres, inclusive of about 48 acres as lessee of Brasennose college; and the rector, in right of his church, about 60 acres. The boundaries are formed by Thorp Mandeville on the north, Marston St. Lawrence on the east, a brook which divides it from Middleton Cheney on the south and from a small part of Farthingho on the south-east, and by Middleton Cheney on the south-west and west. The soil varies in almost equal proportions from a light to a strong loam, and nearly four-fifths is in permanent pasture. Morton, in detailing "solitary instances of extreme rankness and luxuriant growth," observes, "such was that of a grain of rye accidentally dropt upon a sallow bed at Thengford, from whence there sprang an almost incredible number of stalks, viz. 248. The plant is now in the ingenious Mr. Fulk Woodhall's (Wodhull's) possession at Eydon. In Thengford field, anno 1703, amongst the pease of more ordinary size, was one whose stalk was 13 feet in length, as was found upon measuring it by the ingenious Mr. Tho. Woodhall (Wodhull). In a rick-yard there, I saw a hemp-stalk four inches about in the lower part of it."[a] All kinds of trees flourish here most luxuriantly. In the pleasure-grounds is an oak about twenty yards high, which measures 26 ft. 7 in. at the base, an elm 24 ft. 10 in., an ash 18 ft. 9 in., an arbele 19 ft. 7 in., and a Scotch fir 14 ft. 7 in. at the base.

Morton says, "I am informed that there is one of those called Tautologick Echoes at Thengford; and that it returns High Hoe, or the like dissyllable, three or four times."[b] This must refer to the echo south of the present mansion, which was not then erected, and which has produced a polysyllabic echo, rivalling the celebrated one at Oxendon, which he has so minutely described. Without attempting a philosophical solution of the phenomenon, the fact may be stated, that a person stationed about 380 feet from the north front of the house, uttering a sentence not exceeding thirteen syllables, will hear it distinctly and audibly repeated. By advancing or receding, a nearly similar effect is produced, but the resonance is strongest and most perfect at the given distance.



MANORIAL HISTORY. D'OYLEY FEE. HONOR OF WALLINGFORD. At the domesday survey Roger held of Robert de Oilgi, or D'Oyley, a hide in "Teworde." The arable land was three carucates and a half; of which, one was in demesne with two servants; and seven villeins had the remaining two and a half. There was a mill worth 30d. yearly. The whole had been rated at 10s. yearly, but was then tripled in value.[c]

William the Conqueror, in his victorious progress through the kingdom, came to Wallingford in Berkshire, which Wigod de Wallingford, the Saxon lord, promptly surrendering, the king suffered him to retain his possessions, and married his daughter and heiress Aldeth to the above Robert D'Oyley, who, on her father's death, succeeded to the honor of Wallingford. The king gave him also the two honors of Oxford, or Hook Norton, and St. Walleries; the latter of which he resigned to his sworn brother Roger de Iveri, who accompanied him in the expedition to England, and with whom he vowed to share his fortunes.[d] Robert D'Oyley had in this county moieties of Thenford, Purston, and Wicken;[e] besides twenty-eight manors in Oxfordshire, and others in Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire, Glocestershire, and Warwickshire. Leaving no male issue, he was succeeded in his barony of Hook Norton, and its members, by his brother Nigel D'Oyley, whose great grandson Henry dying s. p. it devolved on Margery, eldest sister of Henry, and wife of Henry (Newburgh) earl of Warwick;[e] but his honor of Wallingford was carried in marriage by his daughter and heiress Maud, to her successive husbands Milo Crispin and Brian Fitzcount, and on failure of issue escheated to Henry 2,[f] and was subsequently annexed to the duchy of Cornwall.

In the inquisition after the death of Edmund earl of Cornwall, in 28 Edw. 1 (1300), 2s. from Thenford and Purston is entered amongst the rents from different places belonging to the honor of Wallingford, then parcel of the earldom,[g] and now of the Duchy of Cornwall.

Langport Manor. Roger, the domesday mesne lord of Thenford, Purston, and Wicken, was not improbably Roger de Iveri, the friend and associate of D'Oyley; but, if so, he did not transmit them to his posterity. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, Robert Basset held this hide in "Thaynford" of the fee of Wallingford.[h] Under the head of the honor of Wallingford in the Testa de Nevill, which, from subsequent circumstances, may safely be referred to the reign of Richard I. it is stated, that king Henry (2), father of the king, seised the manor of "Thenford," held by Robert Basset, of that honor, by forfeiture of the sons of Robert, and afterwards gave the said manor, worth £6, and the manor of "Estun," worth £24, to

Alan Fitz Hanfray, in exchange for the manor of "Maumersche," which Hanfray Fitz Robald, father of Alan, had of the gift of king Henry.[i] In 9 Ric. (1197), Alan Fitz Roald paid 30 marks (£20) for having seisin of the land of "Teinford," of which he had been disseised by earl John,[k] lord of the honor of Wallingford. In 1 Joh. (1199), the king, by charter dated at Worcester, granted to

Andrew de Beauchamp and Eva de Grey his wife, all her right in "Thenford" and "Purston," by inheritance from Robert Basset, to hold for one fee—the same service which Robert rendered;[l] and in the following year Andrew de Beauchamp was returned to owe 50 marks (£33. 6s. 8d.) for having seisin of the land of "Teinford" and other lands of which Ralph Murdak was disseised, for his adherence to the king when earl of Moreton.[m] In the Testa de Nevill, about 27 Hen. 3 (1242), Eva de Grey, her husband being then dead, was certified to hold half a fee in "Taneford," of the honor of Wallingford;[n] and in another part of the same record, half a fee in "Tenford," of the fee of William Fitz Hamon,[o] of Wolverton. By fine in 31 Hen. 3 (1246), Beatrice Murduk, and Alice wife of Ralph Harang, released a moiety of the manor of Thenford, being their share of the inheritance of their mother Eva de Grey, to Joan wife of Ernald de Bosco, the other daughter, and Jolland de Nevill, grandson of the said Eva.[p]

In 7 Edw. 2 (1313), Margaret, widow of Ralph Cumybon, died seised of lands in Thenford held of the honor of Wallingford, and was succeeded by her son and heir John Cumybon,[q] or Honnybon, who, in 9 Edw. 2 (1315), was certified to be lord of Thenford.[r]

In the inquisition after the death of Edward late prince of Wales (and duke of Cornwall), taken in 2 Ric. 2 (1378), Hugh Dyngele and others were found to hold the moiety of a fee of him in Thenford.[s]

In 18 Hen. 6 (1440), Margaret, widow of William Dingley, acknowledged the receipt of an annuity out of the manor of Thenford from John Danvers and others, feoffees of (her former husband) Thomas Langport, or Lamport, late lord of Thenford.[t] In 22 Hen. 6 (1443, 4), Thomas Wykeham and Agnes his wife levied a fine of the manor of Thenford, in Thenford and Purston, to William Newnham and Margaret his wife;[u] and in 26 Hen. 6 (1447), another fine was levied of it by Ralph Ingoldsby.[x] By deed poll in June 26 Hen. 6 (1448), John Danvers of Banbury testified, "that, whereas Margaret Langport, widow, had enfeoffed him, jointly with others now deceased, of and in the manor of Thenford, to the uses of her will, viz. after her decease to enfeoff Margaret one of her daughters in fee; which Margaret had issue two daughters, Margaret wife of William Newnham, and Agnes widow of Thomas Wykeham; and both the testatrix and her daughter being now dead, he was willing to do whatever the court of chancery required him to do in the matter." The feoffment therefore may be presumed to have been contested by the other coheirs of Langport; but in the issue the manor was acquired either through a decree or purchase of the other shares by William Newnham, whose daughter and heiress Anne carried it in marriage to Fulk Wodhull, esq.

Fulk Wodhull, esq. usually called lord Wodhull, was the lineal heir male and representative of Walter Flandrensis, the domesday lord of PATESHULL and various other places in this county, but the head of whose barony was Odell in Bedfordshire. Nicholas Wodhull, esq. son and heir of the above Fulk, by will dated 29 Mar. 22 Hen. 8 (1531), devised Thenford to Fulk Wodhull, esq. his eldest son, by his second wife,[a] in whose descendants it continued, conformably with the annexed pedigree, down to the extinction of the male line of this ancient family in the late Michael Wodhull, esq. a gentlemen of liberal principles, great benevolence, and extensive learning. He was baptized here 18 Aug. 1740. From the tuition of the rev. Mr. Cleaver (father of the late archbishop of Dublin and the bishop of St. Asaph), at Twyford, in Buckinghamshire, he removed to Winchester school, and from thence to Brazennose college, Oxford. So early as 1760 he published an "Ode to the Muses," which was followed occasionally by other minor poems, which were collected and printed in 1772, not for sale, but presentation to his friends. Another private edition of them appeared in 1804 in a handsome 8vo. volume, embellished with a portrait of the author, and numerous vignettes. In 1782 he favoured the literary public with the earliest English translation of "The nineteen tragedies and fragments of Euripides," in 4 vols. 8vo. and which was reprinted in 3 vols. 8vo. in 1809. He was an enthusiastic attendant on book auctions, and collected a choice library. "A better informed, or more finished bibliographer existed not in France or England. Indeed, respecting the French school of editions and printers, during the xvith century, it may be doubted whether Mr. Wodhull's equal could be found. Mr. Payne thought him 'Bibliographorum longè doctissimus' in the matter of Morels and Stephens. He was," says Dr. Dibdin, "to my certain knowledge, profoundly versed in the volumes of Maittaire; and he who retaineth the information which such volumes possess, may be said to lift his head very high in the atmosphere of bibliographical erudition."[b] He married, in 1761, Catherine Milcah, daughter of the rev. John Ingram, but died without issue in 1816.

Somerton Manor, was parcel also of the honor of Wallingford, and originated probably in the carucate of land which Osbert Gifford, in 31 Hen. 3 (1246), was found by inquisition to hold in Thenford.[a] By deed s. d. sir Osbert Gifford covenanted with sir Ralph de Limesy to enfeoff him in all his lands in "Thenford and Pyrston," if he paid him 40 marks (£26. 13s. 4d.) in fifteen days of St. John Bap. 14 Edw. 1 (1286), but if he made default, then the deed which he had from Osbert releasing him from the payment of 100s. yearly for the said lands, should be void, and the said rent continue in force.[b]

William Somerton, in 9 Hen. 7 (1494), died seised of a manor in Thenford, with lands there and in Purston, held of lord Strange and Joan his wife as of the manor of Bicester, Oxfordshire (parcel of the honor of Wallingford), leaving Elizabeth, wife of William Cowley, his granddaughter and heiress, aged twenty-nine years.[c] The relationship of the heir in the inquisition was an erroneous finding, for in Oct. 23 Hen. 7 (1507), William Cowley and Elizabeth his wife, "sister and heyre" of William Somerton, deceased, conveyed to

Fulk Wodhull, esq. the reversion of the manor of Thenford, and lands there and in Purston, after the death of Agnes late wife of William Somerton, and then wife of Lewis Aprice.[d]

Maino, or Wolverton Fee.* In the time of Edward the confessor Algar had a freehold in "Taneford" valued at 40s. yearly, and continued at the same valuation in the domesday survey when it was held by Maino of the king. It consisted of a hide. The arable land was two carucates and a half; of which one was in demesne with three servants; and six villeins had the remainder. There was a mill worth 30d. yearly.[e]

Manor. Maino was the ancestor of a family which assumed the local surname of Wolverton, in Buckinghamshire, and in the hydarium of Hen. 2. Mainfelin de Wolverton, or rather Hamon Fitz Mainfelin, was certified to hold this hide in "Thaynford."[f] By fine in 16 Hen. 3 (1231), Alan Fitz Hamon, of Wolverton, conveyed to his brother William Fitz Hamon a carucate of land in Tenford in exchange for 100s. in land and rents in Wolverton.[g]

In the Testa de Neville, about 25 Hen. 3 (1240), Eva de Grey answered for half a fee in Thenford of the fees of William Fitz Hamon, of Wolverton.[h]

In 7 Edw. 2 (1313), Richard Clifford, son and heir of sir John Clifford, released to Margery de Crioll widow of sir Nicholas de Crioll, Elizabeth wife of sir John de Pabenham, and Margery daughter and heiress of Margery widow of sir Robert de Hereward, all right in lands of their inheritance in Irchester, Farndish, Willy, Puddington, Higham, Lillingston, and "Thenford," in the counties of Northampton, Bedford, Buckingham, and Oxford.[i] Margaret de Crioll, in 2 Edw. 3 (1328), granted all her lands in Thenford to John de Pabenham and Elizabeth his wife,[k] who assigned them to her son Thomas de Pabenham, against whom the following year William Perand, probably the representative of Hereward, recovered £30 damages for unjustly disseising him of fourteen messuages and certain lands in Thenford.[l] Sir Thomas de Pabenham died in 18 Edw. 3 (1344) seised (int. al.) jointly with Alice his wife, by feoffment from his mother, of the manor of Thenford, held of John de Wolverton, leaving Laurence de Pabenham his son and heir, aged eleven years,[m] who died in 22 Ric. 2 (1398), leaving John de Pabenham his son and heir, aged nine years;[n] on whose decease in his minority 8 Hen. 4 (1407), the office found that his possessions ought to descend to his half-sister Catherine, wife of sir Thomas Aylesbury,† daughter of his father's first wife Elizabeth Engayne, and his whole sister Eleanor, wife of John Tyringham.[o] Sir Thomas Aylesbury died in 6 Hen. 3 (1418), seised (int. al.) in right of Catherine his wife, of the manor of Thenford,[p] which descended to her son

Lawrence Cheyne, esq. by Sir William Cheyne her first husband.[q] In June 7 Edw. 4 (1467), Sir John Cheyne, esq. granted to William Newnham, esq. his manor of "Thenford" called "Pabenhames maner," at a reserved rent of £8 per ann. and in case of arrear, with power of entry as well into the said manor as into the said William's manor in "Thenford" called "Langportes maner."[r] This alienation was subsequently superseded, for in 4 Hen. 7 (1489), sir John died seised of this manor.[s] His son, sir Thomas Cheyne, left an only daughter and heiress, Elizabeth, wife of Thomas 2nd lord Vaux, of HARROWDEN, whose son William 3rd lord Vaux, by the description of "William Vaux lord Harrowden," sold his manor of Thenford in Aug. 7 Eliz. (1565), to Fulk Wodhull, gent.[t] lord of the Langport and Somerton manors.

THE OLD MANOR HOUSE stood near the church, and 'was a seat of great antiquity. Part of it was built in the reign of queen Elizabeth.'[u] The present handsome mansion, situated east of the village, surrounded by thriving plantations, was erected by the late Mr. Wodhull about 1765, and presents—as will be seen by the accompanying view, for which I am indebted to the kind liberality of Mr. Severne—an extended front consisting of a centre and two detached wings for offices. The north and south libraries are "rich in ancient lore," collected during a long life devoted with zeal and discrimination to bibliomaniacal pursuits. In every volume is the autograph of the collector, with the price, the date when, and the person of whom purchased. In the hall is an interesting picture of Charles 1st dictating to sir Edward Walker on the drum head, from Vandyck. Dining-room; landscape, Zucharelli. South library; whole length of the late Mrs. Wodhull, Zoffani. In other parts of the house; Charles 1st, Vandyck. Queen Henrietta Maria, Vandyck. A Venetian nobleman, Titian. Sir Charles Wandesford, master of the rolls in Ireland, 1639, in his robes. Venus, from Titian. Rubens' wife in chapeau de paile, from Rubens. Vandyck's wives, as the three graces, Vandyck.

The Village is four miles east of Banbury, and about six miles west of Brackley. In the time of Bridges there were 'about twenty families.'[t] By the census of 1801 it contained 35 houses, and 155 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 43 houses and 188 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 43 houses and 234 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £62. 5s. 4d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £1506. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised . . . . . at . . . . in the £. The wake is kept on the Sunday after the assumption of the blessed Virgin.

The Advowson was given at an early period to Bradwell priory, Buckinghamshire, but the donor is unknown. In Aug. 43 Hen. 3 (1259), Bartholomew prior of Bradwell, with the consent of the convent, granted the advowsons of Chalfont St. Giles and Stoke Hammond, Buckinghamshire, and Thenford, Northamptonshire, to Richard (Gravesend) bishop of Lincoln, and his successors for ever;[u] but the patronage of this rectory is now vested in the crown.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Brackley. It is omitted in the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3), and in the printed copy of the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1), but in the copy of the latter in the British Museum it is rated at 5 marks (£3. 6s. 8d.) per ann.[x] In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), it is valued at £10. 10s. 7d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton.[y] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655, certified it to be a parsonage presentative divided; one moiety appertaining to Mr. William Osborn, the incumbent, worth £33 yearly, which he received for the cure;[z] the other moiety will be noticed under Cold Norton portion. It is a discharged living, returned under the act 5 Anne (1707), to be of the clear yearly value of £41. 10s. 1½d. The rectory now consists of 61 a. 1 r. 16 p. allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of glebe and tithes. In the return of livings under[a] £150 per ann. in 1809, the bishop of Peterborough certified it to be of the clear yearly value of £100. The rectory house is in the village.

Oseney Priory Portion. Robert D'Oyley, nephew and heir male of Robert the domesday lord, in his foundation charter of Oseney priory near Oxford, granted two parts of the tithes of all things titheable in the demesnes of both his baronies, specifically naming the places, and including "Tynfordia" or Thenford.[a] In the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1), the priory is certified to have a yearly portion of £1 in the church of Thenford,[b] and in the same record, Cold Norton Priory, in the same county, had also a yearly portion there, valued at 5 marks (£3. 6s. 8d.)[b] which I suspect was in fact the Oseney portion, and that the £1 yearly received by that priory was the fee farm rent reserved on the demise. As the lands of the Wolverton and D'Oyley fees were nearly equal in domesday, so in this ecclesiastical valuation the rector's portion or Wolverton fee, corresponds with the Cold Norton or D'Oyley fee, both being rated at 5 marks yearly; and in further corroboration it may be added, that no donation in Thenford can be traced in the grants to Cold Norton.[c] This priory, being destitute of canons, escheated to the crown in 22 Hen. 7. and was given by the king the following year to the dean and chapter of Westminster, of whom it was shortly after purchased by William Smith, bishop of Lincoln, who gave it to Brazennose college, in Oxford.[d] The parliamentary commissioners, in 1655, certified one moiety of the parsonage of Thenford to be impropriate to Brazennose college, and that there was no chapel of ease nor donation, with cure or without, belonging to it.[e] The commissioners of inclosure allotted 47 a. 3 r. 28 p. to the lessee of the college in lieu of these impropriate tithes.

Bradwell Abbey, at the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1), had a yearly pension of 13s. 4d. out of the church of Thenford.[f]

Laurence Boole, or Bowle, was instituted 10 Apr. 1567, on the presentation of the queen, and the patronage has been vested in the crown ever since. "Laurence Bowle, formerly rector," was buried here 1 Sept. 1607.[h]

William Osborne was inst. 12 July 1606, on the resignation of the last incumbent. He was also rector of Kelmarsh and Maidwell. He was buried here 2 Aug. 1659,[h] and

Richard Ells occurs the 22d of the same month.[h]

Thomas Blencowe was inst. 27 Feb. 1677-8, and was buried here 30 Dec. 1697.[h] His successor

Maximilian Bush, of Magd. coll. Oxf. A.M. was inst. 5 June 1699. On his decease

Thomas Bly, of Pemb. coll. Oxf. A.M. was inst. 15 July 1730. His resignation introduced Arthur Lewis, of Jesus coll. Oxf. A.M. who was inst. 16 Mar. 1774. He died 12 Sept. 1786,[i] and Egerton Stafford, of Ch. ch. coll. Oxf. A.M. already noticed under Chacomb, was inst. 11 Dec. 1787.

The Registers commence in 1562.

The Church, dedicated to the blessed Virgin, consists of a tower containing five bells, nave, north and south aisles, north porch, and chancel. The interior is partly pewed, and has a west gallery. The tower is 12 ft. 3 in. long by 9 ft. 3 in. wide; the nave and aisles 35 ft. 3 in., the north aisle 13 ft. 6 in., the nave 14 ft. 7 in., and the south aisle 10 ft. 3 in. wide; and the chancel 28 ft. 9 in. by 10 ft. The font, which is a plain circle on a square base, is attached to a pillar in the south aisle. The nave is divided from the north aisle by two large arches and a smaller western arch, on octangular pillars, with capitals of plain mouldings; and from the south aisle by two large arches, on low octangular pillars, with shallow ornamental capitals of an early character. The chancel is entered under a wooden screen. In the south wall is a piscina, and in the north one a locker.

AGED 38 YEARS.

MARY INGRAM YOUNGEST DAUGHTER OF THE REVd. JOHN INGRAM (OF WOLFORD IN THE COUNTY OF OF WARWICK)
DIED DECEMBER 14th 1824
IN HER 77th YEAR.

On the south side:

BARBARA JOHNSON, ONLY SISTER OF
GEORGE WILLIAM JOHNSON ESQr.
IN THE COUNTY OF LINCOLN)
DIED JANUARY 14th 1825
IN HER 87 YEAR.

On the north side of the churchyard is a remarkably thick coffin-shaped stone, with a rude mutilated figure of an ecclesiastic. And on the south side opposite the chancel is another similar shaped stone, with a curious ornamental cross. We removed the stone, presuming it to be the lid of a coffin, but found the body had been deposited in the common soil.

BENEFACTIONS. (P. 541.) JOHN TOOLEY's charity is a rent charge of £4 per ann. out of land in Thenford belonging to S. A. Severne, esq. The sum of 28s. is distributed yearly among the aged and necessitous poor, and the residue, 12s. is retained as a fund for apprenticing poor children, when sufficient for the purpose.

WILLIAM TOOLEY, by will in Aug. 1704, bequeathed 20s. yearly out of his estate at Daventry to the poor of Thenford, with the reversion of the estate on failure of his heirs male, which happened in 1761. It now consists of 10 a. of land allotted by the commissioners for enclosing Daventry, and is let for £15 per ann. which is distributed amongst the poor of Thenford in sums varying from 2s. 6d. to 10s. according to their necessities.

ROMAN ANTIQUITIES. Morton suggests that "the church at Thengford perhaps was built upon a burial-place of the Romans; for in digging a grave in the church-yard was found an urn with ashes in it. Such squares as the Romans made their chequered pavements of, have been found in the field; and also a medal of the emperor Constans, as the worshipful J. Wodhull, of Thengford, esq. has informed me."[k] Thenford is evidently on the line of road from Brinavis (Chipping Wardon) to Ælia Castra (Alcester near Bicester), and is not improbably the site of an intermediate post between the two stations; for dispersed fragments of Roman materials may be traced in the village causeway; and the two fields called Stone Green and Flaxlands, about half a mile east of the village, abound in vestigia of Roman occupation, over a space of ground much too extended for a mere villa. Foundations of buildings, tesseræ, and coins have been frequently turned up by the plough. Most of the coins are now lost, but some small brass of Tetricus, Constantine junior, and Constans are in the possession of Mr. Severne, by whose obliging permission the spot was recently investigated, when we found numerous fragments of Roman pottery, tiles, and tesseræ, with foundations of walls and portions of hypocausts, but which had been so disturbed as to render it impossible to trace the plan of any of the rooms or buildings.

At the upper end of the stone pit in Seabridge close, near the water mill now disused, between the village and Middleton Cheney, some labourers, a few years ago, discovered two skeletons lying from east to west, and a small drinking cup near them, which is preserved by Mr. Severne; and on recently exploring the adjacent ground very carefully, we found, in a southerly direction, the remains of five skeletons disposed in three distinct tiers; one in each of the two first, and three about a yard distant from each other in the lower tier.

ARBURY OR ARBERRY HILL. "About a mile and a half to the northward of Thengford, and about a mile to the South from Danesmore," says Morton, "is a high Hill commanding the Countrey, now called Arbury, which seems to have been fortified with a Circumvallation: tho' the Bank is now only visible upon the South side. Perhaps it was cast up by the Danes some Time before the Fight at Danesmore."[l] The editor of Bridges, after referring to Morton's account of Roman antiquities here, adds, 'From these remains of Roman antiquity, it is probable that Arbury-hill was originally the work of that people, though it might have been afterwards used as an encampment by the Danes, in their incursions into these parts.'[m] The hill is oblong, stretching from east to west, and is rounded at the angles. It is not encompassed by a foss; but at the west end is a steep declivity of two or three yards to a ledge or linchet, and from thence a second declivity to the base. Without presuming to give a decided opinion, I am inclined to think it is of British origin, and primarily bore a relation, though the connection is now untraceable, to the two hills of the same name at Badby* and Chipping Wardon.†

in domesday simply "Torp," the Saxon generic name for a village. In the cartulary of Daventry priory it is called "Suthorp" or South Thorp, to distinguish it from Thorp near Daventry, where, as well as here, that religious house had possessions; and in the thirteenth century it acquired the adjunct of Mundeville, or Amundeville, now corrupted into Mandeville, from a family who were then its lords. It contains about 1010 acres; of which about 545 acres belong to William Peareth, esq. of Usworth House, Durham; about 180 acres to the rector, in right of his church; about 130 acres to Robert Pargiter Humfrey, gent.; and nearly 100 acres to George Rush, esq. of Farthingho. It is bounded on the north by Culworth; east by Sulgrave in Wardon hundred; south by Marston St. Lawrence and Thenford; south west by Chacomb; west by Wardington in Oxfordshire; and north west by Edgcote in Wardon hundred. The soil is principally a light loam, and is mostly in pasture. There is some rich grazing land adjoining Culworth.

MANORIAL HISTORY. PINKENEY FEE.* Thorp was the freehold of Osmund the Dane before the conquest, and valued at 40s. yearly, but was raised to 50s. yearly at the domesday survey, when it was held by Ingelram under Ghilo brother of Ansculf, ancestor of the Pinkeneys. It contained two hides. The arable land was five carucates; of which one was in demesne; and six villeins and three bordars had two carucates; leaving two waste or unaccounted for.[a]

MANOR. The early descent of this manor can only be inferred from the advowson, which was given to Hugh de Leycestre† by Simon St. Liz, earl of Huntingdon and Northampton,[b] who probably purchased this lordship at the same time with Stotesbury, which it has been shewn was originally a member of this parish.‡ The mesne lord is not recorded in the Hydarium of Hen. 2. though it certified to contain two hides,[c] as in domesday. How long it continued in Hugh's representatives, or when it reverted to the paramount lord, cannot now be ascertained; but in 27 Hen. 3. (1243) a writ was issued to enquire whether Robert de Pinkeney * father of Henry died seised of Thorp, whether Henry was his next heir, and wherefore Richard de Amundeville claimed it;[d] and the same year Henry de Pinkeney levied a fine to

Richard de Amundeville of one moiety of this manor, and of another moiety which he had previously acquired from Robert de Pinkeney, his father.[e] Richard de Amundeville in 37 Hen. 3. (1253) had a grant of free warren here, and in Berkeswell and Lighthorne, Warwickshire;[f] and dying without issue§ his estate passed to Robert Amundeville his brother, and from him to Richard Amundeville his son, who in the eighteenth year of Edward I. sold it to Richard de Whitacre; having previously purchased from Thomas de Capes§ the lands in "Thorp Mundeville," which he inherited from Hugh Russell.[h] Richard de Whitacre appears to have demised this manor to

Walter de Langton, bishop of Coventry and Lichfield,‖ for life, who in 35 Edw. 1. (1306-7) obtained a grant of free warren in "Thorp Mundeville," and his other estates in this county.[i] During a temporary confiscation of his possessions in 5 Edw. 2. (1311), the king committed the manor of Thorp Mundeville to John de Ferrars during pleasure, at an annual rent of £20. 16*s.* 7¾*d.*;[k] but the bishop was speedily restored to favour, and in 9 Edw. 2. (1315) was certified by the name of bishop of Chester—a designation synonymous at that period with Coventry and Lichfield—to be lord of this manor.[l] On his decease it returned again to the Whitacres,

And in 3 Edw. 3. (1329) Richard, son of Jordan de Whitacre, established his right to this manor against Richard, son of Richard de Amundeville.[m] He was summoned by writ of quo warranto the same year to shew by what right he claimed view of frank pledge, with correction of assize of bread and beer, wayfs, free warren in his demesne lands, and correction of weights and measures in Thorp Mundeville; when he withdrew his claim as to the weights and measures, and as to the other privileges pleaded that he was grandson and heir of Richard de Whitacre to whom Richard de Mundeville gave this manor, and who, and his predecessors, had immemorially enjoyed them. The jury presented that the claimant was entitled to, and had duly exercised these privileges, except in amercing offenders against the assize of bread and beer in the sum of 2*s.* instead of punishing them by pillory and tumbril. The view was accordingly taken into the king's hands, but restored again on petition, for a fine of 10*s.*[n] By the inquisition on his death in 8 Edw. 3 (1334), it was found that the manor of Thorp Mundeville, with two views of frank pledge yearly, was held of the king of the fee of Pinkeney by service of one fee, and 20*s.* yearly to the castle ward of Windsor. His son, William de Whitacre, then a minor nine years old,[o] made a settlement of this manor in 19 Edw. 3 (1345), on himself and Catherine his wife;[p] and on levying the aid for knighting the king's eldest son in the following year, he, jointly with Benedicta de Morcote (probably his father's widow), accounted for one fee in Thorp Mundeville.[q]

In 2 Hen. 6. (1423) Elizabeth, successively the wife of William Frebody and Gerard Waldeyene, died seised of the manor of Thorp Mundeville, of which she had been jointly enfeoffed with her first husband, leaving William,

THE MANOR HOUSE was garrisoned by Oliver Cromwell, who was first cousin to Mrs. Kirton. Bridges says, 'the mounds which were thrown up on this occasion are still visible behind the Manor-house.'[a] The mounds continue traceable, but the house here alluded to, which stood west of the church, has been since taken down, and the present one is situated east of the church.

THE VILLAGE is about six miles from Brackley. In the time of Bridges, there were 'about twenty families.'[b] By the census of 1801, it contained 34 houses and 137 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 32 houses and 158 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 35 houses and 187 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £105. 11s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £1,695. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £330. 19s. 6d. at 4s. 6d. in the £. The wake follows the feast of St. John the Baptist.

MARKET AND FAIR. In 10 Edw. 1. (1282) Richard de Mandevill and Matilda his wife had a grant for life of a weekly market and annual fair at their manor of Thorp;[c] but these privileges were not renewed to the succeeding lords.

ADVOWSON. Hugh de Leycestre gave the church of "Throp," with all its appendages, as freely as he had received it from earl Simon, to the priory which he founded at Daventry.[d] His heir, Hugh de Poher, renewed and recorded the grant of this and other churches in the presence of Roger bishop of Worcester, and Adam abbot of Evesham,[d] which fixes the date between 1163 and 1179; and John de Poher, son of Hugh, having inspected the charters of his father, and his great-grandfather Hugh de Leycestre, ratified their donations, including this church, which the monks had given to Master Stephen de Manecestre, and which Peter de Wirecestre then held by their presentation.[e] In this and the preceding charter it is called "Suthorp," or South Thorp, to distinguish it from the hamlet of Thorp near Daventry, where the monks also had possessions. If, however, any doubts were raised of its identity, they would be removed by the charter of Richard de Amundeville, lord of Throp, who in 43 Hen. 3. (1259) released to the priory all right in the advowson of this church, and of Stoteysbury, formerly belonging to it, and granted to the future rectors of this church, or whosoever should hold it, whether collegiate or secular parson, or vicar, pasture for seven beasts in his pastures of Thorp, as well several as common, besides the common of pasture to which the rector, incumbent, or vicar was previously entitled.[f]

This advowson, as parcel of the suppressed priory of Daventry, was consigned in 17 Hen. 8. (1525-6) to cardinal Wolsey, towards the endowment of his college at Oxford;[g] and in 24 Hen. 8. (1532), after the attainder of the cardinal, was transferred to the foundation of King Henry the eighth's college there;[h] but on its dissolution in May 1545 was resumed by the crown; and in 6 Edw. 6. (1552) the advowson of the rectory of "Thorp Moundefield" was included in an extensive grant to Edward lord Clinton and Saye, and Henry Hodson, in exchange for other lands and advowsons.[i]

Richard Gardiner, gent. presented to the rectory in 1558, and the patronage continued in the family till 1668, when Richard Gardiner, gent. sold the advowson of "Thrupp Mandeville" for £400 to the rev. Robert Wainewright, the rector, who devised it by will in 1711 to Catherine his wife, and she, by will in 1711-2, to the rev. Robert Pargiter, the rector. He, by his will in 1717, devised it to his brother-in-law, Nathaniel Humfrey, esq.[k] who afterwards took holy orders, and held the rectory, and from whom it has descended to his grandson, Robert Pargiter Humfrey, esq. the present patron.

The Rectory is in the deanery of Brackley. In the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3.) it was rated at 7 marks (£4. 13s. 4d.) per ann.[l] and in that of 1291 (20 Edw. 1.) at 7½ marks (£5) per ann.[m]

Vicarage. Bridges states, that this church was 'appropriated to the convent, and the vicarage ordained, in the time of Richard Gravesend, bishop of Lincoln,' between 1258 and 1279. The ordination is in the Daventry cartulary, but without any clue to the date: the bishop directs the archdeacon of Northampton to admit John de Daventry, chaplain, to the vicarage of Thorp, newly endowed with all the obventions and altarage, two virgates of land with two acres to the said lands belonging, pasture for seven beasts with the beasts of the lord of the vill in his several pasture, besides common of pasture, two parts of the tithe of hay of the demesne land, and of the manse of the church on the west; the third part towards the east, together with the tithe of garbs of the whole parish, remaining to the prior and convent, who shall bear all ordinary and extraordinary charges, except the third part of extraordinaries, to be borne by the vicar.[n] According to Bridges, this vicarage was valued at 40s. yearly in the taxation of 1291,[o] but it does not occur in the printed copy; nor is it mentioned in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8.) when

The Rectory was valued at £11 per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton, and a pension of 6s. 8d. to the master and fellows of St. Frideswide, or king Henry the eighth's college at Oxford.[p] The parliamentary commissioners in 1653 certified "Thorp Mandeville" to be a parsonage presentative "time out of mind" worth £120 yearly. The last incumbent was presented both as "parson and vicar," and enjoyed the profits till the late war, at the close of which, the incumbent having two livings, and not being resident at Thorp, Mr. Samuel Graunt, then or late of London, entered upon the same as impropriator, and received and enjoyed the profits thereof: since which time neither parson nor vicar had been presented, though the former incumbent had been dead some years, but the said impropriator allowed Mr. Durant £30 yearly to officiate.[q] The rectory now consists of 178 a. 1 r. 34 p. of land, allotted by the commissioners under an act of parliament 13 Geo. 3 (1773) for the exchange of glebe lands belonging to the rectory, and for exonerating from tithes all the inclosed lands in the parish. The parsonage-house is a short distance from the church.

Nathaniel Humfrey was inst. on the 13th of the same month, on the presentation of William Holbech, esq. He was educated for the bar, but afterwards took holy orders, and was created LL. D. at Cambridge in 1728. He was buried here 12 Mar. 1744-5,[1] and his second son

Ptolomy Humfrey, of Merton coll. Oxf. A. M. was presented by Abigail Humfrey widow, and inst. 11 June following. He was buried here 20 Aug. 1787,[1] and

William Deucle, of Magd. coll. Oxf. D. D. was inst. 12 Sept. following, on the presentation of Robert Pargiter Humfrey, esq. He resigned for the rectory of Stanway in Essex, when

James Williamson, of Queen's coll. Oxf. B. D. rector of Winwick, was presented by Robert Humfrey, esq. and inst. 3 Feb. 1792, on whose resignation

Allan Bracken, of Queen's coll. Oxf. D. D. was inst. 2 Mar. 1797, on the presentation of Robert Pargiter Humfrey, esq. He was also rector of Blechingdon in Oxfordshire, where he died 3 Feb. 1803, and the same patron presented

Isaac Robinson, who was inst. 7 May following. On his cession the same patron presented his brother

Nathaniel Humfrey, of Linc. coll. Oxf. A. M. who was inst. 18 Apr. 1806. In 1802 he published "A poetical Sketch, with other Poems," 8vo. which reached a second edition in the following year.

The Registers do not commence till 1720, but at the beginning are some extracts from the old ones.

The Church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, stands on elevated ground near the centre of the village, and consists of a low tower containing three bells, nave, north aisle, south porch, and chancel. The tower terminates with a roof, and is locally termed a pack saddle steeple. The south door has a crocketted ogee dripstone, springing rom corbel crowned heads. The interior is paved and partly pewed. The tower is 12 ft. 9 in. long by 8 ft. 6 in. wide; the nave and aisle 43 ft. 3 in. long, the aisle 15 ft. 1 in. and the nave 11 ft. 4 in. wide; and the chancel 26 ft. 5 in. long by 16 ft. 7 in. wide. The nave is divided from the aisle by three pointed arches on octangular pillars with capitals of plain mouldings, and from the chancel by an open arch. The chancel is wainscotted.

Bridges gives the following inscription:

WIFE OF THOMAS GOSTELOW GENT.
WHO DIED OCT THE 1st. ANNO DO-
-MINI 1707. ÆTATIS SUÆ 35.

In the church yard is a remarkably fine old yew tree, which almost rivals the one noticed under Marston St. Lawrence.

WAPPENHAM,

is written "Wapeha'" in domesday, and "Wappenham" in the hydarium of Hen. 2. in both of which it is entered under the hundred of Towcester, but in the book of knights' fees, 24 Edw. 1 (1296), and in all subsequent records, it is found under the hundred of Sutton, in which it is now situated. The period when, and the reason why, it was thus transferred, are alike inexplicable. The hamlets of Astwell and Falcote, or Faucote, form the south-west portion of the parish, and support their own poor, but contribute one-third to the church rate.

Wappenham contains about 2,055 acres, of which about 1,575 acres were inclosed by act of parliament 1 Geo. 3 (1761). The principal proprietors are, Samuel Amy Severne, of Thenford, esq. lord of the manor, who has about 330 acres; the rector, in right of his church, about 300 acres; Mr. Thomas Sheppard about 170 acres; the warden and fellows of All Souls college, Oxford, about 160 acres; Samuel Dendy, of London, esq. Priesthay wood, about 160 acres; Mr. John Spiers Cockerill about 160 acres; Mrs. Woodman, of London, about 140 acres; and Mr. Charles Fairbrother nearly 100 acres. It is bounded on the north by Woodend, a part of Blakesley, in Norton hundred; east by Slapton in Norton hundred, and Abthorp in Towcester hundred; south-east by Monkswood in Silverston in Norton hundred; south by Whittlebury forest and Siresham; south-west by Helmdon; and west by Wedon in Norton hundred. The soil is principally a strong loam. There was formerly a considerable tract of woodland; and common, called Wappenham Wild, which is now nearly all converted to agricultural purposes. In 20 Edw. 1 (1292) it was found by inquisition before John de Tingwicke, chief forester of Whittlebury, Walter de Tyngwike and two other horse foresters, Walter de Withihegge and eight other foot foresters, John de Marsh and four other verderers of the forest, William Water and four other regarders of the forest, and William Clerk, of Syresham, and twelve free and legal men of the county, that it would not be to the damage of the king if he granted licence to Robert de Pinkeney to fell oaks and other trees to the value of £40 in his wood of Wappenham, which was within the bounds of the said forest; that the wood was four miles (leucæ) in circuit, well covered with underwood, and that in the trenches and outskirts he might fell timber to the above amount, without detriment to the king's beasts of chace in the forest.[a]

Morton mentions "the Grey or Ash-coloured Loon of Dr. Brown,"—the great crested Grebe, Colymbus cristatris (Lin.) as having been shot at Wappenham by one of archdeacon Hutton's servants.[c] The woodcock, Scolopax Rusticula (Lin.) is seldom known to breed in this country, and it is therefore deserving perhaps of notice, that on the 19th of last March (1830) the woodward of Bucknell wood, shooting at a hawk which had settled on a tree, flushed a woodcock near him, and on examining the spot found the woodcock's nest with four eggs.

MANORIAL HISTORY. PINKENEY FEE.* "Wapeha'," or Wappenham, was the Saxon freehold of Leuric, and Siward, and rated at 100s. yearly; but at the domesday survey was reduced to £4 yearly, and was then one of the manors retained in demesne by Ghilo, brother of Ansculf, ancestor of the Pinkeneys. It contained two hides, of which two virgates were in demesne. The arable land was five carucates; two in demesne, with nine servants and three maidens; and the remaining three in the hands of seventeen villeins, eight bordars, and a priest. There was a mill worth 4s. yearly, five acres of meadow, and a wood eleven furlongs long and six wide.[c]

MANOR. In the hydarium of Hen. 2. Henry de Pinkeney was certified to hold two hides in Wappenham:[d] and in the return of the barony of his grandson, Henry de Pinkeney, in the Testa de Nevill, about 25 Hen. 3 (1240), he accounted for half a fee in Wappenham of his demesne;[e] which was then in lease to Henry de Pateshull for ten years.[f] Sir Henry de Pinkeney, son of the last-named, in 48 Hen. 3 (1263) obtained a grant of free warren in Wedon and Wappenham.[g]

By a deed without date, but which, from the witnesses, may be safely referred to the commencement of the reign of Edward I. William de Bradden, in consideration of 100 marks (£66. 13s. 4d.) conveyed to

Sir Thomas Arden, of Hanwell,† (co. Oxon) and Rose his wife, in fee tail, his chief court, or mansion, with garden and lands, in "Wappenham," which sir Henry de Pinkeney gave to sir John Wahull (or Wodhull)‡ in free marriage with Agnes his daughter.[h] About the same period, Robert de Arden,† brother, I presume, of Thomas, granted to John, son of sir Baldwin de Drayton,§ in free marriage with Philippa his daughter, all his land in Wappenham which had descended to him from Alice his mother, to hold by the service of the third part of a fee.[i] An inadvertent error respecting these two brothers, copied from Dugdale,[k] in the pedigree of this branch of the Arden family under SPRATTON,‖ calls for correction. It is obvious that this sir Thomas Arden, who was living 16 Edw. 1 (1287), and Robert Arden, who occurs in 15 Edw. 2 (1321), and survived till 5 Edw. 3 (1331), could not have been sons of Thomas Arden who occurs in 6 Joh. (1204), and the line over them should consequently have been dotted to denote simply that they were descended from him. Both the Arden estates here eventually centered, either by purchase or family agreement, in sir Robert Arden, who, in 1 Edw. 3 (1327), had a grant of free warren in Wappenham, and Sudborough, and various places in Oxfordshire and Sussex,[l] confirmed by a second grant the year following,[m] and in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) a grant of view of frank pledge, infangtheof, outfangtheof, and wayf in Wappenham;[n]

to all which privileges in his manors of Wappenham and Sudborough he substantiated his claim, in plea to a writ of quo warranto, the same year; as also to similar privileges with the addition of free warren in Cottesbrook, for the life of Nicola his wife, remainder to William de Boutvelein her son by her first husband.[o] From him, this manor passed as exhibited in the pedigree already referred to, till it became vested in Robert Arden, esq. afterwards knighted, who in 18 Hen. 6 (1439) levied a fine of Netherbury manor in Sulgrave to Robert Danvers, esq.[p] and of Wappenham manor to

Sir Walter Lucy,[q] and in 20 Hen. 6 (1441), had a pardon granted for alienating this manor, which was held in capite, without the royal license.[r] The descent of the Lucy property through coheirs and representatives has been already detailed under DALLINGTON,* down to the reign of Charles I. when Robert Wallop, esq. sold all his Northamptonshire estates. According to Bridges, "in his declining fortune he entrusted his chaplain Theophilus Hart, who, by his assistance, had intruded into this living upon the ejectment of Mr. Williamson in 1642, and one Mr. Reeve, his steward, to sell this manor. And the chaplain is said to have outwitted both the steward and his patron; to have bought the manor a very good pennyworth, and parcelled out part of it to others. This wicked man continued in possession both of the manor and the rectory, having conformed according to act of parliament, till the twenty-third of January 1685, at which time he had his brains beat out by a butcher of Wapenham, who caught him in bed with his wife."[s] Robert Wallop, esq. sold the capital messuage or manor house and certain lands in Wappenham in lease to John Brograve, esq. to Philip Holman, esq. of WARKWORTH, for £1,700 in July 1650;[t] and in the following month conveyed the manor and other lands for £1,337. 10s. to the Rev. Theophilus Hart, who in Oct. 1678 vested the manor of Little Creaton, the manor of Latchbrooke in Oxfordshire, and the manor and royalty of Wappenham, and the rectory or parsonage impropriate of Wappenham, except the next presentation to the church, in trustees in trust to sell the same on his decease, and after payment of his debts to divide the surplus equally between his three daughters Rachel, Anne, and Martha Hart, but if Anne married Aaron Wood, then between his two other daughters.[t] In March 1689-90 the trustees, reciting the last indenture, and that several suits had arisen thereon since the death of the devisor in pursuance of a decree in chancery, conveyed the said manors and rectory to new trustees, in trust to sell as the rev. Timothy Hart of Blakesley, and Rachel his wife, one of the daughters and coheiresses, and Martha Hart, spinster, another of the daughters and coheiresses, should direct, and after payment of the debts of the devisor to divide the surplus between them.[t]

In April 1691 Horatio Moor of Plumpton, esq. and Anne his wife, vested the manors of Plumpton and Wappenham and advowson of Plumpton in trustees, in trust after their decease, by lease mortgage or sale, to pay the debts of the said Horatio, and the surplus to the assigns of the said Anne, and to convey the said estates, or such parts as should remain unsold, to the use of Horatio and Anne in tail male, remainder to Anne in fee.

The rev. Robert Wainewright, "the unworthy rector of Thorp Mandeville," by a codicil to his will, 4 June 1711, devised the manor or lordship of Wappenham to his wife Katherine Wainewright, who, by her will in Feb. 1711-12, directed it to be sold for the payment of her debts, and the surplus, if any, to be equally divided between her brother Thomas Kirton, her sister Elizabeth Palmer, and her niece Jemimah Kirton. In Dec. 1715 Thomas Kirton of Thorp Mandeville, gent. reciting Mrs. Wainewright's will, and that her real and personal estate were insufficient for the discharge of her debts and legacies, but that the rev. Robert Pargiter (to whom she had devised the advowson of Thorp Mandeville) was willing to pay the same out of his own estate, provided he would release his trust and interest in the manor of Wappenham, for a nominal consideration conveyed the said manor to the said

Rev. Robert Pargiter, who by his will in June 1717 devised it to his mother for life, and after her decease to be annexed to the farm in Wappenham which his father purchased of William Holman, esq. and to descend under the same limitations. His brother and heir, Dering Pargiter, of St. Margaret's, Westminster, gent. with consent of the parties interested in his father's will, sold his manor and estate of Wappenham in Jan. 1728-9 to the trustees under the will of the late Lucy Knightley, esq. of FAWSLEY.[t]

In 15 Geo. 2. (1741-2) Valentine Knightley, esq. of Fawsley, obtained an act of parliament for the sale (int. al.) of the manor of Wappenham, and for settling other estates to the same uses, and in Nov. 1742 the trustees under the act sold it to John Wodhull, esq.[t] from whom it has passed by the same title with THENFORD to Samuel Amy Severne, esq. the present proprietor.

TINGEWICK MANOR. The grant which laid the foundation of the last manor did not include the whole of the lordship; for in 32 Edw. 1 (1304) an inquisition which had been taken before the escheator to ascertain whether the manor of Wappenham, of which John de Tingewicke, Roesia his wife, and John his (youngest) son, were enfeoffed by Henry Pinkeney, was held of the king in capite, whereby the jury found that the said manor, together with the advowson of the church, was held of the heir of Geoffrey de Lucy, by the service of half a fee, and which inquisition was secretly promoted at the instance of the said John, was annulled; and on searching the chancery roll it was found by the office taken after the death of Henry Pinkeney, father of Robert Pinkeney, to be held of the king in capite, and judgment was given accordingly.[x] John de Tingewicke was chief forester of Whittlebury forest. On his decease in 32 Edw. 1 (1304) his lands here were not designated a manor, and no mention was made of the advowson.[y] His son William de Tingewicke died in 10 Edw. 2 (1316), and was succeeded in the manor of Evenley and other possessions by his brother and heir John de Tingewicke,[z] who, in 16 Edw. 2 (1322-3), sold his estate at Wappenham, including Presthay wood, valued at 6 marks (£4) yearly, and the advowson of the church at 24 marks (£16 yearly), held of the king in capite by half a fee of the fee of Pinkeney, to

Mast. Gilbert de Middleton, archdeacon of Northampton,[a] by whom twenty acres of wood, eighteen acres of meadow, fourteen acres of pasture, and the advowson, were assigned to the foundation of a Chantry, or house of secular chaplains, in honor of the ever blessed Trinity, the Virgin Mary, and All Saints, for divine service daily for his soul.[b] The chantry was ordained in 1 Edw. 3 (1327) by the bishop of Lincoln, for six priests, one of whom to preside over the rest by the name of warden, and all of whom were to receive episcopal institution, but to be nominated by the founder during his life, and the subsequent presentations to be vested in the bishops of Lincoln. Besides the original grant, the rectory was appropriated to their use, reserving a yearly pension of 12d. each to the bishop of Lincoln and the archdeacon of Northampton, in recompence of any loss they might sustain from the appropriation.[c] In 27 Edw. 3 (1353) Morgan de Dunston, and his tenant William de Kelmarsh, had licence to enfeoff the warden and chaplains of this chantry in three messuages, a mill, seventy-two acres of land, and 36s. yearly rent in Wappenham,[d] which Morgan had purchased in 5 Edw. 3 (1331) from John Dekon de Boudon,[e] sometimes called John de Boudon, brother and heir of Richard de Boudon,[f] and who, in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) was summoned by quo warranto to shew his right to view of frank pledge, but not appearing, his claim was disallowed.[g] The chantry is not noticed in the surveys of Henry VIII. and Edward VI. but in 20 Eliz. (1578), Robert Newdigate and . . . Founteyne had a grant (int. al.) of the possessions of the late chantry at Wappenham;[h] and I apprehend the impropriate rectory conveyed by Hart, could only have reference to the chantry tithes, as the benefice then was, and still is, a rectory.

Bittlesden Abbey, in Buckinghamshire, had the meadow in Wappenham called "Smethemede," with licence to inclose it as long and as wide as it was in the time of King Henry (II.), of the gift of Henry de Pinkeney;[i] and in 16 Edw. 1 (1278) sir Robert de Pinkeney, son and heir of Henry, son of Henry de Pinkeney, having inspected the charters of sir Henry de Pinkeney, his great great grandfather (attavi mei), sir Robert, son of Henry de Pinkeney, his great grandfather (proavi mei), and sir Henry, son of said Robert de Pinkeney, his grandfather (avi mei), ratified and confirmed this meadow to the monastery.[j] In 32 Hen. 8 (1540), "Smethemede" meadow, in Wappenham, was included in a reversionary grant of the principal possessions of the late abbey of Bittlesden to Sir Thomas Wriothesley, subject to certain leases.[k]

Canons Ashby Priory. Henry de Pinkeney, for the soul of Lettice his wife, granted to the canons of Ashby two virgates of land in Wappeha', except a messuage, (in exchange for which he gave them three selions;) and also pasture for one hundred sheep, eight oxen, five cows, and five horses, with liberty to have forty swine in his wood of Wappenham quit of pannage, and as much housebote and haybote as belonged to two virgates. By another charter, describing himself Henry son of Gilbert de Pinkeney, for the souls of Lettice his wife, R. (Robert) his heir, and his other sons and daughters, he gave them a cart-load of firewood out of his wood of Wappenham weekly to dress their food, and eight cart-loads yearly to support hospitality; which eight loads, in the confirmation charter of his son Robert, they are directed to have yearly at the nativity of our Lord for firing for their guests[l] at that festive season. After the dissolution, the possessions of this priory in Wappenham were granted (int. al.) in 34 Hen. 8 (1532-3) to Sir John Williams and Anthony Stringer.[m]

The warden and fellows of All Souls college, Oxford, have an estate in Wappenham, formerly called the Thrifts, or Friths, a name descriptive of an heath or common overgrown with wood and shrubs; and the commissioners of inclosure allotted to them about 70 acres of land in lieu of the wood and furze on 192 acres on Wappenham Wild.

The Village is situated on elevated ground, about six miles from Brackley. By the census of 1801, Wappenham, including Astwell, contained 105 houses and 477 inhabitants; by that of 1811, exclusive of Astwell, 90 houses and 396 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 102 houses and 448 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for Wappenham, exclusive of Astwell, is £99. 5s. 6d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2,199. The poor's rates, for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £239. 10s. 10d. at 5s. in the £. The wake follows the assumption of the Virgin Mary.

The Advowson, anterior to the foundation of the chantry, is involved in obscurity; since which period it has been annexed to the bishopric of Lincoln.

WEDON PRIORY TITHES. Gilbert de Pinkeney confirmed (int. al.) to Wedon priory a cell to the abbey of St. Lucian, near Beauvois, in Normandy, the tithes of his demesne in "Wapenam," of the gift of his grandfather Ghilo,[n] brother of Ansculf, the domesday lord. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3),[o] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1),[p] this portion of tithes is rated at one mark per ann. In 15 Ric. 2 (1392) the abbot and convent of St. Lucian sold Wedon priory to Bittlesden abbey;[q] and the same year, in an agreement between sir John de Caisho, warden, governor, or rector of the church of Wappenham, and the abbot and convent of Bittlesden, the said incumbent acknowledged the tithes of beasts, sheep, cheese, and of all other things in the manor formerly belonging to Gilbert de Pinkeney, the tithes of two cultures called "Blacknams," with a small meadow in Astwell, and of Smethemede in Wappenham, to belong to the abbot and convent.[r] In March following (1392-3) the abbot and convent demised the tithes of corn, hay, wool, lambs, and of all other things belonging to Pinkeney's manor, and the other tithes specified in the above agreement, to the said sir John Caisho for 10s. yearly;[s] and various demises occur of the said tithes to succeeding wardens or rectors, during their respective incumbencies, at different reserved rents, varying from 2s. to 30s. yearly.[t] These portions of tithes were included in the reversionary grant to sir Thomas Wriothesley.[u]

THE RECTORY is in the deanry of Brackley. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3),[x] and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1),[p] it was valued at 24 marks (£16) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at £24. 4s. 5d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton, 4s. 2d. for rents resolute to the castle ward of Windsor, and 40s. to the chaplain officiating at Fawcote, parcel of the rectory.[y] In the report of the parliamentary commissioners in 1655, the inhabitants certified that the tithes, and certain glebe lands of the yearly value of £90, reputed part of a chantry there, were claimed by Robert Wallop, esq. as impropriator, and by him leased to the rev. Theophilus Hart, who received the profits and supplied the cure of the parish, the nomination and disposition whereof belonged to the said Mr. Wallop; and that the tithes of Astwell and Faucott, and of certain woods, meadows, and pastures, part of the said chantry and parsonage of Wappenham, to the yearly value of £120, were claimed by sir Robert Shirley, bart. Philip Holman, esq. Thomas Emiley, esq. and John Knight, gent.; and that there was a demolished chapel in the hamlet of Faucot, about two miles distant from Wappenham.[z] In another part of the same survey, it is certified that "Astwell and Fawcott" parish to Wappenham two miles distant, and pay to the "parson" thereof by composition 30s. yearly, or thereabouts, and formerly had a chapel of ease supplied by the parson of Wappenham.[a] The rectory now consists of 68 a. 3 r. 25 p. of land allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the glebe land and tithe acres, 165 a. 3 r. 28 p. in lieu of the tithes of the new inclosure, 62 a. 1 r. 6 p. in lieu of the tithes of old inclosures, woods, and coppices belonging to proprietors of land in the new inclosure, and 3 a. in lieu of Easter offerings; besides which, the rector receives £1. 11s. per ann. for Astwell and Faucote. According to Bridges, 'the warden's house is now the rector's; and two of the houses belonging to the chauntry priests are cottages yet standing, and in the rector's possession. The others are demolished.'[b] The rectory-house stands in the village, and there is a cottage in the village belonging to the rectory.

RECTORS. Thomas de Pinkeney, rector, with the consent of Leticia de Lucy the patroness, presented John, chaplain, to be vicar of the church of Wappenham, 1233.

Mast. Nicholas Smale, A.M. 11 Jan. 1524-5. He was also rector of Thenford.

Richard Barber, LL. B. presented by the bishop of Lincoln, and instituted 15 Nov. 1553, on the decease of the last incumbent. His resignation introduced William Symonds, B. D. inst. 10 Mar. 1553-4. He was warden of Towcester chantry in 1544.

Thomas Benbowe, inst. 29 May 1565, on the death of the last incumbent. On his decease

William Bailey, B. D. was inst. 27 Oct. 1614, and again 16 Aug. 1615. His death introduced

Richard Meredith, B. D. noticed under Farthingston, who was inst. 28 July 1632, and on his resignation

Cæsar Williamson, A. M. was inst. 13 Jan. 1640-1. Having joined the king's army, and been present at the battle of Edgehill in 1642, Mr. Wallop reported him to the committee of sequestrators at Northampton as "a malignant," and his benefice became the first which was sequestered in this county. He retired into Ireland on the decline of the royal cause, and submitting to the ruling powers, was made a fellow of Dublin college, and orator of the university, in which capacity he delivered and published a panegyric on Henry Cromwell, the lord lieutenant. He obtained from his college the living of Tredagh, where "he ended his days in a crazed condition," about four or five years after the restoration. On his expulsion, Mr Wallop procured the appointment for Theophilus Hart, of whose immoralities a most revolting account is given by Walker.[h] He conformed to the Bartholomew Act; and to corroborate his title obtained a fictitious presentation from his brother John Hart, by assignment from Robert Wallop, esq. the pretended patron, and was episcopally instituted 14 Feb. 1662-3, on the cession or removal of Cæsar Williamson the last incumbent, though he himself had been in possession twenty years. He had been presented to the vicarage of Blakesley in 1661, and continued to hold it with this rectory till his disgraceful death,* which should be placed, not in January, but in November 1685, on the 16th of which month he was buried here.[i] The advowson was recovered to the see of Lincoln after a dispossession of half a century, through the exertions of

John Hutton, A. M. archdeacon of Stowe, who, as a reward for his services, was presented by the bishop of Lincoln, and inst. 10 June 1686. He has been already noticed under Farthingston, which he resigned for this rectory, and was buried here 2 May 1712.[i] His successor

Maurice Wheeler, of Christ ch. coll. A. M. was inst. on the 17th of the same month. He has previously occurred under Thorpe Mandeville. He was buried here 7 Oct. 1727,[i] though he had resigned this rectory several years,

John Fletcher, of Pembroke or Queen's coll. Oxf. A. M. being inst. 13 May 1715. He held the vicarage of Blakesley with this rectory from 1731 till his death. He was buried here 31 Jan. 1733-4,[i] and

John Taylor, of Christ ch. coll. Oxf. A. M. 1742, B. & D. D. 1752, rector of Etton, was presented by the king during the vacancy of the see of Lincoln, and inst. 30 Oct. following. He was then archdeacon of Bedford, and afterwards of Leicester, which, with the rectory of St. Mary Aldermanbury, London, he retained till his death in 1772. He resigned Etton in 1745, and vacating Wappenham two years afterwards, was succeeded by

Norman Mead, of King's coll. Camb. A.M. prebendary of Lincoln, who was inst. 22 June 1747. He was buried here 3 June 1766,[i] and

Robert Dowbiggin, of St. John's coll. Camb. A. B. 1760, A. M. 1763, and D. D. 1786, was inst. 14 July 1766. He was also prebendary and sub-dean of Lincoln, rector of Stoke Goldington, in Buckinghamshire, and master of St. John's hospital, Northampton, and Retford hospital in Nottinghamshire. He died at Stoke Goldington 19 Nov. 1794, and Henry Portington, of Lincoln coll. Oxf. A. M. was inst. 18 Feb. following.

THE REGISTERS of burials commence in 1678, of baptisms in 1686, and of marriages in 1688.

THE CHURCH, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, stands in the upper part of the village, and consists of a pinnacled tower containing four bells, nave, north and south aisles and porches, and chancel. In 1291, 'twenty days of indulgence were granted by Oliver Sutton bishop of Lincoln to all such as should contribute towards the building of the chancel in the church of Wappenham.[k]' The interior is partially new pewed. The tower is 12 ft. 5 in. long by 12 ft. wide; the nave and aisles are 43 ft. 9 in. long, the north aisle 11 ft. the nave 18 ft. 7 in. and the south aisle 13 ft. 11 in. wide; and the chancel 36 ft. 4 in. by 17 ft. 5 in. The nave is divided from the north aisle by three circular arches on circular pillars with capitals of plain mouldings; and from the south aisle by three pointed arches on octangular pillars with plain capitals. The South or Astwell aisle is repaired by the duke of Buckingham and Chandos. The font is in the south aisle against one of the pillars. At the east end is a piscina. At the back of the pillar nearest the chancel is a trefoil headed aperture which formerly opened into the chancel, but is now blocked up. The chancel was neatly wainscotted by archdeacon Hutton.

SOUTH AISLE. At the west end are several brass memorials of the Billings and Lovets.

4. On a large blue marble slab are the figures, between three and four feet in length, of the lord chief justice Billing and his lady. He is represented in his official robes; and she in a plain dress, with short waist, and cuffs. On a brass plate beneath:

Orate pro a'i'ab'z Thome Billyng militis quo'd'm Capital' Justic' d'ni Regis ad pl'ita coram ip'o Rege tenend', et Katerine ur'is ej' q' quid'm Thom's obiit v die me's. Maij A°. D'ni M°CCCC°LIII primo et dicta Katerina obiit viij die March A. D'ni M°.CCCC°LIIII° quor' a'i'ab' p'p'ciet' Deus Amen.

Under the inscription were the figures of five sons and four daughters, and on several labels Jh'u Mercy and Lady Helpp.

5. On an adjoining blue marble slab was the following inscription, in the time of Bridges.

Hic jacet Tho. Billinge Arm. filius & heres Thome Billing Capitalis Justiciarii de Banco domini Regis qui obiit xviii die Martii A. Dom. MDXIII cujus anime propicietur Deus. Amen.[1]

This and the preceding slab were brought from Bittlesden abbey after the dissolution.

6. On a similar slab is a small brass figure of a female with a hanging hood, and beneath

Hic jacet Constantia nup' ux' Joh'is Butler Armig'i, soror Henri' Heer Armig'i, que obiit xvi die Maii A. MCCCCLIIIIII cuj' a'i'e De' p'piciet'.

7. On a similar slab are small brass figures of a man in armour, and a female in a corresponding dress to the last described. The impresses remain where four shields were inserted. On a brass plate beneath is inscribed:

Hic jacet Thomas Lovett filius Tho. Lovett Armig'i et Elizabeth ux'. ej'. qui obiit . . . . die . . . . A'. M°. . . . . quor' a'iab's De' p'piciet'.

8. On another marble slab was a small brass figure, and two shields, one of which has disappeared; on the other, quarterly, Lovett and Turville, quartering, 1. Billing; 2. Gifford; 3. (Az.) a bend cotissed (Ar.) between six martlets (O.) Tonge; 4. per pale (O. and G.) a chevron (Erm) . . . . 5. (Ar.) a chief indented (Az.) Cranford; 6. (Ar.) a cross engrailed (G.) Green of Drayton; impaling, quarterly, 1 & 4, (Ar.) on a fesse (S.) between three lions' head erased (G.) as many anchors (O.) Fermor ancient, 2 & 3, per pale indented (Ar. and O.) a chevron between three escallops (G.) Brown of London. On a brass plate beneath:

Here lieth the bodie of Thomas Lovett late of Astwell Esquier, who deceased the xviii day of September in the yeare of our Lord God MCCCCCLIIIIIJ which Thomas had issue by Elizabeth his wife Jane married to John Shirley Esquier.

9. On another marble slab are two small brass figures similar to the last. There were four shields; the fourth only is remaining, quarterly, 1. Green of Drayton; 2. Tonge; 3. . . . . 4. Cranford. The inscription has disappeared.

Aged 68.

On slabs:

10. In Memory of Parnell Harby
Wife of Francis Harby Esqr.
Late of Adston
and Daughter of Samuel Tryst Esqr.
Late of Culworth in this County.
She departed this Life July 8. 1744.

11. Here lieth the body of the Rev. John Hutton, M. Archdeacon of Stove and Rector of this church, who died Apr. 29, 1712, aged 63.

12. Bridges states from "Belchier's Collections," that "an old monument lies here of Gilbert de Middleton, founder of the chauntry, thirteen feet and a half in length, but somewhat defaced;"[m] but observes in a note, "this monument now lies upon the ground, and is but eleven foot eight inches long." It is 3 ft. 8 in. wide, and has no inscription.

Benefactions (vide p. 541).

Leeson's Charity will be detailed under Arthorp.

The Poor's Land consists of 15 acres allotted by the commissioners of inclosure, and now lets for £28. 10s. per ann. which rent is added to Leeson's charity, and part given to poor widows and other aged women, and the residue is distributed among other poor persons, with a preference to those not receiving parochial relief.

ASTWELL,

with Falcot, is an extensive hamlet in the parish of Wappenham, with the exception of a small portion in Siresham. It is all old inclosure, and contains about 1870 acres, the property of the duke of Buckingham and Chandos, K.G. The soil is chiefly a strong loam, and the greater part of the lordship is in pasture. There is a water-mill on a brook which runs into the Ouse.

Manorial History. Pinkeney Fee.* In the Saxon era Estwell belonged to Leuric† and Aluric, and was rated at 40s. yearly: the same valuation was continued at the Domesday survey, when it was held by Goisfrid and Robert under Ghilo, brother of Ansculf. It contained two hides. The arable land was five carucates, of which two were in demesne with a servant; and eight villeins and eight bordars had the remaining three. There was a mill worth 12d. yearly; ten acres of meadow; and a wood six furlongs long and one furlong five perches wide.[n]

Wauncy, or Brooke Manor. One moiety of Astwell was acquired within a century of the conquest by the family of Wauncy, who were early benefactors to Bittlesden abbey. In the certificate of baronies in 14 Hen. 2 (1167), amongst the feudatories of Gilbert de Pinkeney, Robert de Wauncy was certified to hold one fee.[o] In the Testa de Nevill, about 21 Hen. 3 (1237), another Robert de Wauncy had one fee in "Estwell and Fawcott," of the barony of Henry de Pinkeney,[p] which was in the tenure of his successor of both names in 24 Edw. 1 (1295).[q] In 8 Edw. 2 (1314), Robert de Wauncy died seised of Astwell manor, held of the king as of the barony of Pinkeney by service of one fee, and 20s. yearly to the castle guard of Windsor, leaving Robert de Wauncy, his son and heir, aged twenty-eight years,[r] who, the following year, was returned lord of Astwell and Faucott;[s] and in 20 Edw. 3 (1346), on levying the aid for knighting the king's eldest son, Robert de Wauncy accounted for one fee in Astwell and Faucote.[t] From 45 Edw. 3 (1371), when Robert de Wauncy occurs in attestation of a Sulgrave deed, no direct evidence of the descent of this manor has been retrieved till 32 Hen. 6 (1453), when Arthur Brooke, esq. died seised of the manor of Astwell, with pertinencies in Faucote and Wappenham;[u] and may fairly be presumed to have derived it either by direct or mesne inheritance, as the arms of Wauncy are quartered by that family.

The subjoined pedigree exhibits a series of successive manorial lords from the reign of Henry II. to Edward III. bearing, with one solitary exception, the same baptismal name! the hopeless task, therefore, of individualising them, has not been attempted.

By indenture 24 Apr. 11 Edw. 4 (1471) William Broke, of Astwell, esq. and Dowse his wife, agree to exchange in fee the manors of Astwell, Falcot, and Wappenham,—or, more strictly, the manors of Astwell and Falcote extending into Wappenham,—late belonging to his father, Arthur Brooke, with Edmund Dorne and Margaret his wife, and Thomas Lovett, esq. and Anne his wife, for the manors of Rushton and Much or Great Oakley, and lands there and in Bulwyke, Henwyke, Stanyarne, Newton, Wykeley (Weekley), and Little Oakley, heretofore belonging to Thomas Lovett, grandfather (ayeul) to the said Thomas; and further covenant that John Brooke, son and "heire p'tensed" of the said William and Dowse shall marry Margaret, daughter of the said Thomas, before the feast of St. Michael ensuing, and that the said Thomas "shall do and bere all maner of costes and charges in the marriage of the seid John and Margaret, and kepe and bere all maner of costes and charges of the seid John and Margaret onto the tyme the seid John be fully at the age of xxi yere, iff the seid espouseils so long contynewe."[x]

Thomas Lovett, esq. afterwards married Joan, daughter and coheiress of Thomas Billing, esq. and widow of John Hawe, a justice of the common pleas, with whom he had Gifford or Billing's manor, in Astwell; and in Feb. 5 Hen. 7 (1491-2) settled on her for life, Wauncy alias Brooke's manor, and Gifford alias Billing's manor in Astwell, remainder to himself in fee tail, remainder to his uterine brother, Thomas Dorne, with divers remainders over; and, as to Billing's manor, remainder to her sisters, Sibilla Ingelton, Rose Tresham, and Katherine Lynde, successively, in fee tail, remainder to the right heirs of Roger Gifford, father of Katherine, late wife of lord chief justice Billing.[y] Joan survived till 9 Hen. 8 (1517),[z] when Thomas Lovett, esq. son and heir of her husband by his first wife, came into possession. He died in 34 Hen. 8 (1542), leaving Thomas Lovett, esq. his grandson and heir,[a] on whose decease, in 28 Eliz. (1585), his grandson, George Shirley, esq. son of his only child Jane, by John Shirley, was found to be his next heir, aged twenty-eight years.[b] He was created a baronet on the first institution of that order by James I. in 1611; and his great grandson, sir Robert Shirley, bart. had a further accession of honours, the abeyance of the ancient barony of Ferrers of Chartley being terminated in his favour in 1677, and the titles of viscount Tamworth and earl Ferrers granted to him in 1711. From him, the manors of Astwell and Falcot, and about 2170 acres of land there, and in Wappenham and Siresham, descended to Washington, 5th earl Ferrers, by whom they were sold in 1763, when the whole, except Priesthay wood, in Wappenham, about 160 acres, was purchased by Richard earl Temple, K.G.

Anne Eliza, born Feb. 1820.

Gifford, or Billing Manor. Goisfrid, the domesday mesne lord of the other moiety of Astwell, was proprietor also of the Pinkeney lands in Siresham,* and both estates were in the Testa de Nevill about 21 Hen. 3 (1237), included in the fees held of the barony of Pinkeney by Simon de Pinkeney,[c] the head of a junior branch of the baronial family seated at Moreton Pinkeney.

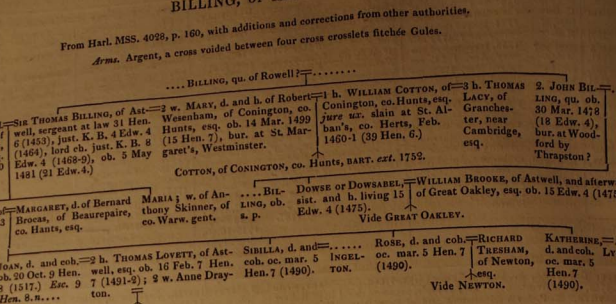
In 53 Hen. 3 (1269), Richard de Wedon exchanged these lands in Astwell and Falcot, valued at £15, for lands in Croughton, with Osbert Gifford,[d] who in 24 Edw. 1 (1295) accounted for one fee in Astwell, in which Richard de Wedon, and William de Pinkeney (son of Simon), had intermediate interests between him and the paramount lord, Robert de Pinkeney.[e] This manor,[f] ' for some offences committed by the said Osbert de Gifford, was seized into the hands of king Edward, but given back to him the same year, upon condition that he should neither sell it, nor by any act or contrivance alienate it from his family, or commit any waste or destruction upon it.' In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) Edward, son of John Gifford, claimed against John Gifford, of Twyford,† Buckinghamshire, the manor of Astwell, which he alleged Osbert Gifford had given to his son John, remainder to the said Edward, son of John, but the plaintiff failing to appear on the day of trial, judgment was entered for the defendant.[g] By the inquisition p. m. of Margery, widow of William de Harwedon, in 20 Hen. 6 (1441), Thomas Gifford, esq. was found to hold of her the manor of Astwell—as subsidiary to her manor of Moreton Pinkeney—by service of half a fee, and 13s. 4d. castle ward to Windsor.[h]



Thomas Billing, esq. afterwards knighted, and lord chief justice of the king's bench, married Catherine, sister of the above Thomas Gifford, esq. who probably received this manor for a marriage portion, as it was released by her brother, to her and her husband;[i] and the supposition derives additional force from the terms of the settlement made on the marriage of her granddaughter and coheiress Joan, with Thomas Lovett, esq. as already stated under the Wauncy, or Brooke manor.

BITTLESDEN ABBEY LANDS. Osbert de Wanci, by deed without date, gave to the monks of Bittlesden all his land in "Estwell," between Bicheho and Bishopeshul, and the King's way and Gudlachesho, part of which was of the dower of his wife Adeliza, together with Gudlachesho, and common of pasture in wood and plain.[k] Robert de Wanci, with the consent of his brother William and sister Christiana, confirmed the donation of his father Osbert.[l] These lands in Estwell and Faucote are called Blakenham in an agreement, whereby Robert, son of Robert de Wancy, empowered the monks to assart them, and convert them to tillage:[m] and William de Wancy, of Faucote, son and heir of Robert de Wancy, formerly lord of Astwell, confirmed Blakenham, with pertinences in Astwell, of the gift of his ancestors.[n] In 11 Hen. 8 (1519) the abbot and monks conveyed all their two inclosures in Astwell, called Blakenham closes, with wood and tithes thereto belonging, to Thomas Lovett, esq. son and heir of Thomas Lovett, esq. deceased, in fee tail.[o]

THE MANOR HOUSE has been deserted since its alienation by earl Ferrers, and was only an occasional residence during its continuance in that noble family. Bridges thus describes it: 'Behind the gatehouse is a little court, and an entry into the hall. The hall windows project en ronde, and have battlements over them. The wainscot and chimney-pieces in several rooms are adorned with the arms of the family, and with other carved work: and the windows, which are of chrystal, are stained with flowers, birds, horses, and other ornaments. At the east end of the great parlour was formerly a chapel, where Dr. Sheldon, afterwards archbishop of Canterbury, and Dr. Dolben, afterwards archbishop of York, are said to have successively officiated as chaplains to the family.'[p] The mansion was partially, if not wholly, rebuilt by Sir George Shirley, bart. as appears by the arms of Shirley, with his initials G. S. and the date of 1607. When it was taken down, some of the inferior apartments were reserved for the tenant of the farm. One of the rooms is wainscotted, and over the chimney-piece are two shields, bearing the arms of sir George Shirley, impaling Berkeley and Wroughton, his two wives. The broad, embattled tower, is a prominent object in the annexed representation of this relic of departed grandeur, obligingly contributed by sir Arthur de Capell Brooke, bart. of Oakley, a descendant from William Brooke, esq. who exchanged estates with Lovett in the reign of Henry 6.

The old manor-house, another farm-house, and the water-mill, comprise the population of Astwell. In the census of 1801, Astwell and Falcot were included in Wappenham; by that of 1811, they contained 22 houses and 110 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 23 houses, and 118 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for Astwell, including Falcot, though not specifically named, is £100. 8s. 8d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2006. The poor's rates for these hamlets, for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £156. 0s. 6d. at in the £.

Selina Countess of Huntingdon—a name familiar to the religious world in the last century, was born at Astwell house, 13 Aug. 1707. She was the second of the three daughters and coheiresses of Washington, second earl Ferrers. In the bloom of youth, she married Theophilus, ninth earl of Huntingdon, a nobleman of a retired and amiable disposition, from whom she was separated by death in 1746; and surviving him forty-five years, she devoted her widowhood to a course of practical piety, and the zealous, if not enthusiastic propagation of her peculiar views of Christian truth. The sect of Calvinistic Methodists was founded by her chaplain, George Whitfield, but, so influential was her munificent patronage in effecting the permanent settlement of the society, that it is now generally denominated "Lady Huntingdon's Connection." She established sixty-four chapels in various parts of the kingdom; for the maintenance of which, and of seminaries for the education of ministers, she devised the bulk of her fortune to trustees. Those who differ most widely from her in sentiment must do justice to her virtues. Her benevolence was proverbial, and she expended upwards of £100,000 in acts of public and private charity. She died at her house in Spafields, near London, 17 June, 1791, at the advanced age of eighty-four years, and by her will directed her remains, dressed in the suit of white silk which she wore at the opening of the chapel in Goodman's-fields, to be deposited in as plain a manner as possible in her husband's vault at Ashby de la Zouch, in Leicestershire. Of her seven children, four sons and three daughters, the countess of Moira alone survived her, or left issue. Her portrait has been frequently engraved.

FALCOT, or FAWCOTE, has been immemorially associated with Astwell, and the lands are not now distinguishable. The first specific notice of it is in the Testa de Nevill about 21 Hen. 3 (1237), when Robert de Wauncy was found to hold one fee in Astwell and Faucote of the barony of Henry de Pinkeney.[q]

The Village lies at the extremity of the lordship, a short distance from Helmdon.

Chapel. At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), among the reprises issuing out of the rectory of Wappenham, was an annual payment of 40s. to the chaplain officiating at Fawcote.[r] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified that the chapel of Faucote was demolished.[s] in early deeds varied in its orthography from "Wafurecurt" to "Wavercurt, Warecourth," with minute variations, till it settled down into Warkworth. The parochiality of Warkworth, and its members, Overthorp, Grimsbury, and the Spittle or Spital, Nethercote, and Huscote, is extremely complicated and obscure. In its original open field state, prior to the inclosure by act of parliament 4 Geo. 3 (1764), it was divided into three districts, called Warkworth Tithing, Middleton Tithing, and Banbury Tithing; the two former of which are now more usually denominated, the above hill land; and the latter, the below hill land. Warkworth Tithing, containing about 960 acres, pays to the poor and church rates of Warkworth; Middleton Tithing, containing about 950 acres, and including great part of Overthorp, to the poor and church of Middleton Cheney; Banbury Tithing, containing about 990 acres, and including Nethercote, Grimsbury, and Huscote, to the poor of Warkworth and the church of Banbury; and the whole 2900 acres contribute to the highway rates of Warkworth. The principal proprietors in Middleton Tithing have already been given under Middleton Chenduit.* Of the two other tithings, about 340 acres belong to James Smith, of Berkhampsted, Hertfordshire, esq.; about 365 acres to Sir Charles Forbes, of Edinglassie, N. B. bart.; about 240 acres to Mr. Robert Taylor, of Adderbury, Oxfordshire; about 225 acres, being the Spital farm, to William Edward Tomline, of Riley Grove, Lincolnshire, esq. eldest son of the late bishop of Winchester; about 115 acres, being the Huscote farm, to Josiah Gist, of Wormington Grange, Gloucestershire, esq.; and about 100 acres to the rev. Charles Ballard, of Great Haseley, Oxfordshire. Warkworth, with its members, is bounded on the north and east by Middleton Chenduit; south-east and south by King's Sutton and Astrop; south-west and south by the river Charwell, which divides it from Bodicote and Banbury in Oxfordshire; and west by Chacomb. The soil varies from a strong to a light loam, and more than four fifths of the lordship is in pasture.

It is remarked in the "Outlines of the Geology of England and Wales," that organic remains of vertebral animals are very rare in all the beds of the third or lower system of Oolites: "a series of vertebræ were, however, discovered a few years back in the marly sandstone of Warkworth, Northamptonshire. They probably belonged to some large marine lacerta, but were dispersed soon after their discovery, and none of them could be recovered."[a] These stone pits continue to be worked for the repair of the roads, but not to the depth of more than four or five feet from the surface. No more vertebræ have been found here, but we have recognized the following fossils. Powdery, carbonaceous, and siliceous dicotelydonous wood. Pentacrinites caput medusæ. Nautilus striatus, T. 182.† Helicina polita, T. 285,† abundantly. Belemnites. Amphidesma recurvum, Pl. v. f. 25.‡ A. donaciforme, Pl. xii. f. 5.‡ Lutraria ambigua, T. 227.† Pholodomya obliquata, Pl. xiii. f. 15.‡ Unio Listeri, T. 154. f. 1, 3, 4.† Mya, two new species. Modiola scalprum, T. 248. f. 2.† Cucullæa oblonga, T. 206. f. 1.† Avicula inequivalvis, T. 244. f. 2, 3.† abundantly.

MANORIAL HISTORY. Warkworth was originally a member of the bishop of Lincoln's manor of Banbury in Oxfordshire, and, though not specifically named in the domesday survey, may be presumed to have been included in the anonymous lands belonging to that manor, of which Robert held of the bishop four hides, Goislen five hides, another Robert two hides and a half, William five hides, and Humphrey half a hide.[b]

The local surname was adopted by the early lords of Warkworth, according to an ancient pedigree of the Knightleys, which states that the daughter and coheiress of . . . . . Warkworth married sir John de Lyons, father of sir John who died in 1385[c]; and, though the Lyons' family had been seated here more than a century, the acquirement of the property through such a connection is not necessarily negatived by the match having been by inadvertence or mistake chronologically misplaced. Richard de Lyons, or "de Leone," by deed without date, granted to Matthew de Lyons, his brother, two virgates of land in "Tothe et Maret, in Wafurecurt," rendering to him a palfrey and a hawk, and to Maud his wife a gold ring.[d] Roger de Lyons, son of Richard, in 7 Joh. (1205) levied a fine of a third of his father's lands in "Wavercurt," or Warkworth, to his widow Juliana in dower.[e] In 31 Edw. 1 (1303) sir John de Lyons, and Margery his wife, by fine settled two parts of this manor on themselves for life, with remainder to their sons John and Richard successively in fee tail, remainder to sir John Lyons the father in fee.[f] In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) their son, sir John de Lyons, was summoned by writ of quo warranto to shew by what right he claimed view of frank pledge and weyf in his manor of Warcworth, when he recited his title from the above settlement, and pleaded prescription; but acknowledging that neither he nor his ancestors had a pillory for offenders against the assize of bread, and that they punished offenders against the assize of beer by amerciament, and not by tumbril till the third offence, the view was taken into the king's hands, and restored again for half a mark.[g] In 5 Edw. 3 (1331) William Turville, rector of Plumpton, and Adam de Courtenhall, released to him the common of pasture and fishery which William de St. John recovered by writ of novel disseisin against his mother, Margery Lyons.[d] In 9 Edw. 3 (1335) he had a grant of free warren (int. al.) in Warkworth and Preston Capes;[h] and in 20 Edw. 3 (1346), on levying the aid for knighting the king's eldest son, paid 10s. for the fourth of a fee in Warkworth, held of the bishop of Lincoln.[1] In 44 Edw. 3 (1370) his son and heir, sir John de Lyons, married Isabel, daughter of William St. John, of PLUMPTON, whose widow Isabella released to them her dower in Middleton Cheney.* On his decease without issue, in 9 Ric. 2 (1385), this manor passed to his nephew and heir

Sir John Chetwode, who disused his paternal arms, and adopted those of his mother's family. In a deed in 1 Hen. 4 (1399), he styled himself sir John Chetwode, lord of Warkworth, cousin and heir of sir John Lyons, and sealed with the arms of Lyons, a lion rampant, circumscribed, "Sigillum Johannis Chetwode, militis."[k] His eldest son, of both names, dying without issue, the inheritance devolved on his second son, sir Thomas Chetwode, who bore, quarterly, 1 and 4, Lyons, 2 and 3, Chetwode, as appears from the seal appended to a deed in 19 Hen. 6 (1440), by which he vested his estates in feoffees for the purpose of settling them on himself in tail male, remainder, if he left more daughters than Joan, then wife of Elias Langworth, on the said Joan and her sisters in fee tail. On failure of issue in his daughters, Warkworth, with his other possessions, passed to his sister and heiress, Elizabeth, wife of

Thomas Wodhull, commonly called lord Wodhull, the lineal representative of Thomas lord Wodhull, who was summoned to parliament in the reign of Edward I. Nicholas Wodhull, also called lord Wodhull, great great grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth, by his will dated 20 Mar. 22 Hen. 8 (1531), bequeathed his body to be buried in the chapel of Our Lady, in the church of Warkworth, and directed his executors to provide an honest priest of good conversation, with a yearly salary of 8 marks (£5. 6s. 8d.) to say and sing masses there for his soul, and the souls of his father and mother, for twelve years next ensuing his decease: he also bequeathed to the parson of Warkworth, 20s. for tithes forgotten, £10 towards rebuilding the steeple, a gown of black satin to make a cope thereof, and his wife's apparel, to be made into vestments and other ornaments to the honour of God in the said church.[l] He died in May following, seised (int. al.) of the manor of Warkworth, held of the bishop of Lincoln, as of his manor of Banbury, leaving Anthony Wodhull, his son and heir, aged fourteen years;[l] after whose decease it returned into the family of Chetwode by the marriage of Agnes, his daughter and heiress, with

Richard Chetwode, esq. third son of Roger Chetwode, esq. of Oakley, in Staffordshire, ancestor of the present baronet. She died in 18 Eliz. (1585), and was succeeded in her inheritance by her son, sir Richard Chetwode, who in Sept. 5 Car. (1629), conjointly with his son Richard Chetwode, and grandson Knightley Chetwode, in consideration of £14,000, sold the manor of Warkworth, with an estate which he had purchased in Grimsbury, to Philip Holman, esq.[m]

William Holman, esq. grandson of the purchaser, died without issue in Oct. 1740, when his inheritance in various counties passed in moieties to his sister Mary, wife of Thomas Eyre of Hassop, Derbyshire, esq. and his nephew, William Mathias, 3d earl of Stafford. In Apr. 1746 the earl, for £15,656. 16s. 2¼d. sold his moiety of the manors and estates of Warkworth and Middleton Cheney to his uncle Thomas Eyre, esq. who, the same month, in conjunction with Mary his wife, settled the entirety of the estates thus vested in them, subject to their respective lives, on their only younger son, Francis Eyre, esq. The Holmans, and the Eyres their successors, were zealous adherents of the religion of their ancestors; and Archdeacon Churton having, soon after he entered on the duties of his parish, circulated "A brief defence of the Church of England, in answer to those from whom we separated, and to those who separate from us," the claims of the church of Rome were promptly advocated, in "A Letter to the rev. Ralph Churton, M. A. rector of Middleton Cheney, on his address to his parishioners, by Francis Eyre, of Warkworth, esq." 8vo. 1795. His opponent rejoined the following year, and Mr. Eyre's "Reply" appeared in an 8vo. volume in 1798. Prior to the vindication of his principles in this warm but friendly controversy, Mr. E. published anonymously, "A few remarks on the history of the decline and fall of the Roman Empire, relative chiefly to the two last chapters. By a Gentleman," 1778, 8vo. And, after a lapse of twenty years, "A short appeal to the public, by the Gentleman who is particularly addressed in the Postscript of the Vindication of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters of the Decline and fall of the Roman Empire," 1799, 8vo. He was also author of "A short essay on the Christian religion, descriptive of the advantages which have accrued to society by the establishment of it, as contrasted with the manners and customs of mankind before that happy period. To which are added, a few occasional remarks on philosophers in general, as also on some of the objections started against the Christian religion by the fashionable writers of the present age. The whole proposed as a preservative against the pernicious doctrines which have overwhelmed France with misery and desolation. By a sincere friend of mankind." 1795, 8vo. He died in London, 7 Oct. 1804, aged seventy-two years, and was succeeded by his son, Francis Eyre, esq. who the following year disposed of his manor and estate of Warkworth, containing 1073 acres, by public auction.

On the sale of the Eyre estate, in 1805, it was purchased by Thomas Bradford, of Ashdown park, Sussex, esq. who in 1807 sold the manor of Warkworth, with about 340 acres, to James Smith, of Berkhampsted, Hertfordshire, esq. the present proprietor.

MANOR HOUSE. Anthony à Wood, the Oxford antiquary, during the visit to Middleton Cheney which is noticed in a preceding page,* rambled "to the antient and noble seat of Werkworth, then lately belonging to the Chetwoods; of whom it had then, some yeares before, ben bought by Philip Holman, of London, scrivener, who, dying in 1669, aged 76, was buried in the church there. One John Lewes, his kinsman, conducted him thither, where wee found the eldest son and heir of the said Philip Holman, named [George Holman], who was lately returned from his travells, had changed his religion for that of Rome, and seemed then to be a melancholy and bigotted convert. He was civil to us, and caused the church dore to be opened, where wee found several antient monuments; the chiefest of which are of the Chetwoods, which A. W. then transcrib'd, with the armes on them. The mannour house is a stately house, the antient habitation of the Chetwoods, of Chetwood, in Bucks: part of which, viz. the former part, was built by the Chetwoods, the rest by Philip Holman, before mention'd. In the gallery of the said house are the armes, quarterings, crests, and mottos of several of the nobility in England."[n] The house, which was of ashler stone, and occupied three sides of a quadrangle, stood on a healthful eminence near the church, and commanded an extensive view into Oxfordshire. It was taken down in 1806, and in the advertisement for the sale of the materials is called "Warkworth Castle." ANCIENT CUSTOM. Prior to the inclosure of this lordship, some singular ceremonies and festivities prevailed at the annual meadow-mowing, and are minutely detailed by Bridges,[o] but

"All this is past, and soon will pass away
The time-torn remnant of the holiday."

* A. Wood (ed. Bliss,) 1. p. xxxvi. * Br. 1. p. 219. * Vide p. 654.

'Within the liberty of Warkworth is Ashe-Meadow, divided amongst the neighbouring parishes, and famed for the following customs observed in the mowing of it.

The meadow is divided into fifteen portions, answering to fifteen lots, which are pieces of wood cut off from an arrow, and marked according to the land-marks in the field. To each lot are allowed eight mowers, amounting to one hundred and twenty in the whole.

On the Saturday seven-night after Midsummer-day, those portions are laid out by six persons, of whom two are chosen from Warkworth, two from Overthorp, one from Grimsbury, and one from Nethercote. These are called Field-men, and have an entertainment provided for them upon the day of laying out the meadow, at the appointment of the lord of the manor.

As soon as the meadow is measured, the man who provides the feast, attended by the hayward of Warkworth, brings into the field three gallons of ale. After this the meadow is run, as they term it, or trod to distinguish the lots; and when this is over, the hayward brings into the field a rump of beef, six penny loaves, and three gallons of ale, and is allowed a certain portion of hay in return, though not of equal value with his provision. This hayward and the master of the feast have the name of Crocus-men. In running the field, each man hath a boy allowed to assist him.

On Monday morning lots are drawn, consisting, some of eight swaths, and others of four. Of these, the first and last carry the garlands. The two first lots are of four swaths, and whilst these are mowing the mowers go double; and as soon as these are finished the following orders are read aloud:

"Oyez, Oyez, Oyez, I charge you under God, and in his majesty's name, that you keep the king's peace in the lord of the manor's behalf, according to the orders and customs of this meadow. No man, or men, shall go before the two garlands; if you do, you shall pay your penny, or deliver your scythe at the first demand, and this so often as you shall transgress. No man, or men, shall mow above eight swaths over their lots, before they lay down their scythes and go to breakfast. No man, or men, shall mow any farther than Monk's-holm-brook, but leave their scythes there, and go to dinner; according to the custom and manner of this manor. God save the King!"

The dinner provided by the lord of the manor's tenant consists of three cheese-cakes, three cakes, and a new milk cheese. The cakes and cheese-cakes are of the size of a winnowing-sieve; and the person who brings them is to have three gallons of ale.

The master of the feast is paid in hay, and is farther allowed to turn all his cows into the meadow on Saturday morning till eleven o'clock; that by this means giving the more milk, the cakes may be made the bigger.

Other like customs are observed in the mowing of other meadows in this parish.'

The Village, consisting, as in the time of Bridges, of only five houses, is situated within two miles of Banbury. By the census of 1801, "Warkworth" contained 52 houses and 260 inhabitants; by that of 1811, Warkworth with Grimsbury, 40 houses and 248 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, Warkworth with Grimsbury and Nethercote, 82 houses and 426 inhabitants. In the parliamentary return of 1801, all the members of Warkworth, though not specified, must have been included; the defalcation of numbers in 1811 probably arose from the omission of Nethercote; and the great increase in the last census, from the erection of the new tenements in Grimsbury near Banbury Bridge. The annual quota of land tax for Warkworth is £258. 19s. 4d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £6173. The poor's rates, for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £695. 6s. 11d. at 5s. 6d. in the £.

Rectory. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified Warkworth to be a parsonage worth about £40 yearly; that the vicarage of Marston St. Laurence was endowed with the parsonage of Warkworth, where there was a convenient church or chapel, distant from Marston three miles, the parishes of Middleton Cheney and Thenford intervening; that Philip Holman, of Warkworth, esq. was patron; and that Mr. John Eyre, vicar of Marston and parson of Warkworth, received the profits of both; but Mr. William Gilbert supplied the cure of Warkworth, for which the said incumbent allowed him for his salary £25 yearly.[o] The term Warkworth must here be restricted to "Warkworth Tithing," but the allotment to the vicar of "Marston cum Warkworth," in lieu of the tithes,* is in "Banbury Tithing," and contributes to the church rates of that parish.

The allotment in lieu of the tithes of "Middleton Tithing" has been given under the account of that rectory †; and Banbury Tithing will be treated of under Grimsbury.

The Church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, consists of a low coped tower, without any external entrance, nave, north aisle, south cross aisle, or chapel, with a porch attached to the west end, and chancel. The windows of the north aisle are small and mean. Those of the nave and south aisle are in the decorated style: the one at the east end of the aisle is of four lights, with trefoiled mullions, and trefoils in the divisions of the head; the dripstone springs from corbels, and has a series of small flowers thickly set in a hollow moulding. The north and south sides of the chancel have double lancet windows, under a general dripstone; and the east end has a triple lancet window. The tower is 11 ft. 9 in. long, by 8 ft. 2 in. wide; the nave, and north aisle, 37 ft. 2 in. long, the nave, 24 ft. 4 in.; the aisle 13 ft. 5 in. wide; the south aisle 13 ft. by 10 ft. 6 in.; and the chancel 21 ft. 8 in. by 13 ft. 7 in. The interior is paved with plain square tiles, and was formerly floored with ornamented Norman tiles of which some detached ones are still remaining; as are the old horizontal benches, carved at the ends and in front. Under the west arch is a circular font, with a series of trefoiled arches. The west window of the nave retains the arms of Lyons. The nave is divided from the north aisle by three spacious pointed arches, on octangular pillars with capitals of plain mouldings, and a human head on each alternate face. There is a small piscina in the east wall, at the foot of sir John Lyon's tomb. The south cross aisle has an ascent of two steps. In the south aisle is a trefoil headed piscina. The chancel is entered from the nave under a closed arch, and from the cross aisle diagonally under a smaller arch.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

NAVE. On two large slabs are the brass effigies, about 3½ feet in length, of sir John Chetwode and his lady.

1. The knight is in a complete suit of plate armour, with his hands elevated in prayer. He has a conical basinet inclosing his chin, and leaving only a shield-shaped aperture for his face; plain gorget; circular palettes to protect the armpits and bend of the arms; gauntlets with fingers, and overlapping plates at the wrists; and tassettes, or tuilles, of seven successive plates, with a small portion of the skirt of mail appearing beneath. From a transverse belt hung a long sword, part of which, and both legs, have been wantonly removed. On a brass plate:

Veille de Pasq' l'an du q're M.CCCCXIX de qy alme tout puissant Dieu eyt m'cy.

2. The lady is in the horned head-dress, falling gracefully on a long open mantle. She has a low gown with close mitten sleeves; it adopts the contour of the figure till it reaches below the waist, when it is disposed in perpendicular folds into a train at her feet, on which is seated a talbot gorged with a studded collar. On a brass plate beneath:

North Aisle. In this aisle are three very interesting memorials of the ancient family of Lyons. At the east end of the wall are two conjoined obtusely pointed monumental arches, springing from a low central pillar, over which is a rude corbel head, which connects the hood mouldings of the two arches.

I. On a slab under the eastern arch is a freestone cross-legged effigy of a knight in a hauberk, covering his head, but extending only to the wrists, leaving his hands—which are elevated—bare. Every trace of the mail is worn away, except a small portion above the knees at the opening of the tunick, which falls back, and reaches nearly to his heels. He has a plain horizontal belt; and a transverse one, from which depends a sword at his left side. On his left arm is a heater shield. His head, which is bound with a plain fillet, is supported by two mutilated angels, and rests on a double cushion; his feet on a lion.

II. On a similar slab under the western arch is a female effigy, of freestone, in a veil head-dress confined round the head by a plain fillet, and falling to the shoulders. A wimple just covers her chin; and she has an open mantle, fastened by a cordon crossing below her arms, which are raised in devotion. Her head reposes on a cushion, and on each side is seated a mutilated angel.

These effigies are doubtless of the thirteenth century, and rather corroborate than militate against the tradition of their being commemorative of the founders of this aisle of the church.

III. Opposite to the two last, beneath the eastern arch dividing the aisle from the nave, is an altar-tomb of freestone unusually high and narrow—scarcely the width of the recumbent figure. It may with little hesitation be assigned to the last sir John Lyons, who is represented in a complete suit of plate armour. The mustachios of his manly countenance curl over his helmet, which is open, and encircled with an ornamented fillet. Each elbow gusset is decorated with a lion's face, and the hands, which are elevated, have jointed gauntlets. The genouailles are enriched with roses and quatrefoils, within circles between studded bands. The sollerets are pointed at the toes, and the spurs have plain wheel rowels. The surcoat terminates just above the knees, and is laced down the right side. He has neither mail gorget nor skirts. His shield, charged with a lion rampant, is on his left arm; the upper part of it is sustained by a small lion seated on his breast. At his left side a long strait-hilted sword is suspended from a richly-studded belt, placed transversely; and at his right side is a dagger. He reposes on his helmet, surmounted by his crest, a talbot's head issuing out of a ducal coronet; and he is supported by two angels, whose hands are placed round his head. His feet rest on a couchant lion. Each side of the tomb is divided into eight compartments by trefoiled ogee arches, with crockets and finials, between pannelled buttresses running into a foliated cornice. In the base is a series of quatrefoils in circles; in the upper central compartment is a female figure veiled, and in two others, at uniform distances, two men in armour; the residue are occupied with armorial shields tastefully suspended from foliage. On the south side, I. Lyons. II. (Ar.) two bars (G.) fretty (O.) in chief three fleurs de lis (G.) St. Liz. III. On a bend . . . . IV. On a fess between three rustres as many roundles. V. A cross engrailed debruised by a bend. On the North side, VI. A fess dancette. VII. Two bars wavy within a border. VIII. Three bars, in chief three fleurs de lis. IX. On a chief, two mullets. X. Chetwode. At the west end, a man in armour kneeling. The east end is attached to the wall.

5. On a large slab is the brass figure of sir John Chetwode, son of the sir John who is interred in the nave. He is in a suit of armour exactly correspondent to his father's, with the exception of having fan elbow gussets, gauntlets plain at the wrists, and a studded belt. On a brass plate beneath:

Icy gist Johan Chetwode le filz de Johan Chetwode ch'r qui morist le p jour de Junn l'an de grace MCCCCXX de qui alme tout puissant Dieu eit m'ci Amen. Sic na' du' dixit d'no p'cib' b'n'dixit. p'r de celis deus miserere nobis.

6. On another large slab is a brass figure of a female in a close veiled head-dress, and wimple under her chin, which meets a high full-bodied gown with loose cuffs turned back, short waist confined by a studded band, and long train on which is stretched a couchant talbot gorged with a studded collar. On a brass plate beneath:

Cross Aisle. IV. Against the west wall is a large monument of white and grey marble, resting on the ground. In the basement is a rectangular blank tablet of black marble. Between two corinthian pillars is the following inscription:

CHANCEL. 11. On a slab is a small but elegant brass effigy of a man in a rich suit of tilting armour, except his helmet, surmounted with his crest, a talbot's head out of a ducal coronet, which is placed under his head. His hair is short and round. He has a vandyked collar of chain mail. His elbow-pieces are tastefully turned, terminating in a sharp point; and on his hands, which are elevated, are gauntlets with large cuffs, jointed, but without fingers. His cuirass is globose, and remarkably short waisted; his belt is so disposed as to bring his ponderous sword in front, and at his right side is a dagger. His sollerets have joints, and are pointed at the toes; and his spurs have a semicircular piece of steel which rises over the rowel. His feet rest on a talbot. The figure is executed with unusual spirit, and is an interesting specimen of the armour prevalent towards the middle of the fifteenth century. On a brass plate beneath:

Chantry.[q] 'Sir John de Lyons, Lord of the Manor in the sixth year of Edward III. founded here a chauntry for two secular priests, to be supplied by the prior and convent of Chacombe.' Connected, probably, with this foundation, was the grant from Sir John de Lyons in 20 Edw. 3 (1346), of lands (int. al.) in Grimsbury and Nethercote to Chacomb priory.[r] No mention of a chantry here occurs in 38 Hen. 8. or in 2 Edw. 6. but in 7 Edw. 6 (1552-3), Thomas Reve and George Cotton had a grant (int. al.) of all the lands in Warkworth and Overthorp, parcel of the late priory of Chacomb,[s] which they sold shortly after to William Lardin, alias Taylor,[t] and which subsequently passed to the Holmans.

as its name implies, is in the upper field of Warkworth, and principally in Middleton tithing, so that it might with equal, or perhaps greater propriety have been noticed under that parish. The village lies north of Warkworth, and contains twenty-two houses.

A Catholic Chapel 43 ft. 3 in. long, by 14 ft. 3 in. wide, was erected here in 1806 by the late earl of Newburgh, who gave also a small house and garden for the officiating priest.

GRIMSBURY

extends along the valley to Banbury bridge, which divides this county from Oxfordshire. The following scarce plants have been found in this lordship. Veronica anagallis. Water Pimpernel, in a watering place behind Grimsbury mill garden. Campanula hybrida, Corn Bell-flower, in corn fields above Huscote mill. Butomus umbellatus, flowering Rush, in the Charwell and brooks running into it. Nymphœa lutea, yellow Water Lily, in the Charwell plentifully. Ranunculus aquatilis, var 3. Water Crow-foot, in the watering place behind Grimsbury mill garden. Sisymbrium terrestre, Land Cress, on the banks of the Charwell. Geranium pratense, Crowfoot Cranesbill, in the meadows, plentifully.* There is an excellent water-mill on the back rivulet which flows into the Charwell.

Manorial History. Chokes Fee or Honor.† In the Saxon era Levenot held Grimberie with soc and sac. It was then rated at £4 yearly, but was raised to £6 at the domesday survey, when it was held by Gunfrid de Cioches or Chokes. It contained two hides and the fifth part of two hides. The arable land was six caracates; of which two were in demesne with four servants; and fifteen villeins with four bordars had the remaining four. There was a mill worth 10s. yearly, and thirty acres of meadow.[u] In the hydarium of Hen. 2, Anselm de Chokes answered for two hides and four small virgates or the fifth part of two hides in Grimesbery.[x] In 8 Ric. (1197), William de St. Mary Ecclesia rendered an account for half a year of the farm of Grimsbury, belonging to the advocate of Betun,[y] the heir of Chokes, and probably then in ward to the king. In 8 Hen. 3 (1224), the advocate of Betun was pardoned scutage for one fee in Grimsbury,[z] but it was included in the scutages paid by him for the honor of Chokes in subsequent scutages of that reign.[a] By the inquisition of the services and castle ward due from the tenants of the honor or fee of Chokes in 36 Hen. 3 (1251), it was found, that 5s. for sheriffs aid, watch and view of frank pledge, and 10s. for ward to Northampton castle, were rendered for one fee in Grimsbury.[b]

Botiller or Boteler Manor. The advocate of Betun subinfeuded the family of Park, of Park, near Stroud in Gloucestershire in this manor. By a deed without date, but which may be referred to the commencement of the thirteenth century, Thomas de Parco or Park, stiling himself lord of Grimsbury, confirms a grant of lands here.[c] The mesne lord, however, as will be shown under Bicester Priory Manor, retained only a moiety; and accordingly John le Botiller or Boteler, in whom the Park estate was vested partly by marriage with Beatrice, daughter and coheiress of William de Park,[d] and partly by agreement with, and release from Alicia de Park, and the other sisters of Beatrice,[d] was in 9 Edw. 2 (1315), certified to be co-lord of Grimsbury.[e] In 20 Edw. 3 (1346), on levying the aid for knighting the king's eldest son, he paid 20s. for half a fee here, of the fees of Chokes.[f] By the inquisition p. m. Beatrice, his widow, in 33 Edw. 3 (1359), she was found to have died seised of a moiety of the manor of Grimsbury held of the king in capite, by service of paying 5s. yearly by the hands of the sheriff, doing suit at the hundred court of Sutton every three weeks, and repairing at her own cost as often as was necessary 16 ft. of the wall of the king's park of Moulton, attached to his castle of Northampton,* leaving John le Botiller her son and heir, aged forty years.[g] In an inquisition taken in 10 Ric. 2 (1386), on a settlement of this estate by Almaric le Botiller, who succeeded his brother John, the tenure is somewhat varied; the 5s. is stated to be paid for the castle ward of Northampton, and the murage is only eight feet.[h] On the decease of Almaric, in 20 Ric. 2 (1396-7), John Kenn, son of his sister Isabella, and Isabella, wife of John Trye, and daughter of his sister Elizabeth, were found to be his heirs.[i] This estate was assigned to Kenn, and descended lineally to Robert Kenn, esq. who died in 31 Hen. 6 (1452), leaving John Kenn, his son and heir, aged two years;[k] by whom, or his son of the same name, lands in Grimsbury, Nethercote, and Huscote, were alienated in 14 Hen. 7 (1498), to John Brooke, esq.[l]

John Brooke, esq. and Joan his wife, in 15 Hen. 7 (1500), levied a fine of the estate he had purchased of Kenn, to William Cope, esq.[m] whose family subsequently acquired the

BICESTER PRIORY MANOR. In the Testa de Nevill, about 27 Hen. 3 (1242), Thomas de Breante was certified to hold one fee in Grimsbury of Robert de Gynes, as of the fee of Chokes.[n] It has been already seen that the original service for the whole of this vill was one fee; but the Park family, when they subinfeuded this portion, appear to have relieved themselves at the expense of their grantee, who is charged above with the entire service; and it is not a little remarkable that, after the lapse of a century, the inequality of this feudal burden was appealed against and superseded, for, on levying the aid for knighting the king's eldest son, in 20 Edw. 3 (1346), the prior of Bicester, in Oxfordshire, paid 20s. for lands and tenements in Grimsbury formerly belonging to Walter de Breant, and which, by the evidence of the red book of the fee of Chokes, were rated at half a fee.[o] This estate was acquired by the prior and convent of Bicester towards the close of the reign of Henry III. from sir Philip Basset, (of Wycombe, in Buckinghamshire,) who gave them all the lands and tenements he had of the gift of sir Roger de Stampford in Clifton, Henton, and Dedington, in Oxfordshire, and in Grimsbury, in the parish of Banbury, and county of Northampton.[p] In 9 Ed. 2 (1315), the prior of Bicester was certified to be co-lord of Grimsbury;[q] and in 14 Edw. 2 (1320) Walter de Burcester, clerk, had licence to grant to the priory a messuage, fourteen acres of land, and 25s. 10d. yearly rent, in Warkworth and Grimsbury.[r] In 19 Edw. 2 (1325), John le Botiller and Beatrice his wife claimed against the prior and convent a moiety of the manor of Grimsbury, as the right of Beatrice, by inheritance from Thomas de Parco, or Park,[s] and in 4 Edw. 3 (1330), the prior and convent gave the king a mark for licence of agreement with the claimants, who bound themselves in 100l. to levy a fine of the said moiety to the prior and convent; and, in further corroboration of their title, Alicia de Park, and Simon de Solers, son of Alianora de Park, released to them all their right and claim.[t]

The prior and burser of the convent of Bicester, in their account for the year ending Michaelmas, 4 Hen. 6 (1425), acknowledged the receipt of 13l. 6s. 8d. for the yearly farm of Grimsbury;[u] and, in the valuation by the commissioners at the visitation of the monasteries, in 27 Hen. 8 (1535), the farm of the manor of Grymesbury, with the mill and other profits of the manor, then in the tenure of Anthony Cope, esq. is returned at the same sum.[x]

In 36 Hen. 8 (1544), Thomas Blank and others had a grant (int. al.) of the manor of Grimsbury, described as in the county of Oxford, parcel of the late monastery of Burchester, or Bicester,[y] in security for money advanced to the king for his journey to Boulogne; but it subsequently passed to the crown again by the attainder of the said parties.* Prior, however, to the forfeiture, they must have alienated it to Edward Cope, esq. who, in 3 & 4 Phil. & Mary (1557), died seised of the manor of Grimsbury, with three messuages, three hundred acres of arable land, sixty acres of meadow, and four hundred acres of pasture, parcel of the late monastery of Bicester, held of the queen in capite by service of the twentieth part of a fee; together with six messuages, three hundred acres of arable land, sixty acres of meadow, and one hundred acres of pasture, in Grimsbury, Nethercote, Huscote, Overthorp, Warkworth, and Middleton, held of the earl of Derby, as of his hundred of Sutton, by fealty; and the third part of one messuage, sixty acres of arable land, forty acres of meadow, and one hundred acres of pasture called the Spittle, held of Edward Griffin, esq.* as of his manor of Warkworth by fealty, leaving William Cope, his son and heir, a minor aged thirteen years,[a] who died without issue in 8 Eliz. (1566), and was succeeded by his brother, Anthony Cope, aged seventeen years,[b] afterwards created a baronet by king James I. In 8 Jac. (1610), he obtained a grant of the manor of Grimsbury, near Banbury, in the counties of Oxford and Northampton, with the water-mill and lands as particularly described, parcel of the late monastery of Bicester, of the yearly value of £13. 6s. 8d.;[c]—probably to remove any doubt which might arise on the validity of the title, from the forfeiture of the first grantees, from whom his father purchased. Sir Anthony had in 36 Eliz. (1593) sold the estate in Grimsbury, Nethercote, &c. returned in the inquisition of his father, and which I apprehend formed part, if not the whole of the Botiller manor, to Richard Chetwode, esq.[d] His sons, sir William Cope, of Hanwell, Oxfordshire, 2d bart. and Richard Cope, of Cothorp, near Banbury, esq. afterwards of Ireland, alienated a portion of Grimsbury in 11 Jac. (1613) to Organ Nicols, gent. who sold to the Holmans;[d] other portions, in 3 Car. (1627), and 5 Car. (1629), to sir Thomas Crewe, of STEANE;[e] and the remainder was subsequently disposed of by them, or their immediate descendants.

bor', viz. one which Richard the miller held, and one which Osbert held, with the two crofts between Osbert's messuage and the river Charwell. To the deed is appended a circular seal about three inches in diameter, with an armed knight on horseback, bearing on his shield, bendy, two bars; on the reverse is a circular counterseal an inch and a half in diameter with a shield bearing the same arms, circumscribed, "Secretu' Will. Advocati."[g] In the cartulary of Canons Ashby priory this deed precedes the grant of these two virgates to the priory by the said David de Hakillinton;[h] which grant was confirmed by Baldwin de Betun,[i] and by "Thomas de Parco, dominus Grimsbirie."[k]

In 38 Hen. 8 (1546) Edward Watson (of Rockingham), and Henry Herdson, had a grant of the lands in Grimsbury, parcel of the late priory of Canons Ashby;[l] and in 5 & 6 Ph. & Mar. (1558) Fulk Butterie, or Botry, gent.* died seised of them, by the description of two virgates,[m] as in the original grant.

ST. LEONARD'S HOSPITAL, or, as it was denominated in later times, THE SPITTLE, or SPITAL, stood at the Northamptonshire foot of the bridge over the Charwell, which divides this county from Oxfordshire. It was founded for sick and leprous persons, but when or by whom is not known, though it is traditionally supposed to have been established in the reign of king John. Bishop Tanner identified it with the hospital dedicated to St. John, and states that it was governed by a prior, or master, and that the mastership was in the gift of the bishop of Lincoln.[n] John Gerard, of Banbury, by deed s. d. in the reign of Edw. 1. gave lands to God and the blessed Mary, and the master and leprous brothers of St. Leonard of Banbury.[o] In 10 Edw. 3 (1336), John Trymenel and sir John de Lyons had licence to grant to the hospital of St. Leonard of Banbury one messuage, one carucate of land, and sixteen acres of meadow, in Grimsbury;[p] and in 50 Edw. 3 (1376), the same sir John Lyons, lord of Warkworth, or his son, granted to Robert, chaplain of the hospital of St. Leonard near Banbury, certain tenements in Banbury and Overthorp.[q] In 22 Ric. 2 (1398), the king gave to Geoffrey Stokes, clerk, the custody of the hospital of St. Leonard, near Banbury, in the county of Northampton.[r] The subsequent descent of the Spittle lands admits of little hesitation in identifying them with the lands held of the manor of Warkworth by William Saunders, esq. who died in 30 Hen. 8 (1538), leaving three daughters and coheiresses, who married sir Robert Lee (ancestor of the earls of Lichfield), Anthony Cooke, esq. (of Giddy-hall, Essex,) and Stephen Cope, gent.[r] (of Bedhampton, Hampshire.) In Aug. 23 Eliz. (1581), Anthony Cooke, of Bedfords and Giddy-hall, Essex, esq. sold two third parts of a messuage called "the Spittle," and of three closes thereto belonging, to Anthony Clarkson, of Banbury,[s] who in February following settled them on himself for life, remainder to Anthony Cope in fee;[s] in whom the other third part, it will be recollected, was already vested by descent from his father, Edward Cope, esq. who had probably purchased from his Hampshire relative. In May, 6 Jac. (1608), sir Anthony Cope,—for he was then knighted,—conveyed the Spittle, with the little Spittle close, to Thomas Wheatley of Banbury, and in Oct. following the three Spittle closes, to his son Richard Cope, esq. of whom they were soon after purchased by the said Wheatley, who in 12 Jac. (1614), sold the whole Spittle estate to Robert Harris, of Hanwell, Oxfordshire, whose son and heir, the rev. Malachi Harris, D. D. alienated it in 1663 to Philip Holman, esq. of Warkworth.[s] The present proprietor is William Edward Tomline, of Riley Grove, Lincolnshire, esq. eldest son of the late bishop of Winchester.

THE MANOR HOUSE, once the residence of the Copes, is now reduced to a cottage, but in its mullioned windows and pointed gables may be seen some traces of its former consequence.

THE VILLAGE is skirted by the turnpike road from Daventry, about a mile and a half from Banbury, and, together with the tenements recently erected at the bridge foot leading into Banbury, contains 88 houses.

IMPROPRIATE RECTORY. The tithes of corn, grain, hay, lambs, and all other tithes in Grimsbury, Nethercote, and Overthorp, in the county of Northampton, with a messuage and two yard-lands in Grimsbury, late parcel of the possessions of John (Dudley) earl of Warwick (and duke of Northumberland), and formerly parcel of the bishopric of Lincoln, were granted (int. al.) 9 Feb. 30 Eliz. (1587-8), to Edmund Downing and Miles Dodding, of London, gents.[t] who transferred them the next day to Richard Merrick, of Banbury, and Edward Shugborough (Shuckburgh), of Broughton, Oxfordshire, gent.[s] and, on a partition between the parties in the following year, the tithes were assigned to Merrick, and the messuage, with the yardlands and the tithes of the same, to Shugborough.[s] In May 34 Eliz. (1592) Richard Merrick, of South Newton, Oxfordshire, gent. sold the tithes for £400 to Richard Chetwode, of Warkworth, esq.[v] from whom they descended by the same title as his manor of WARKWORTH, to Francis Eyre, esq. to whom the commissioners of inclosure made an allotment of land in lieu of "that part of the Parsonage Impropriate of Warkworth aforesaid which is called Banbury Tything," and which included all tithes "except the tithes of Bushes and Thorns," for which the commissioners allotted 4 a. 1 r. 18 p. of land to the vicar of Banbury.

CHANTRY. The commissioners, prior to the suppression of chantries, in 2 Edw. 6 (1548), returned a chantry in Grimsbury, parcel of our Lady's guild of Banbury, endowed with lands worth £3. 6s. 8d. yearly, but by whom given, or to what intent or purpose, was not known.[u]

HUSCOTE has been already noticed under Chacomb,* where, through misinformation, the proprietor of this farm is described as John Guest, esq. instead of Josiah Gist, esq.

WHITFIELD,

in domesday Witefelle, and in early records Wytefelde, contains about 1905 acres, including about 845 acres, or nearly two thirds, of that portion of Whittlebury forest called Hasleborough Walk. About 690 acres belong to the provost and fellows of Worcester college, Oxford, lords of the manor; about 520 acres in Hasleborough walk to his Majesty in right of the crown; about 200 acres to Mr. Thomas French; about 120 acres to the rev. Dr. Causton, of Turweston, Buckinghamshire; and nearly 90 acres to the rector in right of his church. The open field lands of Whitfield were inclosed by act of parliament 36 Geo. 3 (1796); and Hasleborough Walk was inclosed and disafforested by act of parliament 5 Geo. 4 (1825). The parish is bounded on the north by Radston; east by Siresham and Whittlebury forest; and south-east by Bittlesden, in Buckinghamshire; south by Turweston, in Buckinghamshire; and west by Brackley. The soil is principally a strong loam.

Manorial History. Terra Regis or Antient Demesne. The domesday survey of "Witefelle," or Whitfield has been already given under the royal manor of Sutton,† of which it was then a member, but it was granted out within the ensuing century; Gilbert de Monte being certified in the hydarium of Hen. 2 to have two hides and two virgates in Wytefeld,[y] corresponding, or nearly so, to the domesday measurement. In the latinised orthography of the grants of Bittlesden abbey and Brackley hospital, to both which foundations they were liberal benefactors, the name of this family is converted into Montibus. Gilbert de Monte or Montibus, grandson of the above, in the inquisition of the services of the tenants in capite, 12 Joh. (1210), answered for £15 yearly in land by unknown service,[z] but was subsequently found to hold by sergeanty.[a] His son, of the same name, in 11 Hen. 3 (1227), owed 10 marks (£6. 13s. 4d.) for having seisin of the lands of Gilbert his father in Whitfield, held of the king in capite.[b] Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Humphrey de Monte, who, in the Testa de Nevill about 19 Hen. 3 (1235), was certified to hold the manor of Whitefeld by sergeanty of providing a blood hound [bracketu'] for the king whenever he should personally come to hunt the hart and the hind, the buck and the doe.[c] Under the head of sergeanties rented by Robert Passelewe, temp. Hen. 3, in another part of the same record, it is stated that the sergeanty of Humphrey de Monte, in Witfeld, by which he ought to train a blood hound at the mandate of the king, had been in part alienated. Richard Foliot held thereof five virgates of land, and the third part of a mill worth 5 marks (£2. 6s. 8d.) yearly; and Alicia, daughter of Geoffrey, one virgate worth 1 mark yearly, making together £4, but Humphrey made an agreement with the said tenants for 40s. yearly; so that they answered to him for their part accordingly, and he engaged to render the service of the fourth of a fee for his part, which was not alienated. Philip de Wytefeld held of the same sergeanty four virgates and a half of land, a cottage and pasture for fifty sheep and two oxen worth, 64s. 4d. yearly; and he made an agreement for 21s. yearly, and engaged to render the service of the twelfth part of a fee. The hospitallers of Brackley held one hundred and sixty acres of land, a meadow, a mill and a wood, worth 102s. yearly; and they made an agreement for 46s. yearly, and rendered to Aubrey, the forester of Whittlebury, 16s. yearly, and to William de Gretworth 16s. the accustomed rent for the said tenement.[d] In the account of payments immediately succeeding the foregoing list some slight variations may be noticed. The sergeanty of Humphrey Monte is described as keeping a blood hound instead of training it. The Foliot lands are said to have been formerly held by Richard Foliot. The hospitallers of Brackley are converted into the prior of the hospital of Brackley, and Aubrey the forester is called Aubrey de Burton. And in addition, the following alienation is recorded. Walter Terri, one virgate of land of the said sergeanty, which he held for 4s. 5d. yearly, and engaged to render the service of the fiftieth part of a fee.[e] In the enumeration of sergeanties commuted for knight's service, about 26 Hen. 3 (1242), Humphrey de Monte stands charged for the fourth of a fee;[f] and in 38 Hen. 3 (1254), Humphrey de Monte—or rather the late Humphrey, for his widow had an assignment of dower four years before—owed 10s. for the fourth of a fee of his sergeanty in Whitfield, as in roll 35 of sergeanty; Philip de Whitfield 40d. for the twelfth of a fee; and Walter de

Terri 9½d. for the fiftieth part of a fee.[g] Peter de Monte or Montibus, son of Humphrey, by an inquisition ad quod dammum, in 9 Edw. 2 (1315), had licence to grant the manor of Whitfield to Theobald de Bray and Sarah his wife, on condition of re-enfeoffing the said Peter and Isabella his wife for life, remainder to the said Theobald in fee. The jury presented, that the lord of this manor had the profits of courts with two views of frank pledge worth 2s. yearly, a free fishery worth 2s. yearly, pannage for his swine in the king's wood of Haselborowe worth 12d. yearly, reasonable estovers there worth 4s. yearly, and acquittance from having his dogs expeditated, worth 3d. yearly; that the manor was worth £6. 1s. 2½d. yearly, out of which 40s. was paid to the king for lands and tenements formerly alienated from the sergeanty of the manor; and that the manor was held of the king in capite by the service of taking a blood hound to the forest of Whittlewood or Whittlebury for the use of the king whenever he hunted there in person.[h]

Nicholas de Tolthorp and Sarah his wife were summoned by writ of quo warranto in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), to shew by what right they claimed view of frank pledge in their manor of Whitefeld, of all the tenants of the master of the hospital of St. John the Baptist of Brackley, and of the abbot of Bittlesden, with correction of assize of bread and beer, and weyf; when they pleaded prescription, and reciting the feoffment from Peter de Monte to Theobald de Bray, the former husband of the said Sarah who now holds for life, with reversion to Isabel, daughter and heiress of the said Theobald and wife of Gilbert Imworth, without whom she was unable to answer, a day was given when all the parties came into court; but it appearing that they punished offenders against the assize by amerciament of 12d. instead of the legal punishment of pillory and tumbril, the view was taken into the king's hands but restored again for a fine of half a mark.[i]

Sir Gilbert de Imworth died in Nov. 35 Edw. 3 (1361), seised of the manors of Whitfield and Great Oakley, leaving Thomas Imworth his son and heir, aged twenty-six years,[k] who occurs in 19 Ric. 2 (1395),[l] but was dead in 1 Hen. 4 (1400),[m] having enfeoffed Thomas Lancaster, of Bittlesden, Buckinghamshire, John Forester, of Whitfield, and John Celer, vicar of Whitfield, in his manors of Whitfield[n] and Great Oakley.[m]

Richard Osborn, esq.* and John Tudenham, gent. and having survived them both, died in 16 Hen. 8 (1524), seised of this manor, leaving Thomas Osborn, esq. her son and heir, aged thirty-two years,[u] in whose descendants it cannot be traced further than his grandson.

After an hiatus of nearly a century, this manor is found in the possession of that branch of the noble family of Spencer which was seated at Yarnton in Oxfordshire. 'In the tenth year of Charles I.[x] it was in the hands of sir William Spencer, Baronet. This gentleman, in the eyre that was then held for the forest of Whittlewood, claimed to have view of frank pledge within the manor of Whitfield, waived goods and chattels, estovers in Haselborow wood, common of pasture in the said forest, with feeding for his hogs exempt from pannage, and to have his dogs not expeditated.' His son, sir Thomas Spencer, 3d baronet, died in Mar. 1684-5, leaving four daughters and coheiresses, Jane, wife of Robert (Spencer), viscount Teviot in Scotland, Constance, wife of George Marwood, of Busby, Yorkshire, esq., Elizabeth, then wife of sir Samuel Gerrard, of Brafferton, Yorkshire, and Katherine, then wife of John Dormer, of Ascot, Oxfordshire, esq. who in Mar. 1687-8 sold this manor to Samuel Trist, of the Middle Temple, esq.[y]

Thomas Lister, esq. was a younger son of Thomas Lister, of Bawtry, Yorkshire, esq. by Barbara Hutton.[a] He was cup-bearer to queen Mary, and by his wife Katherine, eldest daughter of Sir William Glynne, of Bicester, Oxfordshire, bart.[b] had Barbara, his only daughter and heiress, who was married at Whitfield, 7 July, 1719, to Clobery Holte, esq.[c] In May 1720 Katherine Lister, widow of the said Thomas Lister, and Clobery Holte, esq. son and heir apparent of Sir Charles Holte, of Aston, near Birmingham, bart. and Barbara his wife, in consideration of a marriage had between the said Clobery and Barbara, and a settlement thereon made, conveyed the manor and advowson of Whitfield, and manor of Helmdon, to the said sir Charles; and in Dec. 1723 dame Anne Holte, widow of the said sir Charles, and the said Clobery, then sir Clobery Holte, bart. and Barbara his wife, sold them for £13,000 to the provost, fellows, and scholars of Worcester college, Oxford, the present proprietors.

Bittlesden Abbey, in Buckinghamshire, had a considerable estate in Whitfield; and in the cartulary of that monastery, the grants are preceded by the following general statement of the lands there, or rather of that portion of them which constituted what was sometimes termed "Parva Whitfield," of the fee of the earl of Leicester.

In "Whitfeld" were twenty virgates of land of three lords, of which five virgates belonged to Bittlesden.

Five virgates belonged to Emma de Insula (or Lisle), who was grandmother of Alan de Crancwell, of which the capital lord was Lucas de Quatermars.

The remaining ten virgates were given to Thomas de Armets (Armenters), in free marriage with Rues, or Roesia, daughter of Arfast de March, and younger sister of the mother of Ralph Barri, of Stanton (Buckinghamshire), who, with Robert his brother, claimed by inheritance before the earl of Leicester, against the monks of Bittlesden, two virgates of land in Whitfeld which Thomas de Armenters gave them; and against Henry and Geoffrey, sons of the said Thomas, who held the residue of the land, and in the earl's court surrendered all their right into the earl's hands as testified by deed, and all the land remained to the monks of the gift of the earl, the monks giving to Ralph Barri and Robert his brother 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.) and to Henry and Geoffrey his brother, one virgate of land in Whitfeld, of those ten virgates, the chief lord of which was Arnulf de M'ch [March], who had four daughters and heiresses, the eldest of whom married Roger Foliott, and from whom, with the others, the monks had confirmation.[a]

The five virgates belonging to Bittlesden were doubtless those which were included with Siresham on the foundation of the abbey.[e] Emma de Lisle and her son Robert gave all the land of their fee at Whitfeld to the monks of Bittlesden, at a fee farm rent of one mark yearly to be paid at Cranwell[f] (in Lincolnshire). In the confirmation charter of Robert, bishop of Lincoln, she is called Emma de Whitfeld;[g] and her grandson stiled Alan de Cranwell in the above memorandum[d] confirmed by the name of Alan de Armenters, son of Robert de Armenters, the donation which his grandmother Emma de Lisle made of all her land, viz. five virgates in Whitfield.[h] The grant was confirmed also by Lucas de Quatermars and Adam his son,[h] the lords of the fee.

Thomas de Whitfeld, in the confirmation charter of Robert, bishop of Lincoln,[g] is evidently the same person as Thomas de Armenters, whose grant was contested by Barri.[d] The leading circumstances are given in the above narrative, but other particulars not undeserving of notice, may be gleaned from the deeds. The charter of Robert earl of Leicester, which recites the surrender from Barri and Armenters in his court at Leicester, and his confirmation of the lands to the abbey, being witnessed by the countess Petronilla, proves him to have been Robert Blanchmain, the 2d earl, and the attestations of Thurstan, abbot of Garendon, and William abbot of Leicester,[i] fix the date between 23 Hen. 2 (1177), and 32 Hen. 2 (1186). An imperfect pedigree of the Barrys has been introduced under Great Billing.† Besides the 20 marks mentioned in the agreement with the monks,[i] they engaged with Ralph Barri if he should wish to change his life to receive him into their monastery, and if he died a secular, to do the same for him as for one of the monks of their house.[k] Henry de Armenters, with the assent of his brother Geoffrey, gave the site of the mill of his inheritance, and a croft with a small meadow, on condition of the monks rendering to him and his heirs yearly five quarters of dry and clean wheat, according to the measure at Brackley, in the year when King Henry (II.) gave his daughter in Apulia.[l] Joan, the king's third daughter, married William king of Sicily and duke of Apulia in 22 Hen. 2 (1176). Thomas, son of Henry de Armenters, gave all his land in "Parva Whitfelde," reserving the five quarters of wheat for the service of the mill, and 7s. yearly, for which grant and quit claim the monks gave him three virgates of land at Siresham in exchange;[l] and by another deed, in the year when John was crowned king of England, he sold to the monks for 10s. the land between the enclosure of his court and the mill.[m] His son Robert de Armenters in 46 Hen. 3 (1262), for 60s. released to Roger abbot of Bittlesden the reserved rent of 7s. yearly; and by another deed released the corn rent.[s] Of the confirmatory charters from the representatives of Arnulf de March, the one from Roger Foliot and Raes or Roesia his wife, and William and Robert his heirs, was made at Brackley in the presence of their lord, Robert earl of Leicester, and extends to all the land of Thomas de Whitfield and Raes his wife, and all the service and rights of Roger in Whitfield, for which the monks gave to him 7 marks (£4. 13s. 4d.) to his wife 2s. and to his son William a palfrey.[t] The other three are evidently subsequent to Barri's claim, as they refer to Ralph de Barri and Henry de Armenters as the donors, and are from John Flandrensis, son of Matilda, eldest daughter of Arnulf;[o] Alan, son of Philip and Christiana his wife, daughter of Agatha, daughter of Arnulf;[o] and Roger de Bray, Margery his wife, and Milo, Roger, Robert, Richard, and William, his sons;[p] with another from Margery in her widowhood, in which she describes herself as daughter of Isabel, daughter of Arnulf.[p] These circumstantial details are brought forward for the purpose of shewing the convertibility of surnames at this period, and the sedulous anxiety of the monks to strengthen their title by confirmations from every interested party.

Robert, rector of Morton, gave to the monks of Bittlesden a messuage and a mill and a virgate and half of land in Whitfield;[q] by another deed, in which he designates himself Robert "Clericus," son of Richard de Morton, he gave a capital messuage in Whitfield and the pasture between the said messuage and the mill called Oxehay, a virgate of land, two parts of another virgate, and of a mill, and the reversion of the third part, held in dower by the widow of Gilbert de Montibus, and free pasture for six oxen, two heifers, four cows, and one hundred sheep;[r] and by two other deeds gave his mill in Whitfield, and the multure or toll arising from the corn of Humphrey de Montibus, lord of the fee, and his heirs, and of the tenants of their fee, who were bound not to send their corn to any other mill.[s] Gilbert, son of Philip de Monte, gave to the monks the water which descended from his mill of Whitfield to the site of the mill which belonged to Henry de Armenters.[t] Humphry, son of Gilbert de Montibus, confirmed the donation which Robert "Clericus" made to the monks as above, and gave them his meadow called Humham, and licence to fish in all his water of Whitfield, except in his fish-ponds.[u] King Henry III. by a charter dated at "Geytington (Geddington, in this county) 29 June 1242, restored to abbot Philip and the monks of Bittlesden all the land, &c. in Whitfield which they had of the gift of Robert "Clericus" and Humphrey de Montibus, which he had taken into his hands because it had been alienated without licence.[x] By an agreement 9 Edw. I (1281) between Peter de Montibus and abbot William and the convent of Bittlesden, reciting a previous controversy, Peter quit claimed to the abbot and convent their possessions in Whitfield of the gift of Robert "Clericus," and which he had from Gilbert the uncle, and Humphry the father of Peter; and for this release the abbot gave Peter two messuages in Whitfield.[y] After the dissolution, part of the abbey lands here were included in the grant to sir Thomas Wriothesley in 32 Hen. 8 (1540)[z], and part in the grant to John Fox and Thomas Hall, gents. in 36 Hen. 8 (1544).[a]

Brackley Hospital had Kingshull manor in this parish, which has been already treated of under Siresham,† where it is locally situated. The prioress of Markyate (Hertfordshire) released to the master and brothers of Brackley hospital 4s. yearly, and 12s. yearly for tenements in Whitfield.[b] Henry de Armenters granted to them all the tithes of his land of Whitfield. Gilbert de Montibus gave them a virgate of land in Whitfield.[b] 'Gilbert, the son of Philip de Monte, gave them half a virgate, with pasture for one hundred and twenty sheep, and an annual rent of 6s. out of Kingshull towards the decoration of the church.'[c] Gilbert, son of Gilbert de Monte, gave them a virgate, a messuage, a meadow between two rivulets, and pasture for one hundred and twenty sheep. Humphry de Montibus, lord of Whitfield, gave them seventy acres, and seventeen acres and a half of his demesne.[b] Peter de Montibus confirmed the donations of his ancestors, and released from suit to his court the land which they had from Gilbert de Gretworth.[b] In 1 Ric. 3 (1484) these lands accompanied the other possessions of Brackley hospital to the president and fellows of Magdalen college, Oxford.

The Prior of St. John of Jerusalem, in plea to a quo warranto in 3 Edw. 3 (1329) claimed view of frank pledge in Blakesley of all his tenants (int. al.) at Whitfield.[d] In 36 Hen. 8 (1544) John Fox and Thomas Hall, gents. had a grant (int. al.) of lands in Whytefeld, late parcel of the possessions of St. John of Jerusalem.[e]

Sewardsley Priory Lands. A Muset or Leye of land in Whitfield, parcel of the late priory of Sewardesley, was granted (int. al.) in 14 Eliz. (1572) to John Mershe and Francis Greneham.[f]

The Manor House, says Bridges,[g] 'is a small neat building, and hath pretty gardens adjoining it;' but it is not now standing.

The Village is two miles from Brackley, near the turnpike Road to Towcester. In the time of Bridges there were[g] 'about five and twenty families.' By the census of 1801, it contained 48 houses and 217 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 49 houses and 248 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 58 houses and 297 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £30. 15s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £1590. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £313. 6s. at 6s. 6d. in the £. 'The wake is kept on the Sunday sevennight after Michaelmas day.'

The Advowson was given to the abbey of Eynsham in Oxfordshire by Gilbert de Monte in the reign of Hen. 2, and confirmed to abbot Godfrey by Savaricus, archdeacon of Northampton,[h] who resigned this archdeaconry for the bishopric of Bath and Wells in 4 Ric. (1192). 'In 1284 (12 Edw. 1) the right of presentation was claimed by Peter de Montibus, lord of the manor, and decided in favour of the monks.' In 7 Edw. 2 (1313) the abbot and convent obtained a royal confirmation of the church of Whitfield, with licence to appropriate it.[k]

After the dissolution, the advowson continued many years in the crown, but was vested in sir Thomas Spencer in 1605, and has subsequently accompanied the manor down to the provost, fellows, and scholars of Worcester college, Oxford, the present patrons.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Brackley. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3),[l] and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1),[m] it was rated at 9 marks (£6) per ann.

Vicarage. This church was appropriated to the abbey of Eynsham by Hugh Wells, bishop of Lincoln, and a vicarage ordained,[n] which, at the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) was valued at 40s. per ann.[m] The vicarage was subsequently annulled, and united to the rectory, 'and appears to have been so from the year 1441.'

The Rectory was valued in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at £9. 5s. 7d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton.[o] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage presentative in the gift of sir Thomas Spencer of Yarnton, Oxfordshire; and that Mr. Richard Baldwin the incumbent supplied the cure, and received the profits, estimated at £50 yearly.[p] The rectory now consists of 43a. 2r. 10p. of land, allotted in lieu of glebe, and a corn rent in lieu of all the tithes of the open fields and old inclosures, awarded by the commissioners for inclosing Whitfield; and also 44a. 3r. 11p. of land, allotted by the commissioners for inclosing and disafforesting Hasleborough Walk, in lieu of all the tithes of that portion of the forest of Whittlewood, or Whittlebury, which is in the parish of Whitfield, except the tithes of the lands allotted to his Majesty. The parsonage-house stands in the village, south of the church.

Sir Thomas Syreston, chaplain, by Edmund Bonner, bishop of London, by grant from the abbot and convent of Eynsham, 5 June, 1540.
James Browke, presented by the king, and instituted 30 Nov. 1548, on the decease of the last incumbent. He resigned, and Henry Finche was instituted 7 Mar. 1575-6, on the presentation of the queen. He was buried here 6 June 1627,[q] when John Marston, A. M. was presented by Sir Thomas Spencer, bart. and Richard Branthwaite, esq. and instituted on the 15th of the same month.
Richard Baldwin occurs in 1647,[q] and was buried here 8 Jan. 1666-7.[q]
William Morehead, of New. Coll. Oxf. A. M. instit. 5 Apr. 1676, on the presentation of William Aris, yeoman. Anthony à Wood states that he obtained the rectory of Bucknell in Oxfordshire by favour of his college, and of Whitfield by the favour of sir Thomas Spencer. He wrote "Lachrymæ sive valedictio Scotiæ sub Discessum clariss. prudentiss. et pientiss. Gubernatoris D. Georgii Monachi in Anglia revocati," 1660. He died and was buried at Bucknell in Feb. 1691-2, and William Price, of All Souls Coll. Oxf. A. M. was inst. on the 18th of the same month, on the presentation of Christopher Temple, esq. and William Saunders, gent. He was also perpetual curate of Bittlesden, in Buckinghamshire. After retaining this rectory nearly sixty years, he died in 1749, when William Gower, of Worcester coll. Oxf. A. M. 1721, B. D. & D. D. 1739, was presented by the provost, fellows, and scholars of the college, and inst. 21 Sept. 1749. He was appointed provost in 1736, and by his will bequeathed £3500 Old South Sea Annuities, and the reversion of an estate at Bransford, near Worcester, for the general purposes of the college. On his decease, he was succeeded both in the provostship and rectory by William Sheffield, A.M. 1757, B.D. & D.D. 1778, who was inst. 25 Aug. 1777; on whose decease both the provostship and the rectory passed to Whittington Landon, A.M. 1782, B.D. 1790, D.D. 1795, who was inst. 13 Oct. 1795. He obtained the deanery of Exeter in 1813, which he holds with his provostship, but resigning this rectory William Baty, A.M. was inst. 31 May 1814.

The Register, in the time of Bridges, commenced in 1576;[r] the present register of baptisms begins in 1681, of marriages 1696, and of burials in 1768.

The Church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a small mean building, north of the village, consisting of a low tower, containing three bells, nave, north aisle, and chancel. Mr. Lister added pinnacles and vanes to the tower, and probably modernised the windows. The tower is 11 ft. 2 in. long, by 8 ft. 7 in. wide; the nave 42 ft. 10 in. by 12 ft. 7 in.; the aisle 17 ft. 10 in. by 12 ft. 10 in.; and the chancel 21 ft. 3 in. by 14 ft. 4 in. The font is circular. The interior has been recently paved and pewed.

Benefactions. (Vide p. 541.) Mrs. Leeson's bequest of 10s. yearly is distributed amongst poor widows.

Lister's Charity. Thomas Lister, esq. by indenture dated 3d Apr. 1708, vested in trustees a yearly rent-charge of £10 out of a messuage and three yard-lands in Whitfield, in trust, to permit the lord of the manor, and the rector and churchwardens of Whitfield for the time being, to distribute £2 yearly on Christmas day to poor inhabitants of the parish not receiving relief, and to apply the remaining £8 in apprenticing poor children of the parish. The trustees, when reduced to two, are directed to convey to two other persons not living above ten miles from the parish of Whitfield; and the lord of the manor and rector of Whitfield are, ex officio, trustees.

School. The sum of £115, made up of various donations, was invested in the purchase of an undivided fourth part of a close in Sulgrave, which was conveyed, 3 Aug. 1764, to trustees, in trust to permit the rector, churchwardens, and overseers, to employ the rents and profits towards the payment of a school-master for teaching the poor children of the parish to read, write, and cast accounts, and to buy books and clothes for them; and that the trustees, when reduced to two, should convey the premises to five or more parishioners of Whitfield, to be chosen by the minister, churchwardens, and overseers. The present rent is £9 per ann. £6 of which is paid to the scholmaster, and the residue is laid out alternately in the purchase of bibles, and of gowns for the children. The school is kept in a room belonging to the provost and fellows of Worcester college.

An allotment of 5a. 1r. 13p. was awarded by the commissioners of inclosure of Whitfield, in trust for the poor, in lieu partly of the right of cutting furze and thorns in the open fields, and partly in lieu of a small piece of land called Sweepman's Hook, which had been from ancient time appropriated to the poor. It is now let for £13 per ann. which is received by the churchwardens, and divided equally amongst the poor householders.

The commissioners for inclosing Haselborough Walk allotted three acres in trust for the poor of Whitfield, in lieu of the right of gathering broken wood on certain days of the week, in that part of the forest of Whittlebury which is within this parish.

GENERAL INDEX.

In compiling this index, the leading object has been to combine utility with systematic arrangement and compression; all personal names are not therefore indiscriminately included, and it has not been deemed necessary to introduce Christian names except in the biographical entries. The general references are restricted to those families whose pedigrees are, or will be inserted in the work, and to the present proprietors of manors and advowsons; but the epitaphs of every family are referred to, as they are frequently elucidatory of legal and genealogical inquiries. The incidental notices of each family follow the name; then the parish under which they are principally treated of; and the other parishes in which they have, or had possessions, succeed in alphabetical order. Those incumbents only are recorded who come within the denomination of authors.

The Letter (S) or (N) after a personal name denotes the individual to have been a Saxon or Norman proprietor.

In the local portion of the index, to facilitate research, the ecclesiastical entries are separately specified. Small capitals indicate the parishes and hamlets described in the present volume: as one uniform arrangement is adopted throughout, a detailed reference to the subjects would be superfluous, but the pages within which each place is comprised are first given, and the incidental notices follow in numerical order.
